STEAMER SUNK.

A Disaster on the Chattahoochee River.

No Knowing How Many Lives Were Lost—Floating on Cotton Bales.

FORT GAINES, GA., January 3.—While the steamer W. D. Chipley was trying to make her landing at Stark's Clay, ten miles north of this place on the Chattahoochee River last night between seven and eight o'clock, she struck on a protruding rock. A cry of alarm went up, and a moment later it was evident that the vessel was sinking. As she began to lurch the passengers, of whom there were about fifty on board, were overcome with terror, and jumped wildly into the water below. The night was dark, the rain pouring in torrents, and as the vessel sunk to the bottom the passengers clung to her timbers and wildly shrieked for help. While this state of affairs existed the Naiad came up, and after desperate work succeeded, as her officers supposed, in rescuing the whole crew. There were about three hundred bales of cotton on board. As these were swept off by the current washing over the deck many of the affrightened passengers clung to them as life-preservers and went floating down the river. The Naiad, guided in the darkness by the calls of human voices, picked up the unfortunates as best it could. When daylight came, however, it was made apparent that there was much loss of life. Up until to-night six bodies have been reported found at various points down the river, and as the passenger list was lost it can not be ascertained how many more may be gone. Two of the bodies recovered are white persons, four colored, one of the latter being Sam Alexander, a member of the crew. The scenes are described as appalling. After the Naiad had received the passengers from the sinking steamer, many of the cotton bales caught on fire and presented a strange spectacle as they went floating down the river. The Chipley was a new boat, having been but two years on the river, and belonged to the Merchants', Mechanics' and Planters' Line, of Columbus, W. S. Tilman, President. She cost $20,000 and was insured for $5,000. The total loss is about $45,000. Captain O. M. Sparks was the master. The scene of the disaster is one of the most dangerous points on the Chattahoochee, the terrible casualty of the Wyllie having occurred there three years ago, and several others previously.

DIABOLICAL INCENDIARIES,

Who Made a Desperate Effort to Destroy the Town of Tarentum, Pa.

TARENTUM, PA., January 3.—A desperate attempt to burn down the town was made at an early hour this morning. The fire was first discovered in Essler's livery stable, on Gaines street. It soon spread to Rne & Jones' grocery store, Zimmermann's shoe store and Dr. Voizer's residence, and all were destroyed. The villains had taken every precaution to make destruction sure. They had cut the ropes of the two alarm bells and broken the principal pumps in the village and carried off the fire-buckets and tubs. The cries of "Fire!" aroused a lad named William Dibel, an employe of the planing-mill, upon which was a large bell. He ran to the mill, and on finding the bell-rope cut, climbed to the roof and sounded an alarm by striking the bell with a hammer. This awakened the entire community, who turned out en masse and soon extinguished the flames. The loss is $9,000; partially covered by insurance. About two weeks ago there was an attempt to burn the village down. Six or seven large buildings were destroyed, entailing a loss of over $50,000.

Chased by Ravenous Wolves in Illinois.

GALENA, ILL., January 3.—A thrilling adventure was that Mr. John Collison, of Mifflin, Wis., had two nights ago. While he was returning home from a neighbor's house, some distance off, on foot, he was attacked by a pack of wolves, which are unusually numerous in that locality during the winter. The wild beasts surrounded Mr. Collison and would undoubtedly have devoured him had he not been armed with a trusty revolver, which he made good use of, killing two wolves and putting the rest to flight. During the encounter Collison was wounded on the hand by one of the ravenous beasts, which fastened its fangs in the flesh.

Burning of a New Orleans Hotel.

NEW ORLEANS, January 3.—The Southern Hotel, on the corner of Carondolet and Julia streets, was burned this morning. The inmates barely escaped with their lives, and lost all their personal effects. Loss $17,000.

The Kentucky Legislature Organized.

LOUISVILLE, December 30.—The Kentucky Legislature convened to-day at Frankfort, and elected the following officers: Speaker, Charles Offut, of Bourbon County; Clerk of the House, Green Kellar, of Nicholas County; Doorkeeper, Robert Tyler, of Gradis; Clerk of the Senate, Harry Glenn, of Carlisle.

The German Commercial World Uneasy.

BERLIN, January 1.—The German Trade Review says that the new year opens with a gloomy outlook, and that the commercial world is uneasy on account of the Government's project to monopolize the spirit trade.

REVOLUTION.

A Significant Speech at a Banquet in Honor of Signor Zorilla.

MADRID, January 1.—The Republicans are becoming troublesome in the south of Spain. A band of revolutionists recently tried to destroy the railroad bridge in the Cordenas pass of the Sierra Morena Mountains, which separate La Mancha from Andalusia. Fortunately, the wreckers were discovered while they were at work, and five of them were arrested. They had cut through the underpinning of the bridge, and the next train which attempted to cross would have been wrecked if the plot had not been discovered. As it was, the damage was repaired just in time to save a heavily-loaded passenger train from the North. The train contained a number of Southern members of the Cortes, who were returning from Madrid. It is supposed that the outrage was attempted with the object of killing those Senators and Deputies, most of whom are Royalists. At Ciudad Real, a few miles north of the scene of this outrage, a number of persons are said to be imprisoned on suspicion of conspiring to make a revolutionary rising. At a banquet given by Republicans in honor of Senor Zorilla the speakers representing the majority of those present urged a revolution against the Government. A minority, headed by Senor Salmeron, an eminent Republican leader, protested against violence, which, they declared, would be harmful to the party's interests. They strongly urged that help be sought from the Moderates.

THE DEAD ALIVE.

Extraordinary Case of Suspended Animation and Resuscitation.

GALENA, ILL., December 31.—John F. Munger, a well-known citizen of Platteville, Wis., has suffered greatly from rheumatism in the feet. Two days ago, with the hope of relieving the pain, he bathed his feet freely with tincture of aconite, and then thrust them into a pail of hot water. A tingling sensation followed, the pulse weakened, the skin became moist and clammy, and violent vomiting, and retching ensued. A doctor was called, but on his arrival found Mr. Munger apparently dead. The heart seemed to have stopped beating, and the doctor, with other medical men who were summoned, decided that Munger had died from aconite poisoning, having absorbed the drug through his feet. An undertaker set about preparing the body for burial, when the doctor, as an experiment injected with a hypodermic syringe a mixture of brandy and digitalis near the heart. In a few minutes the supposed dead man began to gasp, and there was a faint sound of beating over the heart. More hypodermics were given, the death pallor was succeeded by a reddish glow, the muscles relaxed, perspiration broke out, and Mr. Munger slowly returned to life. He is now entirely out of danger. The doctors consider his resuscitation most remarkable.

POISONOUS CAT BITES.

A Little Boy Dies from the Effects, and His Sister Not Expected to Live.

LONG LAKE, N. Y., January 1.—About two years ago a little son and daughter of Wm. Shaw, of this place, were both bitten by a cat, while the animal was suffering from fits. No attention was given the matter at the time, as the bites were not deemed dangerous. About two months ago the boy died, and the attending physician said that there were symptoms of poison. A few days ago the little girl was taken very ill with what is considered to be a severe case of hydrophobia. She makes similar motions as her deceased brother, and endeavors to bite her attendants, and it is now believed that the boy died of hydrophobia, from the effects of the cat's bite. The doctor gives this as his opinion. There are very slight hopes of the child's recovery, but if she should recover sufficiently the people here think that she would make a very interesting subject for Pasteur, who has not hitherto had any patients suffering from the bites of rabid cats.

DEADLY TRICHINOSIS.

A Whole Family in Illinois Carried Away Before Its Nature Was Discovered.

STREATOR, ILL., January 1.—Two weeks ago the family of August Feldt seemed to be suffering from some strange disease. The family had eaten heartily of pork, in which the doctor found unmistakable evidence of trichinosis. A week later one of the children died, and the following day another. The mother was then prostrated, and in a few days she died. During this time several doctors were called in, but could do nothing toward checking the disease. On Monday last a girl of twelve years died, and the father now lies beyond all hope of recovery. Mr. Feldt purchased a quantity of pork and had it salted down. The children, he said, had been in the habit of going to the barrel and eating of the meat, and he had permitted them to do so, not realizing that there might be anything wrong. The house in which the Feldt family lives is wretchedly filthy, and has probably aided the trichinosis in its dreadful work.

Army and Navy Signals.

WASHINGTON, January 3.—The committee selected by the Secretaries of War and the Navy, consisting of General Hazen, of the army, and Lieutenant Reeder and Commander Hoff of the navy, to report on a more desirable code of signals for the service of the United States, has held several meetings the past week. It was agreed to procure the different codes now used by the different Governments of the world, and to instruct a certain number of the men at Fort Mier in the use of each of them. When sufficient time has elapsed the committee will hold a sort of competitive examination, to ascertain which Power, in their estimation, has the best system. It will then be the duty of the three officers to endeavor to devise one better than that selected at the trial. Their report will be submitted to the Secretaries, who in turn will submit it to Congress for action. By this course it is hoped that a simplified and improved code of signals will be produced, to be used in both naval and military services.

Foreign News.

LONDON, January 3.—Six hundred Arabs were killed in the recent battle with the English. They are in flight towards Dongola. A number of fanatics succeeded in penetrating Suakim, attacking the soldiers in the streets, a furious fight following, in which a number of the English were killed. The twenty-fifth anniversary of Emperor William's accession to the Prussian throne was quietly celebrated. The funeral of a Fenian named Buckley, at Cork, was made the occasion of a political demonstration. Prince Alexander is said to have asked the Czar to reinstate the Russian officers in his army, to help reorganize it, as he feels certain Servia will resume hostilities.

Former Chicago Millionaire Drowned.

CHICAGO, January 3.—Chas. H. Curtis, one of the oldest residents of Chicago, and a wealthy and well known business man, was found drowned in the lake this morning. Circumstances point to suicide, as Mr. Curtis has been for some time in financial distress, and poor health. It is said that the residue of his once vast fortune, amounting a few years ago to $3,000,000, found its way last summer into the famous Cheltenham Beach, or South End scheme, near South Chicago. Mr. Curtis' relatives, however, are at a loss to form any theory in regard to his tragic end.

Found Assassinated.

GRANTVILLE, W. VA., January 3.—Israel Kepliuger started from his home on Friday morning for a few hours' hunting. Not returning within a reasonable time, a searching party was organized and sent out, and yesterday the missing man was found with a bullet in his brain and another through the hand. He had been assassinated by some one, as yet unknown.

Wife-Murderer Sentenced.

BUFFALO, N. Y., December 31.—Charles Hermann, the wife-murderer, was sentenced to be hanged on February 12. No new trial will be asked for, but an effort will be made to obtain a commutation of the sentence to imprisonment for life.

MEXICAN UPRISING.

American Troops Ordered to the River, and Will Drive Out Disturbers at Mier.

LAREDO, TEX., December 30.—A Sergeant of the U. S. Army stationed at Ringgold Barracks, some sixty miles down the Rio Grande from this place, arrived here to-night and reports that a general uprising is taking place in all the small Mexican towns along the river between here and Brownsville. Major Kellogg, commanding the U. S. troops at the above mentioned post, and forces are now en route to Roma, a small city on the American side, where over three hundred men, mostly from Mexico, are in arms, and express their intentions of taking the city of Mier. They have an abundance of ammunition, and are of the desperado and border-ruffian class. Major Kellogg proposes to disperse them, or force them to leave American territory, in order to prevent a breach of the neutrality laws between the two Republics. The movement originated among a few dissatisfied politicians who were defeated in the recent city elections in Mexico. Mexican troops are now being sent from Monterey to Saltillo to reinforce those already stationed in the cities of the State of Tamaulipas, where the next outbreak is daily expected.

A REMARKABLE AFFAIR.

Violent Explosion of a Coffin After Having Been Closed Twelve Years—Its Occupant Well Preserved.

GREENVILLE, S. C., December 30.—Details were received to-night of a most remarkable occurrence in Yorkville, this State. In 1873 James A. Watson, whose family then resided in Yorkville, lost a child, aged four years, by death. At that time Watson was living in Baltimore, a teacher in the Bryant Sadler Commercial College, and he could not conveniently leave his business to attend the funeral, and in his absence only a temporary burial was given the body, awaiting his return home to secure a permanent burial lot in the cemetery. Yesterday he went into the cemetery to remove his lot. The burial case, a metallic casket, was raised from the grave, and a natural desire to look upon the face of the child which died and was buried in the father's absence, prompted Mr. Watson to ask for the removal of the lid covering of a glass panel over the face. Just as the undertaker was about to remove the cover, a loud explosion occurred, shattering the glass, which was one-quarter inch thick, into numberless fragments, several striking Mr. Watson in the face, cutting him severely. One piece struck the bridge of his nose, cutting entirely through it. The casket had been out of the ground several minutes when the explosion occurred. The report of the explosion was equal to that of a dynamite cartridge, and was noticed by persons on Main street, more than a quarter of a mile distant. The face of the child was in excellent preservation, as were also its burial clothes, and a wreath of flowers on its breast seemed to be nearly as fresh as when buried, twelve and a half years ago.

COINS OF THE WORLD.

Reduced Valuations for Those Fixed a Year ago.

WASHINGTON, December 30.—Dr. James P. Kimball, the Director of the Mint, has estimated the value of the standard coins of the various nations of the world to be proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury on the first of January, 1886. The value of the gold coin in circulation is fixed by comparing the amount of pure gold in such coins with the amount in the gold dollar of the United States. In countries having the double standard, the silver coins are given the same valuation as the gold coins of the same unit. The value of silver coins of countries of the silver standard, is fixed at the value of the pure silver in such coins taken at the mean price of silver in the London market for the last three months of the year. The mean price of the silver for the last three months, compared with its price for the corresponding period in 1884, declined from $1 09.9 to $1 03.8 per fine ounce, a reduction of over six cents. This gives a reduced valuation to the following coins from that proclaimed January 1, 1885, namely: Florins of Austria, from 39.3c to 37.1c; bolivianos of Bolivia, from 79.5c to 75.1c; pezo of Ecuador, from 79.5c to 75.1c; rupee of India, from 37.8c to 35.7c; yen of Japan, from 85.8c to 81c; dollar of Mexico, from 86.4c to 81.6c; sol of Peru, from 79.5c to 75.1c; rouble of Russia, from 63.6c to 60.1c; mahbubo of Tripoli, from 71.7c to 67.7c; pezo of United States of Colombia, from 79.5c to 75.1c.

KILLED BY ELECTRICITY.

A Sudden and Terrible Fate Overtakes a Pair of Italian Organ Grinders.

NEW ORLEANS, December 31.—Vincent Mungella and Salvador Torcici, Italian organ grinders, were entertaining a large crowd with their music at the corner of St. Louis and Charles street last night. While Torcici was grinding out the music Mangelin waited by his side. He was leaning against the pole of the Louisiana Electric Light at the corner when suddenly a flash of light was seen to descend the pole. He uttered one scream and fell forward. Torcici caught his friend as he fell, and he too was knocked down. When the two men were picked up it was found that Mungella was dead, killed by a stroke of electricity, and that Torcici's head was burned to a crisp by the same fluid. A strange feature of the case is that the Louisiana Electric Light has no power as yet, and it does not commence until next Monday. It is thought the wire of another Electric Light Company must have crossed its lines. The electricity ran down the crane of the line on the hoisting wire, and it being a damp night, the circuit was grounded. Mangelin was unfortunately within the circuit and killed by the electricity, and Torcici, when he came to rescue, was struck by the same force.

Cattle Swindle.

KEYSER, W. VA., January 3.—Wm. Itsfter, of this place, has succeeded in swindling a large number of farmers and cattle dealers out of considerable sums of money by buying stock and giving worthless checks on the National Bank of Piedmont, W. Va. John Day, of Grant County, is out $1,000, Frederick Boud $1,200, and quite a number of others from $200 up. The stock was shipped East as fast as bought, and sold by a confederate. The total loss is quite large.

Landlord Mellen in Mexico.

BOSTON, January 1.—Andrew L. Mellen, of Baltimore, for whose alleged implication in the Mellen Coolidge murder conspiracy he is wanted by Boston officers is in Yap-Chico, a small town about five miles from Monterey, Mexico, and is doing business there with Jules A. Randle, on what is known as the Hot Springs property. He can not be extradited.

An Egg Within an Egg.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., January 2.—A gentleman from Brookfield, a station down the "Big Four," came to the city this morning with a curiosity in the shape of a very large hen's egg, inside of which, as was discovered, where the shell was partly broken off, was another egg of average size, with a well-hardened shell.

The New Census of Charleston, S. C.

CHARLESTON, S. C., December 30.—The census of Charleston City, completed today, shows a total population of 60,145 against 49,984 in 1880, an increase of over twenty per cent. The white population is 27,605, and the colored 32,540. The colored surplus consists mainly of children.

The President of Peru.

NEW YORK, December 30.—President Pierola, of Peru, arrived in New York this morning from Paris, where his family is residing. His return is the result of the defeat of Iglesias by Caceres, and the wresting of the Government from his hands. Senor Pierola will sail to-morrow for Peru, and as at present there is only a provisional government there, it is not unlikely that he may again secure the Presidency.

Two Colored Incendiaries Lynched.

MACON, MISS., December 30.—Near Crawford, last Monday, a mob of citizens took Thomas Lyde and Thomas Sharp, both colored, from the jail and hanged them. They were caught setting fire to some cotton

BAD WEATHER.

Iowans Experience the Delights of a Blizzard.

Wind, Snow, Rain, Hail and a General Dampness Pervading the Western Country.

CHICAGO, January 4.—The severe snow and sleet-storm which has been raging throughout the Northwest since Saturday, has seriously interfered with the telegraph wires in all directions. All lines west of here are down, and communication with the East is very uncertain. Dispatches received from Sioux City, Iowa, last night, reported a blizzard there. It had been snowing and blowing steadily since Saturday. There was already a foot of snow on the ground, and no signs of the storm abating. Des Moines and Omaha also reported a heavy snow-storm, and a St. Paul dispatch reported the same throughout Minnesota and Dakota.

LINCOLN, NEB., January 4.—The snowstorm ceased in this vicinity, but the winds continued, though with less velocity. It is the worst blockade ever known, and extends from the Missouri River to points one hundred and eighty miles west. Snow fences have been no protection, as the snow has drifted over them and cross cuts twenty feet deep. It will all have to be shoveled out, as it is too hard for plows. The Burlington main line has trains moving at a snail's pace, but all branches will be closed for ten days or longer. The temperature is mild, not going below 15° above zero. There is no danger of a famine in coal or other necessities at any point, unless another storm follows closely.

KANSAS CITY, MO., January 4.—A heavy snow-storm visited Western Kansas yesterday, extending as far west as New Mexico, and still continues. Two trains are reported blockaded at Dodge City and telegraph wires are interrupted. The storm began with sleet and is accompanied by wind, which is drifting the snow badly. A report from Colorado and New Mexico states that the storm is one of the most severe in several years. A light snow is falling here to-day. The temperature is mild. The overland trains are all delayed on account of the storm west of here. Trains were made up on the Santa Fe and Union Pacific, in Western Kansas, to bring in passengers from the blockaded through trains.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 4.—It has been raining here almost incessantly since Saturday night. Telegraphic communication with the East has been seriously interfered with. The wires on all routes are working hard, and quite a number have been prostrated by high winds.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., January 4.—A special to the Advertiser announces a big rise in Warrior River. It has risen sixty feet at Tuscaloosa. At Greensboro six and three-fourth inches of rain fell in eighteen hours. Nearly all the railroads in the State suffered some damage, but the delays were only for a few hours.

HERE'S AN IDEA.

A Plan to Take Up and Drop Passengers Without Stopping an Express Train.

ST. LOUIS, January 4.—A resident of this city has filed a caveat and applied for a patent for an invention by which passengers and freight may be taken on and discharged from railway trains without stopping, and if it proves what its model would indicate it will be an important factor in the rapid-transit problem. The working model shows the main track on a level and an elevated track in front of an elevated depot with inclined tracks leading to it. The idea is to start a train from one terminus and not to stop or slacken speed until it reaches the other. At the same time passengers may be taken up and discharged at any station. As a train reaches a station on the main track the rear car switches off and runs up the inclined plane to the elevated depot. At the same time another car runs down the other inclined plane, is caught by the other passing train, whirled into the main track and becomes part of the train. The passengers who desire to stop at the next station pass to the rear car, which is side-tracked as was the previous one, and another carload of passengers is taken on. By a contrivance which acts automatically, when a train gets within a certain distance of a depot it releases the car in waiting there, which starts down the inclined plane just as the last car of the train is switched off and starts up on the other side.

Indian Curiosities.

SPRINGFIELD, O., January 4.—An interesting find of Indian curiosities and skeletons was made by two young men of Pike Township, yesterday. A cake of the wonderful "paint stone," with which the Indians were accustomed to paint themselves for their battles, was found with the skeletons. This substance is made by skimming certain streams and springs which are permeated with iron, and putting these skimmings in a mold. It is then treated by some peculiar process known only to the Indians. It finally solidifies into a cake. When the Indians desired to use the coloring matter all that was necessary was to wet the edge of the cake of paint and it rubbed off like water-colors. Besides the cake of paint found, which appears of a black color, but is bright vermilion when wet, there are several skeletons, a stone hatchet and a lot of arrowheads.

School Children Injured.

DAWSON, PA., January 4.—About 10 o'clock this morning, during the prevalence of a heavy wind-storm, the roof, gable-ends and chimneys of the Tyrone school-house were blown down. A little child of D. S. Strickler was buried in the debris, and when extricated was found to be badly hurt about the head and face. A boy of David Newcomer had his skull fractured, and is in a precarious condition. Several more of the children attending school were more or less scratched and bruised, but none seriously hurt. The greatest excitement prevailed for a time, as it was reported many had been killed.

Pleuro-Pneumonia in Pennsylvania.

LANCASTER, PA., January 4.—Fresh cases of pleuro-pneumonia have been discovered on the farm of A. S. Frye, near Masonville, this county. Twenty-five animals out of a herd of one hundred are afflicted. The State authorities have been notified.

Clinching the British Claws on Burmah.

LONDON, January 4.—General Pendergast, commander of the British expedition in Burmah, has arrived with his forces at Bhamo, 150 miles north of Mandalay, and met with a cordial reception from the Burmese and Chinese merchants. A strong force of British troops will garrison Bhamo.

Eggs by the Pound.

Why is it that eggs are not sold by the pound instead of by the dozen? The present custom, absurd and ridiculous as it is, offers a premium on little hens and little eggs, and is a fraud of the first water on the purchaser. The eggs of the large breeds weigh nearly two pounds to the dozen, and of the small breeds but little over one. In the name of the lordly Asiatic, whose deep, rich crow awakes us every morning, we protest. The eggs from his harem are genuine, sixteen ounces to the pound, two pounds to the dozen—all wool and a yard wide, worth one hundred cents on the dollar; whilst the eggs of the little non-sitters, that fly over the highest fence and roost on the highest tree-tops, are a fraud and delusion. You have to eat two for one and pay twice for the proper amount of albumen. Let us do away with this flat egg business and buy and sell eggs by the pound.—Iowa Homestead.

KNOTT'S MESSAGE.

Suggestions by the Governor to the General Assembly.

A Synopsis of a Nine Column Document.—The Finances of the State—Charitable Institutions, etc.

Governor Knott's message is quite lengthy, making some nine or ten columns. The following are the most prominent topics discussed. He says:

"At no period in our history have our Federal relations been more harmonious or our domestic affairs more tranquil. All classes have quietly acquiesced in the political revolution accomplished through the regular and peaceful methods of the Constitution, by which the executive functions of the General Government have been transferred from the party under whose control they had been administered for twenty-four consecutive years."

The Governor reviews the financial condition of the State at length, and says the balance in the Treasury to the credit of the several funds, at the close of the fiscal year, ending June 30, 1884, was as follows:

General Expenditure fund deficit	$183,029 16
Sinking fund balance		$174,000 00
School fund balance		131,340 80
Total		$305,340 80
Deduct deficit in general expenditure fund		183,029 16
Net balance		$122,311 64
The receipts into the Treasury during the fiscal year, ending June 30, 1885, were		3,323,055 40
Total receipts from all sources, including balances		$3,445,367 16
Disbursements for the same period were		2,919,779 40
Leaving balance in Treasury June 30, 1885		$ 525,587 76

The above balance belongs to the several funds, as follows:

General expenditure fund	$ 35,812 30
Reserve to meet bank loan	200,000 00
Sinking fund	180,896 21
School fund	108,879 25
Total as above	$ 525,587 76

The Governor shows that the State can borrow no more money; he insists very wisely that the tax rate is high enough, and he argues that only two things can be done. First, we must have a more thorough system of assessments; and, next, the expenditures of the State must be most carefully scrutinized.

Concerning expenditures first, it is to be said that the most surprising items relate to criminal prosecutions and other expenses due to a prevalence of crime. Kentucky pays more for justice and gets less of it perhaps than any other State in the Union, Ohio always excepted. These claims, with the claims for the care of idiots ought to be fixed on the county, instead of on the State treasury. It is a measure of justice and one of economy. Many of the claims are fraudulent, and the way to prevent and punish fraud is to deprive it of local support or toleration. If these expenses were met by county taxation, the tax-payers would scrutinize the returns more carefully, and hold the officers to a stricter accountability.

The next remedial measure is a new and thoroughly consistent system of taxation. Our so-called system of assessment is a bundle of inconsistences and incongruities. It oppresses the upright and shields the sneaks. It is a reflection on our sense of justice and our fitness for self-government. A change is imperatively demanded—a change which will recover the 300,000 acres which have recently disappeared from our assessment rolls; which will provide a standard of value and apply it without fear or favor to every section of the State. There is nothing more vitally connected with the State's welfare than this, and the Legislature should waste no time in entering on the subject. Good government is impossible where a false system of assessment prevails; a system in which taxes one man with the same property higher than another and lets the third man escape.

The penitentiary, the Governor says, is in better condition than it has ever been within the memory of the present generation. Convicts are nowhere better fed, more comfortably clothed, or more carefully attended when sick. He reports that the work on the branch penitentiary at Eddyville is in a fair state of progress.

The State Guard consists at present of sixteen companies of infantry and one of artillery, all composed of most excellent material, fully equipped, thoroughly drilled, and ready for effective service whenever required.

Governor Knott recommend the enactment of a law providing in substance that any person who shall bring into, or keep within the State, any cattle, knowing them to be infected with pleuro-pneumonia, or who shall knowingly permit any such animal to go at large, or who shall transfer any such animal to an other such person by sale, gift or otherwise, knowing the same to be diseased, shall be deemed guilty of a felony.

The educational interests of the State are steadily improving, and the outlook is most encouraging. The Governor thinks that the limit of State taxation for educational purposes has been reached, yet the same rate of taxation would be cheerfully borne, though the assessments were increased 50 per cent, on the average, as they should be. What is needed now in Kentucky is an awakened local sentiment and pride which will supplement State aid by local taxation. This is essential to any thoroughly successful system of common schools. The benefits of local aid are ten fold greater than any which could possibly come from a favorable reply to the appeal to the National Government for assistance at this time. In this, as in the prosecution of criminals, we need a broader application of the principle of local self-government.

The whole number of the several defective classes accommodated at the Eastern, Western and Central Lunatic Asylums, the Kentucky Institution for the Education and Training of Feeble Minded Children, the Kentucky Institution for the Education of the Blind the Kentucky Institution for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb is 2,550, at a cost of $296,882 67. In addition to this sum there was paid during the year for the support of pauper idiots, support of lunatics in counties and for conveying lunatics to asylums, $80,298.70—making the total amount expended on account of public charities, $377,231.37.

There is complaint from each of the Lunatic Asylums of a want of sufficient accommodations to meet the constantly increasing demands of that unfortunate class, and a variety of suggestions looking to their being rendered more adequate to the beneficent purpose for which they are designed.

There have been an increase in the railway track mileage within the State in the last two years of 191 miles, with four new and important lines under contract and in process of construction, while others of equal importance are under consideration, with a fair prospect of being commenced within the near future. The railway property of the State subject to taxation is valued at $32,026,155, yielding a revenue of $108,135 32.

There were but six coal mines in operation in the State in 1870, with a total output of only 169,120 tons; there were in 1884 over seventy, with a product from these under the supervision of the Inspector alone of 1,550,000 tons, furnishing employment to from 4,000 to 4,500 persons, at wages aggregating annually $1,500,000, and with a net annual addition to the aggregate wealth of the Commonwealth of perhaps twice that sum. And yet we have scarcely made a beginning. Coal fields, underlaying thousands of square miles of our territory, and containing the best qualities of fuel for all purposes to be found on the globe, still remain untouched.

Proceedings of the Legislature.

FRANKFORT, December 30.—SENATE.—The Senate organized to-day by electing the following officers: Harry Glenn, Clerk; John Allison, Assistant Clerk; B. W. Jenkins, Sergeant-at-Arms; J. Fry Lawrence, Doorkeeper.

HOUSE.—The following officers were elected: Charles S. Offutt, Speaker; Green R. Kellar, Clerk; Willis Ringa, Assistant Clerk; Jacob Corbett, Sergeant-at-Arms; Robert Tyler, Door-keeper.

FRANKFORT, December 31.—The proceedings in the Legislature to-day were unimportant. Governor Knott's message read. One hundred dollars was voted the retiring Clerk of the House, Colonel Johnson, for services rendered in organizing the House. The Senate adjourned until Saturday, the House until Monday.

Miscellaneous Items.

AT Ludlow, Joseph Holland, proprietor of a saloon, shot and killed Thomas Crofton, blowing off the top of his head with a shotgun. The men had been drinking and fighting, and Crofton was attempting to shoot Holland with a revolver when he received his death wound.

LOUISVILLE courts divided 138 couples last year.

FOUR drunken, brawling policemen were fired from Louisville police force, a few days ago.

IN 1885 Louisville received 70,525 cattle, 326,807 hogs, 88,549 sheep, and 4,397 horses and mules, and shipped 13,506 cattle, 32,301 hogs, 53,158 sheep and 8,633 horses and mules.

WM. MCCLAIN and Bettie Anderson, 17, Mason County runaways, consolidated at Louisville.

THE other morning Charles N. Feltman, a boy of fifteen years was run over and instantly killed on the Southern Railroad track at Ludlow. He was a deaf mute, and went from the Danville Asylum, to spend the vacation with his parents in West Covington. At the time of the accident he was standing on the side-track, under the approach to the railroad bridge, watching a train passing over the river, and did not notice a train which turned a curve swiftly and ran him down, almost cutting his head off and mangling his body fearfully.

ANDREW T. COX, a wealthy plow-maker of Maysville, is supposed to have committed suicide by throwing himself into the Ohio River. He has recently suffered severe illness.

IN a saloon brawl at Louisville, New Year's Day, Anthony Sauer fatally stabbed his brother Henry, who had knocked him down.

AT Louisville, the other night, a very verdant highwayman was arrested. As the patrol wagon was returning from the Central Station whither they had taken a prisoner, this greeny rushed to the horses' head and ordered the driver to stand and deliver. Officer Mahar jumped from the wagon and speedily captured him. He gave his name as Abe Weaver. The prisoner was very much chagrined at the mistake he had made, and said that he deserved a full term for his thickheadedness.

IT is said to be certain that the present Legislature will be asked to make some broad changes in the tax-exemption laws.

THE Louisville and Nashville Railroad has brought suit against the Kentucky Central for $75,306.69.

MRS. ELIZABETH HAGAMAN died at her home, about ten miles east of Owingsville, aged one hundred and two years. Old age was the cause of her death. Mrs. Hagaman was a native of Ohio, but came to Kentucky many years ago.

THE police of Newport made 368 arrests during the past year.

DURING the past year 482 marriage licenses were issued in Covington.

THE following are the internal revenue receipts in the Sixth Covington Collection district during the month of December. 1885: List, $166.40; beer, $5,069; spirits, $343,621.30; tobacco, $18.585 53; cigars, $1,503.25; special taxes, $246.57; total, $369,190.95.

THE prisoners in the jail at Newport were treated to turkey and oysters on New Year's Day.

HON. W. L. SCOTT, of Erie, Pa., purchased from Treacy & Wilson the finest pair of carriage horses ever purchased at Lexington. Both are sixteen and a half hands high, one by Harrison Chief, dam by Indian Chief, and the other by King William, son of John Dillard, dam by Washington Denmark. Twenty-five hundred dollars had been refused for the team. They were shipped New Year's evening.

HERROLD'S woolen factory, Covington was damaged by fire a few days ago.

THE Kentucky Institute for Feeble Minded Children, at Frankfort, was established in 1860, and is one of the most important of our State institutions.

MEMBERS of the House of State Representatives are elected for two years, and must be twenty-four years of age and reside one year in the county, town, or city they represent.

THE last will of Chas. Clark was admitted to probate at Louisville, a few days ago. He gives all his personal estate to his sister, Emily Sommers, and this is very small. He provides that no priest or preacher shall be present at his funeral, and in commencing his will obliterated the name of God from its beginning and inserted "conscience," making it read in the name of conscience instead of God. It was a very peculiar freak, as Mr. Clark is said to have been a Christian.

AT Morehead, a few days ago, Mose Little shot John Marlow through the bowels killing him. The trouble arose over the sale of a yoke of cattle.

THE value of building improvements at Louisville during the past year will amount to more than $2,500,000.

MRS. LUCINDA HELM, widow of the late Governor John Helm, died a few days ago at Elizabethtown, after a long illness. She was the daughter of the eminent jurist, Ben Hardin, and the mother of Ben Hardin Helm, of Chicamauga fame.

THE number of business failures in Louisville during the year was sixty-four, amounting to $633,355. In 1884 the failures amounted to $2,574,098.

THE first railroad in the West was built from Lexington to Frankfort in 1832.

THE Kentucky House of Representatives has the sole power of impeachment.

A LOG rolled from a wagon at Shelbyville and crushed John Hall, a well to do farmer, to death.

AT Louisville John Masters, wife and three children were returning home in a buggy from a visit a few days ago. A boy threw a fire cracker under the horse which exploded and the horse became unmanageable. One of the lines broke and the animal darted up street at a fearful rate and finally the buggy collided with a telegraph pole throwing the occupants heavily to the ground. Mrs. Masters' head struck against the curbstone and she received a dangerous wound. A boy had his arm broken and his sister received severe bruises. The others escaped unhurt.

THE number of State Representatives is 100, and the number of Senators thirty-eight.

ANOTHER PROPOSED REFORM.

The Protection of Forests from Depredation to Be Accomplished—Previous Hasty Legislation Should Be Avoided.

The efforts which we have made to rouse the attention of the public to the importance of better methods for protecting the forests situated upon the public domain than are afforded by existing laws are beginning to bear fruit. The Commissioner of the General Land Office, in his report just made public, calls attention to the fact, which we have constantly pointed out, that "depredations upon public timber are universal, flagrant and limitless". He recommends the immediate withdrawal from sale or public entry of all the Government timber lands until proper surveys and estimates of their value can be prepared; that Congress may be able to finally determine what parts of this property shall be disposed of, what parts shall be retained as permanent National forests and under what rules the sales shall be made hereafter.

This is a wise and timely suggestion, which Congress will do well to adopt. There should not be another acre of our public forests disposed of under any circumstances whatever, and every effort should be made to protect them from trespass and injury until Congress has determined upon a general forest policy. This is a question which certainly can not be settled off-hand. The interests at stake are vast and varied, and we can not as a Nation afford to take any more legislative risks upon questions relating to the public domain without first obtaining all the information attainable in regard to it.

We have already the Timber Culture act as a good example of what hasty and unconsidered action by Congress in such matters will lead to. The Timber Culture act is, and always has been, a fraud, inasmuch as it has never succeeded in securing any of the results Congress intended it to secure. It was based upon observations made only over a small portion of the public domain, and in entire ignorance of the possibilities of tree growing in the great dry region which comprised at that time, and still comprises, the largest part of the public lands. It has cost the people of the United States millions of acres of land, without any return whatever, and it has ruined thousands of honest settlers in fruitless efforts to carry out its impracticable and impossible conditions. And all this has come to pass because a few enterprising men wanted to sell trees and tree seeds, and so, with the aid of some well-intentioned sentimentalists, got up this idea of giving land in return for planting trees in a region where, save in some exceptionally favored localities, it would be as easy to make a tree grow as to compel moisture from a cloudless sky. There may be, somewhere, thriving and valuable plantations which the Timber Culture act has brought into existence, but, if there are any such, they escape the vigilant attention of disinterested Eastern travelers.

Congress ought to repeal the Timber Culture act forthwith. It is disgraceful to longer allow honest settlers to be ruined in futile endeavors to obtain land in this way, and it is not less disgraceful to allow honest settlers and land speculators to avail themselves of the opportunities offered by this law to defraud the Government.

It will be wise with this example before our eyes to go slow in all future legislation for the management of the public domain, but in the meantime Mr. Sparks' recommendation for the immediate withdrawal of all forest property for sale or entry should be adopted. It is a good suggestion.—N. Y. Sun.

AMONG HIS NEIGHBORS.

Mr. Hendricks' Last Public Appearance Before His Home Friends.

The sudden death of Vice-President Hendricks will call vividly to the minds of many his appearance on the evening preceding his decease, at the grand reception given at the residence of State Treasurer Cooper.

While the gathering possessed no political significance whatever, from the very nature of things it contained many of the prominent Democrats of the State, and was a very brilliant occasion. It was at a late hour when the Vice-President and his wife appeared upon the scene. After expressing the courtesies of the evening, Mr. Hendricks paused for some moments on the threshold of the spacious reception rooms and contemplated the scene with a smile of unconcealed pleasure. A slight pallor was noticeable upon his countenance, yet he never looked or seemed in better spirits, and expressed himself as being in excellent health. As he stood there, with that polished grace and suavity of manner so characteristic of his nature, he presented a magnificent appearance, and never seemed grander or in fuller possession of all his powers. There stood before him many a true, tried friend, whose hand-grasp was more eloquent than words. Here and there passed many a frosted head of both parties, touched by time and the strain of many an anxious campaign. There were also present several of the younger politicians, who were wont to seek his counsel, and who always met with a kind and encouraging reception. The general eagerness of the throng to gain his presence was especially noticeable, and a long interval of hand-shaking followed. He has been received with enthusiasm and distinction wherever he has gone, but the home hearts—the hearts that touched the tenderest cord—how they crowded about him! It was his last meeting of friends on earth, his last farewell to them all; and now it would seem some wise Providence had drawn them together just once more to receive the strong magnetic cheer of this distinguished leader, and his neighbors and friends, regardless of political faith, who were present on that occasion will have a pleasant remembrance of the last time when he appeared in their social midst.

Mr. Hendricks, in conversation at the reception, was addressed by some one present with the remark that he looked so fresh and youthful that he must have discovered the fabled fountain of perpetual youth. "No," replied the Vice-President pleasantly, smiling in acknowledgement of the compliment. "I have not discovered the legendary fountain, but I am reminded of a little incident. I was engaged in trying a case in Ohio, when a very young man, before a Judge whose years, though nearly four-score, rested lightly upon him, and his youthful appearance was most remarkable. I spoke to him during the trial of my case concerning the disparity in his age and appearance, and asked him how he had managed to preserve his youthful vigor to such a remarkable degree. 'By not allowing myself to look at things through old eyes,' said he. 'I have endeavored to retain the enthusiasm of younger days in everything I have undertaken, and have retained my youth simply because I have never permitted myself to consider myself old.' So it has been with me. I have retained the enthusiasm of my younger days, and to this I attribute the appearance on which you compliment me."—Indianapolis Journal.

THE CUSTOMS SERIVCE.

Secretary Manning Making a Thorough Investigation of It—A New Law Promised.

Secretary Manning, in conversation respecting the proposed examination by the Senate into the working of the New York Custom-House, said that as the executive officer was primarily responsible for the execution of the tariff law, he should welcome the co-operation of a committee of the Senate, if one be created to that end. He said, however, that during all the present year an active inquiry into the condition of the custom-houses had been going on under the initiation and supervision of his immediate predecessor and himself and that the result of that inquiry is exhibited in a volume of 890 printed pages, which when examined by Senators, will disclose all the needed facts in regard to the custom-houses up to October last and save the work of an examining committee. If there has been defective administration since then, which had escaped his attention, he would be glad to know it. A resolution has been introduced in the House respecting an importation of glassware by L. Lehmann, which, he said, would be completely answered as soon as adopted, and sent to him. Any other specific inquiries addressed to the Department by either House would receive immediate and thorough attention. Mr. Manning remarked that he had, in his annual report to Congress, described his own ideal of a collector of customs at any of the great ports, and he had distinctly intimated his own conviction that a satisfactory execution of the present tariff law would severely test the best efforts of a staff of the best officers that the country could supply. The point of attack now, he said, is the Appraising Department and, for obvious reasons he should, he said, firmly and earnestly uphold the conscientious conduct of those officers against all comers. The collector at New York, he said, was unnecessarily and naturally assailed by selfish interests, because in case of disagreement between two reappraisers his decision is final. The Secretary had no doubt that the Senate and the country would discriminate between the existing tariff system, or rather the existing tariff chaos, created by law, and the officers who administer that system of chaos. It will be difficult enough to execute the existing law with the very best of subordinates, and it would be his effort to efficiently use such instruments as may be placed in his hands by the President and the Senate, to whom the law had wisely confided the selection of the chief customs officials.

The Civil-Service law has, Mr. Manning added, practically taken away from the Treasury Department the selection of such most important subordinates as examiners, inspectors, weighers, gaugers and measurers. The general appraisers, the appraisers and the assistant appraisers are nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. Manning said that he expects soon after the holidays to send to Congress a special report on one branch of the customs system and the project of a law, which, if adopted, will work therein a needed reform. The Secretary concluded by saying that it is vital to the public welfare that in custom-house matters there be concert of action, good understanding and pleasant forms between the Senate and the head of the Treasury Department, and added: "I shall do my utmost to promote this, and shall not unduly intrude my party affiliations and my party prejudices, which, I nevertheless hope and believe, are reasonably strong."—St. Louis Republican.

DEMOCRATIC BREVITIES.

——John A. Logan will stand on tiptoe for three years to come, with his head in a listening position and his ears alert, hoping to attract attention and finally to hear the Republican order to go to the front. He is likely to get very tired, but his endurance is great.—N. Y. Graphic.

——We can see nothing but good to issue from a careful and vigorous observance of the spirit of the President's letter, and we believe that all except a very few of his changes of office-holders, made before the legal expiration of their commissions, will bear all the tests to which they may be properly subjected.—N. Y. Evening Post.

——It is evident from Mr. Tilden's letter that as is his wont with all important public questions, he has given the subject of his letter a long and exhaustive study, for he writes of harbor defense like a master of a department in the science of war which has provoked more expert discussion than any other. But what is most remarkable is the attention which Congress and the people will pay to this voice from Greystone. A venerable man, now utterly removed from public life and all political ambitions, commands more respect when he speaks than would be accorded to the utterances on the subject he discusses of any other citizen—even the President of the United States himself.—N. Y. Sun.

——One of the most ridiculous performances in politics lately is the pretense of Senators Logan and Hawley that they knew all about the act of Congress passed last March, providing for the payment for property belonging to officers and enlisted men and destroyed in time of peace, but that Secretary Endicott is muddled about it. The law limits the liability for articles to the discretion of the Secretary of War. Secretary Endicott, an ex-Justice of the Supreme Bench of Massachusetts, says that this is a very loosely drawn law and advises Congress to more closely define the duties of the Secretary. Thereupon the two Senators, who served four years in the army, but who never have been lawyers, proceed to put a very low estimate upon the Secretary's legal ability.—Detroit Free Press.

THE Legislature organized and then adjourned until last Monday.

CONGRESS and the Kentucky Legislature both in session. God save the country.

The Justices had an extended session this week, and some dubbed it the Boone county legislature.

THE freezes and thaws so far this winter have not resulted in any serious damage to the small grain.

NEARLY all the rural roosters knocked of last week, and their portions of the world were left in darkness.

RISING SUN now has a fire engine several fire cisterns, an engine house and a company of fire laddies. 'Rah for the Sun.

HAVE you made a long list of resolves for the new year? If you have, stick to them like grim death to a nigger.

ON New Year's day the Louisville Commercial was a double number, replete with matter of especial interest to its city.

THE Legislature is getting down to business now, but we predict that at the expiration of sixty days it will not be ready to adjourn.

SUBSCRIBE for a paper out of the county and borrow your county paper—that's business—that's the way to encourage home enterprise.

IF the people of Owen miss their County Judge this week, they can find him by sending a searching party into the bushes in this county.

BOONE's representative was particularly tortunate in voting for the winning candidates for positions in the lower house of the Legislature.

Offut, of Bourbon, was elected speaker, and Keller, clerk of the lower house of the legislature. Offut is serving his second term as speaker and he is not yet thirty years old.

THERE is no United States Senator for the Legislature to elect this winter, so the most exciting contest during the session will be the election of Sam Major to the office of Public Printer.

IN this issuo we announce H. J. Foster as a candidate for reelection to the office of Superintendent of schools in this county. So far as we are advised he has discharged the duties of his office to the entire satisfaction of the public.

AN effort will be made in the Legislature to avoid the local legislation which usually consumes so much of the time. The programmo is precisely that suggested by the RECORDER, to wit: Entertain no bills which can be disposed of by the courts of the respective counties from which they come.

THE principal feature of the Governor's message is its length, in which respect it rivals that of the President. In the message are several suggestions that the Legislature should act upon. The Governor represents the penitentiary as being in the very best condition; endorses the State Board of Equalization; wants the revenue laws so revised as to produce a more correct valuation of property for assessments; recommends that the directors be vested with power to remove the Warden of the penitentiary, and suggests the enactment of very rigid laws for the prevention of pleuro-pneumonia in the State. All the charitable institutions belonging to the State are represented as in good condition.

The court of claims adjourned last evening after a two days session. The usual amount of claims were allowed. For Superintendent of the Poor-house there were two applicants, the present incumbent and Mr. Cooper. They each agreed to keep the institution for $150 a year. The bids being the same, their claims were submitted to a vote of the Justices, which resulted in Hall's election by a vote of 8 to 4. W. E. Pipe agreed to pay $5, Samuel Cowen $10 and Dudley Rouse $12 for the Receivership, Dudley Rouse wars awarded the contract for furnishing the supplies for the Poor-house the present year. The list of claims will be published shortly.

THE political atmosphere was somewhat agitated last monday, mostly, though, by the candidates for the district offices, Judge Drane, Colonel Montfort, candidates for Circuit Judge and Thos. R Gordon and Jno. S. Gaunt, candidates for Commonwealth's Attorney, being on the ground early and working until late. Directly after noon each of them made a speech in the Court-house in advocacy of his claims on the office to which he aspires. The speeches were listened to by a large crowd.

B. W. Adams, of the Union district, and who is contesting the race for County Clerk with M. T. Garnett, the present incumbent, was as busy as a bee all day and interviewed nearly every man in town. They are both strong men, and a hard race is predicted.

Conner Yeager, City Attorney of Florence, contemplates giving Attorney Tolin a heat for his office, and he was also on hand and scanning the political field.

Among other things political was a call upon Esquire Norman, of Union, to become a candidate for the office of County Judge, which was being circulated, and was signed by persons from every direction. The call appears in another column.

At a meeting of the Democratic Executive Committee of Boone county, held in the Court-house in Burlington, Ky., on Monday, December 7th, 1885, it was ordered.

That a Democratic primary election be held in the several voting precincts in Boone county, on the first Saturday in April 1886, between the hours of 8 o'clock a. m., and 7 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating Democratic candidates for Circuit Clerk, County Judge, County Clerk, County Attorney, Assessor, Jailer, County Superintendent, Surveyor and Coroner.

That the qualification of voters shall be the same as those specified in the call of the district committee, which is as follows: "That no one shall be eligible to vote at said election except those who are and will be entitled to a vote at the August election 1886, according to the laws of the State, and who are identified with the Democratic party, and who if voting at the November election, 1884, voted for the Democratic Electors for President and Vice-President."

That the Democratic voters of the county may have the privilege in voting for the county offices alone, to to express a first and second choice when there are more than two candidates for one office, so that before the board to count the votes the hindmost candidate shall be dropped and those votes cast for said hindmost candidate expressing a second choice, said second choice shall be counted as first choice for the candidate so named.

That the clerks of the several voting precincts together with the chairman of the Democratic County Committee shall constitute a Board to compare poll-books and count the vote, and shall, upon ascertaining who has received a majority of the votes cast for the respective offices, declare said candidate the regular Democratic nominee for said office. Said Board shall meet at the court-house in Burlington, at 1 o'clock the following Monday, April 5, 1886.

That the clerks appointed in the several precincts, prepare the poll-books to include both district and county candidates, and at the close of the polls, shall duly certify seal and deliver to the chairman of the Executive Committee of the county, on the day named in sec. 4.

That a list of the officers of the election shall be published in the Boone County RECORDER the first week of said paper's publication after the first Monday in March, 1886, and said officers shall consist of two judges and a clerk, and in case of anyone failing to serve who has been selected any good Democrat present may be selected to fill the vacancy.

Done by order of the committee.

A Senator has asked leave to bring in a bill which if passed and becomes a law, will just about regulate the sale of whisky out of this State. The license will be put so high that but few there will be that will have a trade that will justify taking out the license, while the penalty for violating the law is so extremely severe as will render it difficult to execute the very heavy bond.

THE Sam Jones revival in the city of St. Louis is pronounced a failure, there not being over 500 converts.

A CALL.

We, citizens of Boone county, Ky., believing in the efficiency and moral rectitude of our fellow-citizen, M. C. Norman, Esq., of the Union district, in the county and State aforesaid, and knowing him to be a gentleman of mature judgment, sound discretion and impartial bias, with quite an extensive experience as a Magistrate in the County Court, would respectfully call on the aforesaid M. C Norman to become a candidate before the Democracy of Boone county, for the office of County Judge, at the primary election called by the Democratic executive committee in April next.

THERE is rather a formidable element in this county demanding that the office of County Judge be filled by a lawyer. Legal attainments would be of very great assistance to a person in that position, but with these alone, he would be as a boat without a rudder. Without good, common, practical business sense to guide it in the transaction of the every day business of the office, the finest legal mind in the land could not successfully fill the position. But a person endowed with these qualifications can fill the office very creditably, though in many instances he will find himself in a very embarrassing position. The model County Judge is a man possessed of all the above qualifications and is a rare specimen in this proud old Commonwealth.

SHOULD WE TEACH BRANCHES OTHER THAN THOSE PRESCRIBED BY LAW?

This is a question that affords an excellent opportunity for an interchange of opinions, like many others which are submitted for public consideration. Having realized this fact I will attempt to present only those points which bear upon the point at issue.

First let us consider the duty of a teacher with respect to branches taught in school. No one will doubt that it is the most perfectly defined and conscientious duty of a teacher upon entering his school, to study with untiring zeal the disposition and advancement of his pupils, and to do everything consistent with time and reason to promote the continuous progress of those pupils. And when we say to promote the continuous progress of these pupils, we mean not only in the branches prescribed by law, but in any branch which the teacher pleases to introduce as contributing to this end. By this it will not be inferred that we mean to say that a teacher should introduce branches other than those prescribed by law until he is convinced that the pupil's advancement is such that it requires it.

The question is, however, should we introduce them without additional compensation? Would it not be embarrassing to a teacher to put up that most solemn plea to his employers that he was introducing something which the law did not specify and constquently he demanded additional compensation? Do not, fellow-teachers, understand me to be one of the very few who would object to seeing teachers' salaries augmented, but I would most certainly object to this mode of demanding additional compensation.

When a teacher enters into a contract to teach a school under provisions of the school law, the stipulation on the part of the teacher is to teach the school for a certain compensation. I would ask you to examine the import of that phrase, "to teach a school." Does it not mean to instruct them in specific branches, or does it mean to teach them in whatever their advancement requires? It seems improbable to me, that a teacher could demand extra compensation without severing the contract into which he had entered when we consider that he has agreed to teach for a certain compensation, and to teach, meaning to instruct in those branches which would be most coudusive to the further advancement of the pupils.

On the other hand, if a teacher demand extra compensation every time he jumps the bounds of the common school he would thus indicate that there was a certain amount of his knowledge which he considered very rare, and in the imparting of which he was very cautious. It would certainly be more advantageous to those who are aspiring to the acquisition of higher wages to not object to teaching branches which are not prescribed by law without additional compensation.

To be sure it is the duty of a teacher in an official and legal point of view to teach the course prescribed by law. But when we have pupils that can be profitably instructed in branches not prescribed by law my advice to all those who wish to preserve their equilibrium as teachers, would be to teach them without any mention of additional compensation. Some expedient manner of demanding higher wages is a question which should be thoroughly discussed by the teachers—some such cooperation of effort and acquiescence of sentiment as is exhibited in our commercial divisions or divisions of laborers when they wish to increase their wages. And this it seems to me would be far better than to demand additional compensation for the teaching of branches above a certain standard, and thereby running the risk of an experiment. Again, it ought to be sufficient to say that a teacher should have a higher appreciation of his duty toward his pupils than to resort to this means of supplementing his salary.

A very sensible objection may be presented against teaching other than prescribed branches, on the ground that if the specified course be taught properly, there will be no time for other branches. This, as a matter of course, will differ very materially in different schools; but if a school be properly graded and recitations of such a nature as meet the approval of a true teacher are permitted, there will be in no case a teacher so crowded in teaching other branches as to justify him in demanding additional compensation.

It will seem apparent to all those who critically examine the law that it does not mean to make a limitation on the virtuous acts of teachers, but on the contrary it intends to make a requisition; that is to say that so much as a matter of necessity, shall be taught, and whatever more the teacher please to teach. If any one should put such a construction upon the law, in the consideration of which would not permit them to teach branches not specified by law, it surely would be by implication; for the law does not make any such recitation. Consequently as we are not backed by law in demanding additional compensation under the circumstances before enumerated, we should console ourselves by waiting for a higher and nobler means of accomplishing this in the future.

THE
COMBINATION FENCE
A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.
Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future, all who have it want more.
It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the space bars and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of 5 rods and six at Burlington.

Can you write 1886 every time now.

Eleven year ago last night the old jail burned.

Just now the country has slightly a wintery appearance.

The arrival of bad roads may be looked for any time now.

The fox hunters had several very exciting chases during the holidays.

Gardner Palmer and a Miss Hanna of Lawrenceburg, were married one day last week.

It is a rare occurrence for moles to be at work at this season of the year, but nevertheless they have been.

The crowd in town Monday was not very large, but those that were here were very well entertained by the candidates.

B. F. Yates, of Bellfrey, Ohio, will preach in the Universalist church at this place next Sunday morning at the usual hour.

Lystra Aylor, who is a very old gentleman and a resident of the, Crisler neighborhood on Gunpowder, has been in very poor health for some time.

John M. Palmer, at one time a citizen of this place, but now of Lawrenceburg, Indiana, was married at Moore's Hill, recently to Miss Maria Currie.

The Courier rejoices in the fact that there was not a fight in Williamstown during Christmas, although whisky and other Christmas mixtures flowed freely.

The holidays with all their amusements are gone again. Time and space forbid an attempt to enumerate all the delightful parties enjoyed by the young folks in Burlington and vicinity.

LOST—A setter bitch about one year old, white and black, white streak in face. Information of her whereabouts will be thankfully received by

S. D. HOSHAL, Hebron, Ky.

There will be an oyster supper given at the Golden Grange Hall, at Gunpowder, Ky, Thursday, January 14th, 1886, commencing at 3 o'clock p. m., and supper at all hours until 12 o'clock. No pains will be spared to make it an enjoyable affair.

Remember that Geo. Huschart & Co. of Lawrenceburg, Indiana, can always give satisfaction both as to price and style of work, so when you want to buy a tombstone or a monument go to their yard or call on John Beall, of Hebron, Ky., their agent.

Quite a large crowd assembled at the Baptist church last Thursday evening to witness the treat administered to the Sunday-school scholars. T. W. Finch impersonated Santa Claus in a very creditable manner, and the little ones were rendered happy by the bestowal of oranges and candies.

There is a little negro child at the Poor-house, about a year old which is truly an object of pity. Some time since one of its feet was roasted by its being left in a chair too near the fire. The burn would not yield to medical treatment, and continuing to get worse, a medical council was held in which it was decided that amputation was the only remedy by which life might be saved. One day the first of last week the operation was performed, but it did not have the desired effect, and another amputation was necessary last Friday, and Drs. Furnish, Grant and Terrill performed the second operation.

Having considerable work for last Thursday night, the Odd Fellows' lodge at this place invited the Petersburg and Florence lodges to be present. Petersburg responded by sending a delegation composed of her handsomest men, J. Frank Grant and Solon Early. Florence was more liberly represented, her delegation being composed of the following small eaters and jolly good fellows: T. L. Swetnam, Ben Stephens, Fred Utz, John Fulton, Gene Rice, Will Bradford, Jessie Corwin, James Crisler and Butch Clutterbuck. At seven o'clock that evening the members of Viola lodge feasted their guests on oysters, turkey, &c., at that popular hostelry, the Boone House, after which the work was commenced, and besides the election of officers for the present term, ten degrees were conferred. Officers were elected as follows; Thomas O. Cowen, N. G.; Dr. Furnish, V. G.; R. E. Cloud, Treasurer; Frank Kirkpatrick, Secretary.

Personal Mentions.

Miss Susie Rich has returned home.

Harry Piper is at his brother's.

Mrs. Green has been visiting in Burlington for several days.

Miss Annie Webb, of Bardstown, is visiting Mr. Arthur Blythe's.

E. E. Utz and bride arrived home last week, after a brief wedding tour.

Mrs. M. S. Rice, who has been quite sick for several days is able to be up.

Charlie Riddell, of Williamstown, made Burlington a brief holiday visit.

Dr. R. L. Finnell, of Verona made Burlington his biennial visit Monday.

Miss Annie Cowen has returned home after several weeks visit at Rabbit Hash.

Miss Lizzie Wood, returned to her home in Covington, Tuesday, after a visit of several days at this place.

Edson Alloway, of Nashville, Tennessee, and a second cousin of Judge Hawes, made the Judge a brief visit last week.

Mrs. Belle F. Andrews, of New York City and Miss Sadie Spears, of Covington, are visiting Mr S. P. Brady and wife at this place.

H. C. White and Jno. T. McClure, of Grant county; Abslom Conner, of Cynthiana; Joe Collins and Frank Helm, of Covington, attended court Monday.

Miss Maud Revill, daughter of Jo C. Revill, and who attends college at Anchorage, returned to her school last Sunday, after spending the holidays with her parents.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

UNION.

Miss Maude Crow[illegible], of Warsaw, is [illegible] wife.

Miss Mary N[illegible] is the guest of Mrs. Orrin Percival near Walton.

Miss Laura Baker has been quite sick for several weeks, but is improving.

Miss Stella Seniour, of Covington, is visiting her uncle, Hook Seniour near here.

Chas. Bradford, of Florence, spent several days of last week with relatives here.

The Union Dancing Club gave a party at the hall, which was pronounced a success by all who attended.

Chas. Fisher and his pleasant wife will soon become members of our little community. They expect to occupy, Mrs. Porter's property.

The holidays are over and we are all moving on in the old tracks again. The young people enjoyed several pleasant little companies, and none was more pleasant than the "March Party" at R. K. Conner's on New Year's Eve, though it did cost one young man his last summer's girl, and a valuable dog: but we never allow trifles to mar our pleasure.

RABBIT HASH.

River on the rise again, but not much water looked for.

Thomas Marshall's wife spent Christmas week in Gallatin with her father.

Miss Jessie Bachelor, of Lockland, O, spent the holidays with Hayden Wilson and wife.

Johnnie and Harry Aera, of Huntsville, spent several days in christmas with your pencil shover.

M. F. Morrison has made one of the finest sleighs in the county. You know he is praying for a big snow.

Christmas passed off very quietly here. A few parties and dinners were all that occurred during the holidays that are worth mentioning.

The M. E. Church oyster supper at A. G. McConnell's, New Year's eve, was well attended, as there were three dances in the neighborhood the same evening.

It is rumored that A. G. McConnell is about to trade his Kansas farm for John W. Gaines' farm here. We hope that Ange will succeed in making the trade, for we would be sorry to see him leave.

The Rabbit Hash readers and your correspondent send New Year's greeting to the editors, and the young folks send their thanks for the holiday supplement they received christmas week with the paper. We would be glad to see your list of subscribers increase to double your present number during the year. The reading matter furnished is adapted to both old and young.

BELLEVUE.

The public schools in this neighborhood were closed during the holidays.

We have examined a number of fruit buds and find them in splendid condition. Peach buds are all safe yet.

The advent of the New Year was generally observed here by the suspension of work. Dullness seemed to be the order of the day. No public demonstration to note

Last Thursday, while at school, Little Charley Birkle had his arm rebroken, by a couple of boys while playing, running against him and throwing him down. Dr. Riley reset the fracture.

On account of the absence of a number of the officers and members of the literary society, last Friday evening, it resolved itself into a spelling school and spent the evening in spelling.

The Clore Bros., sons of Jonas Clore, delivered 90 hogs here last Thursday, which they had sold to J. M. Conner, that averaged 331 pounds. Lewis Clore having a lot of 20 that averaged 352 lbs. Several of the lagest weighed 500 lbs. The hogs were sold at $3 70 per cwt.

Lewis W. Kantz will handle tobacco in the warehouse in this place again this season. He has had several hands overhauling the house the past week, making necessary repairs before receiving any of his purchases. Lewis has the push and the enterprise, as well as the backing to make the business a success.

The ice gatherers here are about to send a committee to inquire of "Old Prob." what has got wrong with the season. Thus far we have not had ice here more than 2 inches thick, and that for only a few days. The groud has been covered with snow once and that not over a half inch in depth. Thus far it has not been cold wet or dry—a remarkable season.

FLORENCE.

The gathering of the Sunday-school children at the Methodist church Friday night was an enjoyable affair, and the house was crowded. The children repeated their verses with much grace and the music by Prof. Bristow was beyond description. The little children should not forget C. T. Hide for his kindness to them.

The election Saturday for Town Council passed off quietly, the only trouble that occurred was to get space on the poll-books for the candidates names. The judges were sworn in by 'Squire Gaines, of Burlington. The vote stood 12 for cold water and 36 for gingerale. Harry Chambers, Assessor; L. C. Yager, Attorney; Felix Myers, Police Judge, and Henry Oisner, Treasurer.

As your correspondent was coming up Main street last Wednesday evening about 7 o'clock and when opposite the residence of Mr. William Corbins a flash came through the window as if an eruption of some volcano, and stopping a moment we soon learned the cause. They were preparing for a reception of the young folks, and in a few minutes they commenced pouring in like bees with sweets to the hive—but like drones they brought the sweets away. Among the guests present from a distance were Misses Belle and Josie Gatson and Lou Clarkson, of Union, among the older ones present were T. L. Swetnam and wife, Dr. Sayre and wife, B A. Dulaney and wife and Mrs. Ashley. William Corbin as you all know was full of old time jokes and he cracked them with the old folks until they could laugh no more. About 9 o'clock all were invited to the dining room, where there was turkey, cakes, oyster soup and all the rarest delicacies of the season, and after fifty-five persons had partaken thereof, like the loaves and fishes, there was enough left to feed many more. After supper they continued their fun until [illegible] hour, when all retired to their homes never to forget the happy time they had.

HASTY.

HEBRON.

Expecting to see someting in our last week's paper concerning the christmas exercises at Hebron, and being disappointed, and feeling that something ought to be said, I send this report:

The exercises were announced to begin at one o'clock, and by twelve the people commenced coming, and by 1 o'clock the church was well filled, and by the time the exercises commenced every available space was occupied. It was 1:15 when the superintendant arrived, and after some necessary arrangements, the bell was tapped and the house immediately came to order, when the superintendent read the programme which was disposed of as follows:

The exercises opened with the Banner song, requiring two cornetts and an organ in connection with the school. It was well rendered and heartily applauded.

Walter Crigler displayed considerable eloquence in his declamation, A Misspent Life, and it was well received.

We Come with Smiling Faces, a song by the girls of the Intermediate class, was loudly applauded.

Miss Lila Rouse's essay, Home, was read in a very impressive style, and was highly appreciated by the audience. This essay was followed by the song, Who is This That Cometh? by the school.

The dialogue, A Walk in the Cemetery, by Misses Octavia Rouse and Rosa Utz, was very interesting.

The Hope of Israel, a song by a class of young ladies, received a generous applause.

Sensitiveness, a declamation by Miss Eva Riddell, and To be Shorn, declamation by Master Albert McGlasson, were delivered in the best of style.

A very entertaining exercise was the double quartette, Misses Hattie Tanner, Minnie Crigier; supranno, Lewis and Charles Crisler; tenor, Rober Rouse bass, Walter Crigler; alto, Miss Nina Crigler.

The remainder of the programme as well as I rember it was a duett by Miss Lila Rouse and Mrs. May Graves, declamation by Willie Crigler, vocal and instrumental music by Mrs. Florence Graves, the Three Graces, represented by Misses Alice Quigley, Stela Dye and Kittie Tanner, a song by an infant class, followed by a song by 9 misses dressed in white, each singing a verse of the song, Until His Kingdom Comes. G[illegible] Henderson, mounted on a chair that he might be seen and heard, got off his speech splendidly. Miss S. A. Crigler presided at the organ with grace and ease, while the cornetts added much to the exercises. After the collection, the Christmas Tree was unveiled by S. J. Rouse and Walter Crigler, at which time Mr. and Mrs. Santa Claus arrived, and singing the song, the Beautiful Christmas Tree, Mrs. Santa Claus at the organ, the distribution of presents was commenced and required about an hour, when the exercises closed, and was one of the best it was ever our lot to witness. May the Hebron Sunday-school live long and prosper.

CHARLES H. CRIGLER.

PLATTSBURG.

Some tobacco has been sold for six cents all around.

We met our old friend Billy Sheehan in the city the other day. He is Billy of old.

Died—At Petersburg Christmas day, Mrs. Ann McSweeny, wife of Terry McSweeny, of consumption.

Spring candidates are budding now. Some of them will drop the blossom before the first Monday in August.

The smiling countenance of B. F. Rogers was seen on the outskirts at the shooting bee, buckling the tiger.

L. P. Sullivan is a residence of our town, having rented Capt. A. B. Parker's farm on Ashbyfork for a term of years.

Detective Larry Hazen, of Cincinnati, was in town one day last week looking up evidence in the Moyer murder case.

Joseph Wagstaff, U. S. Storekeeper at Petersburg, says the hardest part of his task is making out his payroll. Joe makes a good officer.

Joe Williams, of the Slimmer Stock Yards, Cincinnati, spent last Thursday night with M. F. Wingate in the west end of town.

E. W. Phillips, of Decatur, Mich., was visiting friends here last week. Ed is traveling salesmen for a Detroit house.

The large malt house at the Petersburg distillery is almost completed, and is the finest structure connected with the distillery.

Miss Clara Grant, who is attending school at Glendale, O, and her brother Charles L. Grant, of Danville. Ky., spent the holidays with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Grant at Petersburg.

Jim Will Sebree and Mrs. Sarah Craig were married last Thursday. Second marriage for both. Clarence Graves, son of the late Dr Wm. Graves of Petersburg was married to a lady of Versailles, Ind., one day last week.

Persons not very well acquainted with Mont Balsly would hardly recognize the wood cut in the RECORDER as being a very good likeness of the Bellevue pill masher. Messrs Editors you will have to set your camera on Mont again.

The shooting match at the Woolper Store was attended by about 125 persons. Cincinnati, Lawrenceburg and Aurora being represented. About 20 turkeys were disposed of. Tom Nettles carried off the most turkeys with Owen Allen a good second. The crowd was very orderly and nothing occurred to mar the feelings of any one.

The political forecast as we hear it spoken is as follows: M. T. Garnett and Bluf Adams for County Clerk; H. P. Stephens and L. H. Dils for County Judge; Will Riddell and S. W. Tolin no opposition; J. R. Clutterbuck and a host of others for sheriff, and our old friend, G. M. Riley, no opposition; and Sam Cowen, no man need tackle for jailer, as he can stay at home and beat any man in the county.

WALTON.

Columbus Hightower, a young man residing with his widowed mother near this place, is reported quite low with typhoid fever.

Jno. T. Conner has transferred his stock of groceries, &c., into his new store recently erected on the corner of Pike and High streets.

A petition to incorporate this little town was extensively circulated a few days since. Following close upon its heels was a bitter remonstrance, the result being a defeat or a relinquishment of the incorporators, consequently both petitions will find a lodgment in the waste basket.

Thos. Sullivan and wife, of Louisiana, Mo., are visiting relatives at this place. Six years with their sorrows and disappointments, have passed into the forgotten past, since last they engaged the sweet companionship of their many friends and relatives here. Three of Mrs. Sullivan's sisters, in the meanwhile have been transported to the silent city of the dead

The Union Sunday-school held at the Baptist church here was called together last Christmas eve by the superintendent, John H. Johnson, and 140 children and teachers responded. The children were in a high state of expectancy as was seen by their eager, wistful countenances. After a very entertaining and appropriate address by Rev. L. Johnson, a distribution was made to the several classes of a large paper sack filled with oranges, nuts, &c., each one receiving the same quantity. The occasion was enjoyable—highly so. After the childrens' feast Bro. Johnson, on behalf of the young ladies class, presented their teacher, Mrs. Dr. Lowry with a silver butter castor, beautifully engraven with her initials, &c. The presentation speech made by Rev. Johnson was carefully worded and especially adapted for the occasion. Mrs. Lowry testified her appreciation with tears unbidden flowing. The Sunday-school closed for the winter.

The X-mas holidays were spent here in riotous living, drinking and making merry, our saloons reaping a harvest thereby. A fellow named Haly, from Richwood, was here in all his glory, chuckful of bug juice, and endeavored to paint the town vermillion red. He commenced operation at the King Hotel by knocking Tobe Marshall out of time in one round, without provocation or malice aforethought. His next victim was our tailor, a peaceful and inoffensive citizen, named Geo, Palmer. He was disposed of by one blow. Next in order was another spectator named Bean, who was brought low by a ponderous blow from the fist of the inebriated demon. At this stage of the proceedings a young man called Sandmire interposed and gave the puglist a real genteel dressing and then bid him go and he goeth. But unfortunately some friend of Haly's put him in posession of a pistol and he returned, shooting and yelling as he advanced, when unexpectedly the Constable stepped forward and arrested him, and divesting him of his arms, turned him over to some of his friends to hold for trial. No sooner had the officer disappeared than Haly's friendly guard told him to git up and git and he lit out at full speed, no one pursuing. After Haly's flight a youngster came forward and asked for the return of his little "Pop" saying that Haly slipped it out of his pocket, but kind friends to the young man advised him to keep quiet about the matter, and so he did. This was the kind of Christmas sport we enjoyed. How do you like it? But why murmur? There is no remedy for us to lay hold of under existing gang rule. But, thank God, this is the only whisky celebration that will ever again meet our gaze and shock our senses in this village.

Bathing.

Experience is the best school in which to learn the virtue of a remedy, and in this way it has been found that for rheumatism there is nothing better than bathing. But great care should be exercised, especially where the vitality is low or bathing has not been practiced. In such cases it is best to begin in warm weather. The temperature of the water will depend on other conditions: if there is fever, cold water may be used with safety. During the bath, if the patient feels a chilly sensation, it should be brought to a sudden close. The best time for bathing is just after rising from bed. The next best is an hour or two before dinner. The cold bath should never be taken late in the day. A very good and convenient bath may be taken by applying the water with the hand or a sponge; but if a clear pond or pool of water is near, the plunge bath is preferred. In general it matters but little as to the kind of water, so it be clear. But should there be any breaking out, a good mineral water, such as Blue Lick or Big Bone, may be very profitably used. Immediately after bathing the body should be rubbed well with a coarse towel and then with the hand, taking care to rub downward. A suit of dry, clean flannel under-clothing should be then put on with comfortable outer garments, and then brisk exercise taken until breakfast. Let no one think that this alone will do. There are other conditions equally essential. Proper attention to diet is of vital importance. The food should be plain, eaten slowly and at regular intervals, the meals not being taken less than five hours apart. A moderate amount of out-door exercise daily in the form of some useful employment, ought to be taken, avoiding exposure to extremes of weather. An occasional sweating by vigorous exercise will be highly beneficial. If extra exercise fail to cause this, when the body has become heated, let two or three swallows of cold water be taken, which will almost invariably produce the desired effect.

This treatment costs only a little exfected, for it will act as a preventive, not only of a return of the rheumatism, but of colds, fevers, &c. Dear after trouble and should be kept up even after a cure is thought to have been effected reader, these words of advice are submitted in the hope that you may be benefited. Try it.

'HOME COMFORT RANGES'
30,000 In Use.

Who would be free must themselves "strike the first blow," and when a "woman says she will, she will." Henceforth the desertion of the cook need not be the signal for house hold wheels to stop, for with a "Home Comfort" Wrought Iron Range in the kitchen, the mistress can do the cooking without danger to health or temper.

Remember, the Home Comfort Ranges are the only Wrought Iron Ranges that have Malleable Iron Top Plates and Malleable Iron Fire Linings. And all other Wrought Iron Ranges you see advertised are Cast Iron Tops and Fire Linings.

LITTLE PARAGRAPHS
Expressing the Sentiments of our Customers.

I gladly add my testimonial to the perfectness in construction and its adaptability to the wants of the public. PETER JETT, Mt. Olivet, Ky.

We could scarcely over-estimate its advantages. The fact that a 20-pound roast of beef and a delicate cake can be baked successfully at the same time is sufficient evidence of its merits. To testify to this is a pleasure duly appreciated by Robt. OVERBEY, Ellisville.

Having purchased a Home Comfort Range of J. D. Gates, we take pleasure in recommending it to our friends of Bath county as the best thing of the kind we ever used. It heats up very quickly, with a small quantity of fuel, and does better baking and cooking than any cast iron range or stove we have ever used. J. VARNSDALE.

We have used it a sufficient length of time to know that we could get nothing better. E. KENTON, Mt. Olivet.

Having had long experience in the use of many kinds of stoves, but for quick work and economy of fuel it takes the lead. A. HILDRETH, Blue Licks.

It is the most excellent article I have ever purchased in its line, and it is most happily named Home Comfort. WM. MCCLANAHAN, Ellisville.

I can safely say for perfect baking, cooking and economy of fuel it excels all others. JAS. HENRY, Nicholas Co.

I seldom recommend an article for others' use, but in this case will say I consider it superior to anything of the kind ever manufactured. WM. HALL, Sardis.

It is a very satisfactory piece of house furniture. Strong, well made, and does its work with certainty and dispatch. H. B. SAMPSON, Blue Lick.

No one can appreciate its great advantages without using it. Had we known its merits we would have bought one long ago; and discarded the old one. J. DOOLY, Carlyle.

You can not say too much in parise of it. I have the best biscuit and the best meals in the world baked on it. I would not part with it for any reasonable amount of money. W. N. SMITH, Nicholas County.

Dear Sirs: You can write anything you choose in recommending your beautiful and perfect operating Home Comfort Ranges, and sign our names.

J. W. RALLS, J. H. BOWEN,
JAS. DOOLEY, J. H. CAYWOOD,
WALTER POTTS, N. P. RALLS.

The "Home Comfort" Range is all right in every respect and I do not see how we could get along without it as it does better work and takes so much less fuel than our old cast iron stove. J. A. MCCORD, Fleming County.

I indorse all that has, or can be said in favor of the "Home Comfort" Range S. C. STOCKDALE, Fleming Co., Ky.

The above statement in behalf of the "Home Comfort" Range suits me, and I claim enough can not be said in their favor. I am using one and could ask for nothing better of the kind. J. E. MCCARTY, Fleming Co. Ky.

MY COUSIN.

If you should once see my remarkable cousin,
Miss Dorcas Elizabeth Deborah Ann,
I know you would choose her from out of a dozen
And prove yourself thus a remarkable man
She'll harness a horse in the time of a minute,
And hitch to a buggy in one minute more,
Then step from the wheel with agility in it,
And drive with a flourish away from the door.

She'll bring home a calf in the back of her wagon
For which she had bargained with Timothy Burr,
A trade that the cutest of drovers might brag on,
Though nothing but every day business with her.
She's awake with the lark when the daylight is breaking,
And cheery and fresh are the tones of her call
"Get up, all ye lazy ones—time you were waking"
As loud with her broomstick she hits on the wall.

She plants the tomatoes, and weeds out the onions,
And trims up the quince bushes early in March;
She doctors the neighbors for chilblains and bunions,
And puts in my collars a plenty of starch.
She sings in the choir by the side of the tenor,
And gives a sharp look at the blundering bass;
She plays the church organ with energy when her
Assistance is needed in any such case.

She knows what is what, and can tell which from t'other,
In household affairs she's as keen as a knife.
She is kindness itself, though her scape-gallows brother
Gets now and then thrashed to the edge of his life;
She cuts the boys' hair with a bright pair of scissors,
A little bit stubby and notched off behind,
And has the rare gift, which exclusively is hers,
Of making the roguish young savages mind.

She never gets weary of helping and working,
Nor moodily sits "on a bench in the shed,"
Like some who are given to sulking and shirking,
To whimper and grumble and wish herself dead.
She mends up my gloves and embroiders my neck-tie,
And sews the new binding around my lapel:
But all she can do you will hardly expect I
In one little poem can suitably tell.

She is not very old; some assert she is forty;
I don't think she's thirty; you need not be told
Some ladies grow younger, and she's of that sort I
Am firmly persuaded can never grow old.
I'm thirty myself, and as long as I've known
She hasn't changed any—if truth's in a rhyme.
I asked her one day if the love I had shown her
Was worth a return? But "she hadn't got time!"

IN A PALACE CAR.

The Serio-Comic Romance of "Red Beard" and the "Cry Baby."

FIRST DAY.

SCENE—Palace car, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia. Engine blowing off in spasmodic snorts, which betoken imminent departure.

Enter middle-sized man with undersized valise; strong, square shoulders, jovial eyes and a well-kept, waving, but red, red beard. He puts valise under seat, settles himself comfortably, and falls into what appears to be a thoughtful habit of stroking the beard aforesaid.

Enter from the other end of the car undersized young lady, with overgrown valise, crisp blonde hair, cameo features and violet eyes, a little red, as if from recent overflow. She is followed by the porter, who is almost suffocated with his load of shawls, books and lunch-basket. Young lady drops overgrown valise, rushes to the window of her section and fails to get it open. Through it can be seen an elderly lady, with solicitous, maternal countenance, who stands on the platform outside, and says something inaudible because of the closed window. Porter is busy stowing away parcels, and pays no attention, but the red-bearded man strides across and flings it up with practiced ease. While so doing he catches another glimpse of the violet eyes, and, beholding another inundation, retreats precipitately without waiting to be thanked.

Tableau of blonde head thrust through the window and buried on the maternal shoulders for a moment. Another dyke gives way in the lachrymal stream—the engine snorts and begins ringing her bell.

"G-good-bye, mamma. K-kiss me," says a trembling little voice.

"God bless you, my darling! Good-bye. Your Uncle Ned will meet you at the train. Write me every day. There! there! there! Don't cry."

Each "there" is accompanied by a soft, sibilant osculation; the engine caps the climax of her half-hour's grumbling and fretting by three short blasts of her whistle, as if in mocking echo of the kisses, settles her mighty shoulders into the collar, and the Pacific Express dashes off across the Schuylkill.

Red-headed man, with innate delicacy, looks out of the window as if interested in the scenery—which he has seen a hundred times—and pays no attention to the low, intermittent sob, accompanied by a blowing of the nose, which comes from the opposite section. Then he contemplates the other two occupants of the car—one a genuine British tourist and globe-trotter, who writes endless pages of unimportant and trivial facts in his notebook, and is now recording that in America the locomotives ring their bells at crossings just as they do in England; the other, an old gentleman, who is very deaf, for the porter shouts at him in order to learn his pleasure concerning the disposal of his property. Neither of these appears to interest him particularly, for he leans back in his seat and soliloquizes in a low tone as follows:

"Poor little cry-baby! She's never been away from her mamma before, and it goes hard with her. She is recovering a little already; the sniveling noise is becoming more and more intermittent. It's remarkable how readily women, and particularly young ones, go to 'clapping on the water works,' as Sam Weller calls it! Now, here's a young one that is probably going on a pleasure trip—will be absent, at the most, about three months—really wants to go, too—and yet she's crying about leaving her mother, and making her pretty eyes all red. Ah, well! I suppose its natural enough. Seems to me I remember feeling choky and desolate when I first left home, and the mither was crying over my clean collar! Poor little beggar! I wonder if I could do anything to make her less lonely? If I speak to her she might think me one of those designing and evil-minded persons against whom all young female travelers are solemnly warned. I wonder if I look like a villain or a pirate? She'd be sure to distrust this beard of mine. Girls don't like beards, especially red ones, and she would either resent my proffered protection and sympathy, or be more frightened than comforted. I had better wait until she becomes more reassured and calmer. This is one of the cases in which it is better not to do to-day what you can put off until to-morrow."

And he pulls down his hat, opens a newspaper, and begins running through its columns with the eye of a man who keeps up with current events, and only reads the latest developments.

In the meantime his neighbor has regained her composure in a measure, and the telegraph poles, as they fly by her window, peep in at a very sober, though pretty face, which watches them steadily with its thoughtful, tear-stained eyes. After awhile she begins to look around the car and hears a one-sided conversation between the Englishman and the deaf gentleman, which, though amiably conducted, is vastly puzzling to both, and the shadow of a smile comes to her lips. Then the deaf man produces an ear trumpet, and that reminds the tourist that somewhere in his notebook he has an authentic narrative to the effect that in a Western town in America, where ear trumpets are unknown, a deaf gentleman at an eating-house answered a waiter's inquiry by putting up his trumpet, into which the waiter (ignorant of its use) poured a plate of soup! When this recital was finished and the Englishman had concluded with "Such savage ignorance, you know!" our blue eyes fairly danced with merriment, and, looking around, they encountered those of the red-bearded gentleman similarly amused. He relapses suddenly into the newspaper, and she turns her attention again to the telegraph poles, as if she had an intimate friend among them, and wanted to distinguish him as he passed.

"Dear me!" she is thinking, "suppose he should think I was smiling at him! Or, suppose he was smiling at me! How dare he! I shall be careful not to catch his eye again. [Stealing a glance at him.] What an awful red beard. Why will men wear beards? He has a kind, genial face, though, and his hands are white and firm, like a gentleman's. I don't think he was smiling at me, or, if he was, it was only because he remembered my crying at the station—and here I am laughing at a silly story about an ear-trumpet. He thinks me a child, and looks at me as if he would like to pat me on the head and offer me candy! I wonder how old he is? [Stealing another glance.] Not over thirty at the most, but with a self-poised, traveled air that makes me envious! What a timid, shrinking little thing I must seem to him. I'd like to have an opportunity of showing him that I am not a baby if I did cry when mamma left me; but, of course, I can not speak to him, and—mamma told me to be very careful not to get into conversation with strangers. He may not be a gentleman, after all, and—heigho! Four long days ahead of me without companionship! I wonder how far he is going? Perhaps to Chicago. He might know Uncle Ned. If I could only ask him! What would mamma say at the idea of my speaking to a stranger or his speaking to me?—'Decidedly improper.' Then we must not allow it, and I'll devote my attention to the dear old deaf gentleman."

To which purpose she adheres until the porter comes around to light the lamps, and her friends, the telegraph poles, become invisible in the gathering twilight. Then her neighbor goes off to get supper and smoke, while she makes a first day's attack on her lunch basket, which, like all first day's attacks, consists more of unwrapping and wrapping up than eating.

Finally, out of sheer desperation and loneliness, she has her section "made up," and, after a season of perplexity as to how much, or rather how little, she shall undress, she seeks its seclusion, fully convinced that if the remainder of the trip is as tedious as the first afternoon the four days will seem a month.

SECOND DAY.

The sun has been straggling through the colored glass in the top of our palace car for an hour or more, and the train rushes on as if gaining fresh vigor from the crisp morning air, when the red-bearded gentleman's section shows signs of agitation and a towzled head looks out from the curtains.

"Time to be stirring, I think," he says to himself. "I wonder how my little neighbor has stood it? One does not usually get much sleep during the first night on a sleeper, especially with an amiable old deaf gentleman snoring like a house afire in the vicinity. I must get out. She may be too bashful to get up with me here." [Catching sight of a stout little shoe lying in the aisle on the side nearest him.] "Great Jove, it is one of hers! Tumbled out of her section in the night and rolled over here. May be she's waiting now for the porter to come and rescue it from its dangerous proximity to me. I'll put it back and pretend to be asleep while she gets it."

Just as he seeks to carry this into effect her curtains open and he is caught in the act. There's nothing for it but to face the music, and he says, coolly:

"I hope you will excuse the liberty I take with your property, but it had strayed into my domain. Permit me to return it."

As much of her face as he can see is very pink indeed—a little dimpled hand receives the vagrant shoe. She murmurs an indistinct "Thank you," and hastily closes the curtain.

"Rather too embarrassing a situation for improving an acquaintance," thinks the gentleman as he repairs to the dressing-room and begins sousing his head in the cold water. "How shy she is! I don't think I shall get along. I have a sort of contempt for the window-raising, lunch-offering, seat-turning, book-loaning modes of scraping acquaintance, principally because they are the stock in trade of drummers and train 'mashers' generally! Unless fortune comes to my aid I fear we shall ride to Chicago side by side and strangers."

When he comes back from breakfast he finds my lady apparently absorbed in a book, her fair hair shining in the sun, and the red circles gone from her eyes, looking fresh and dainty as a woodland flower—which is the comparison this ordinarily prosaic young gentleman makes when he sees her. The deaf gentleman is on hand, protesting to the Englishman that he was never known to snore, and the nocturnal disturbances of which the latter spoke must have proceeded from the porter. After listening for a moment to this slander of that functionary, our hero resumes his seat and opens another paper, which he has procured somewhere; but he doesn't seem to find it satisfactory, for his eye wanders now and then across the aisle to his neighbor. She detects it, notwithstanding her absorption, and immediately becomes more absorbed for his benefit.

So the time and the train fly on, and, to his surprise, our young gentleman finds this trip much more tiresome than common—positively wearisome, in fact. Then in a fit of impatience he throws up his window and gazes vacantly out on the barren landscape, takes off his hat, tumbles his hair, and, at last, in an absent-minded way, pulls out a cigar, lights a match, and is on the point of smoking when he remembers that he is not in a smoking-car, looks up to see if any one has observed it, and, catching her eye, forgets the match still burning in his hand. The result is that the ends of his beard come in contact with the flame. There is a sudden blaze, a quick shriek of alarm from the lady, and, with quiet presence of mind, he smothers the flame with his traveling scarf. To his surprise his neighbor is in the aisle by his side, and says, earnestly:

"Oh, sir, I hope you are not burned?"

"No more than a few weeks will repair, I believe," he replies, gayly; "my carelessness has cheated the barber out of a task—nothing more," and, taking off the scarf, he discloses a comical condition of beard, one side of which has been burned off within an inch of his chin, while the other retains its native luxuriance. "I see by your eyes that it is ridiculous," he says. "Laugh if you like, I shall not mind."

"I am so glad that it is no worse," says my lady, frankly. "I have a pair of scissors in my satchel with which you can trim it even, if you would like them."

"I don't like to trouble you," says he.

"Nay, but one good turn deserves another," she replies. "You see I have not forgotten your—your kindness this morning."

"Oh, the shoe!" he replies. "A small kindness that—as small as a shoe—but I will not be so churlish as to refuse your kindly offer." The pretty little white hands are dangerously close as she brings him the scissors, and he can look straight into her eyes, but he treats it as an ordinary occurrence, and protects her from embarrassment by being unembarrassed himself.

The English gentleman sees it, however, and immediately chronicles in his notebook the interesting fact that in America young ladies traveling alone on the railway do not hesitate to help any stranger make his toilet if he desires it.

He retires with the scissors and presently returns with the much abused beard unevenly trimmed and "notched" at the sides.

She laughs merrily, and he is on the point of making a gallant speech, such as expressing a willingness to burn his beard every day for the sake of using her scissors; but he feels that this girl's ingenuousness is above cheap flattery, and he disdains to offer her such. So, instead, he talks easily and pleasantly—asks her destination and is evidently pleased when it corresponds with his own—regrets that he doesn't know "Uncle Ned," if for nothing else but to acknowledge his niece's kindness.

By this time the girl is thoroughly at her ease, and, welcoming the change from solitude, she talks freely and talks well—well enough to fulfill his wish of the previous evening, that she might prove to him her emancipation from long clothes.

"Do you know," she says, naively, "I have been hoping that something might occur by which we could become acquainted? I mean, of course, without forwardness on my part or on yours."

"And so have I," he replies. "With me it arose from an humble desire to comfort and console you yesterday, and it has been growing ever since. Need I say that I welcome the accident which effected my wish?"

She laughed. "I am afraid you thought me a simpleton for crying, but"—her voice grows graver—"I felt so lonely and distressed about leaving mamma. I have never traveled alone."

"I understand," he says, simply; "I can remember my first plunge into the cold water of the world, and how horribly near crying I came when my dear old mother kissed me at the station. That was some time before I cultivated this scarlet abomination"—touching the beard—"which, wherever I go, earns me the distinctive title of the 'red-bearded man.'"

"It is rather like that of young Pendennis," she says, roguishly. "I don't like beards."

"And I'll wager," he goes on, "that was the first thing about me you noticed. By the way, we have not progressed far enough in our new-found acquaintance to know each other's names. Suppose, for the sake of novelty, we disclose and call each other during the rest of the trip by the names which each mentally bestowed on the other at first sight?"

She looks a little embarrassed. "I am afraid you'll think mine impertinent."

"Not more so than mine, I am sure," he replies; "I'll agree to take it in good part if you will."

"Very well," says she. "I am afraid you were right, and my first impression was 'Red Beard.' Now tell me my new name."

"It sounds very ridiculous, but when I saw you sitting there in tears I called you 'Poor Little Cry Baby!'"

"Such names!" says the Cry Baby, laughing.

"Such nonsense!" says the Red Beard, laughing too.

An hour later:

The Cry Baby—I have appointed myself a committee of one to invite you to join me in a lunch-basket repast. Mamma has provided as if for a wilderness of daughters, and as I am but one—

Red Beard—Bewilderness?

The Cry Baby—No, daughter—I should be glad to have your assistance.

Red Beard—Each hour you knit stronger the bonds of my gratitude. An eating-house with its noise and dirt, as compared with your kind ministrations and—and lunch basket—"Hyperion to a Satyr."

The Cry Baby—I'm sure you deserve a breakfast for that painstaking speech. Cold chicken, cold tongue, cold pigeon, pickles, jelly, crackers—help yourself. Everything cold.

Red Beard (with his mouth full of chicken)—There are only two cold dishes I object to, and I don't see them here.

The Cry Baby—As Mrs. Gamp says: "Give it a name, I beg."

Red Beard—Cold heart and cold shoulder.

The Cry Baby—Have you been a sufferer from the effects of either?

Red Beard—I can not say I have, and wisdom without experience is generally open to doubt. But yet I have lived long enough and observed enough to expect but little warmer fare from the surging mass of self-serving toilers called the world—each of whom looks upon the other not as a friend, brother or comrade, but as a foe, or, at best, a competitor in the strife!

The Cry Baby (her blue eyes looking far away out of the window)—And yet it is better to believe in as many of them as we can, since to have confidence in no one is to be unhappy.

Red Beard—True, most true, oh, wise young judge! May I offer you some jelly?

The Cry Baby (accepting silently)—Do you live in Philadelphia? Or is it a breach of our compact to ask?

Red Beard—Not at all. No; I live in Chicago when I am not on the wing. My business—if it will interest you—is that of publishing and selling books; and—if that will interest you—it is a very large one.

The Cry Baby—Thank you for your frankness.

Red Beard—And will you imitate it, for my special gratification?

The Cry Baby—Oh, yes. I call Baltimore my home. I have an uncle in Chicago, and when he asked us to make him a visit I was the only one who could go; so mamma came with me to Philadelphia, and after staying there a week, started me off, as you have seen.

The Brakeman—Defiance! Change cars for Toledo!

The Cry Baby—With pleasure (producing hat and gloves). How dazzling the sun is!

Red Beard (aside)—I should say the daughter! [Exeunt.

* * *

SCENE—Same as before—about sunset of the same day. The train shrieking along as before. The lunch basket has again served for two and holds out gallantly.

Red Beard—"Slow sinks more lovely ere his race be run, along Morea's hills, the setting sun." I verily believe the Englishman is making a note that in America the sun sets in the West, just as in England!

The Cry Baby (laughing)—And the deaf gentleman is holding his trumpet out of the window to see if he can hear the engine whistle!

Red Beard—And I am thinking that in all my journeys between the sea and the lakes I have never passed one so pleasantly.

The Cry Baby (a little coldly)—You are pleased to say so.

Red Beard—I am pleased to think so! And you?

The Cry Baby (evasively)—I enjoyed the sunshine to-day and its departing glories this evening, but—I say not that it is a warmer sun than that which shone a fortnight since or will shine a fortnight hence!

Red Beard—It is a pretty metaphor, and I accept it; let but my sun shine until its setting! And that, alas, will be to-morrow.

The Cry Baby—At what time do we reach the city?

Red Beard—About nine o'clock, or a little earlier. Look through the window; how soft and mellow the light falls on rocks that were bare and unsightly in the sunshine. So when a man dies the fading light of memory softens the features of his misdeeds.

The Cry Baby—And yet this is unjust to the blameless man, just as the faint light is unjust to some rock that would be beautiful in the sunshine.

Red Beard (dryly)—Ay, but the blameless man is extinct or never existed. Enough of moralizing. How long do you remain in the Western metropolis?

The Cry Baby—Until I am ready to return. It may be a month or a twelve-month.

Red Beard—Then I shall meet you again.

The Cry Baby—But how? You don't know my name.

Red Beard—You have told me your uncle's. I will meet him.

The Cry Baby—His name is not the same as mine.

Red Beard—Trust me. We shall be regularly introduced, and that ere long. That is, if you do not object?

The Cry Baby—I shall consent on one condition. That you ask for the Cry Baby.

Red Beard (aside)—I may do that in good earnest yet! (Aloud) I am content."

Bedtime:

Red Beard (behind his curtain)—I am more or less enraptured! A bright, pretty, soft-hearted, ingenuous girl—sensible, too! Oh, fortunate man, how near you came to entertaining an angel unawares! And oh, blessed accident that broke the spell! * * * which I consider quite enough rhapsodizing for the present, and more than I have done since my first attack of the divine passion, vulgarly known as puppy love! Nine o'clock! I must arise.

The Cry Baby (behind her curtain)—Traveling isn't so tedious as they told me. Why, we'll reach Chicago to-morrow! He is a thoroughly well-bred man and very agreeable. I'm sure mamma wouldn't object to my having made his acquaintance under the circumstances; but oh, goodness, how could I tell I had met a Mr. Red Beard on the train!—and that he addressed me by the familiar and derisive title of "Cry Baby?" (A soft little laugh). Never mind! I'm sure he was especially provided by Providence to beguile this journey, and I'm duly grateful—to Providence.

THIRD DAY.

"Time to get up, sah," said the porter. "Breakfast at Fort Wayne in twenty minutes. Thankee, sir." And, pocketing the gratuity, he proceeds on his journey.

"Time to get up, ma'am," he repeats at the opposite section.

"Yes," he hears her fresh, clear voice; "how soon will we be in sight of Chicago."

"Don't get in sight for four hours—train late," says the porter, laconically, and retreats.

It is marvelous how soon the red-bearded gentleman finishes his toilet and how eagerly he waits for the appearance of his fair neighbor. She comes at last, with her little brown hat nestling on the blonde curls, and gives him a gloved hand, which somehow sends a thrill through him, and strengthens an indefinable sensation of sadness which has been oppressing him.

Red Beard—Good-morning, fair saint! Behold "the monk all shaven and shorn"—

The Cry Baby—"Who pitied the maiden all forlorn"—

Red Beard—"Who helped him to trim the beard all tattered and torn."

"It is good morning and good-bye, too, I am afraid," she says, pleasantly, for by this time the train is skirting the lake. I shall never forget the past two days on the rail, and our incognito friendship."

"And I," he says, "shall in future find all railroad journeys tedious in comparison with this; all palace cars dreary unless I can conjure up your image to brighten them."

"The image of a cry-baby?" she asks, smiling. "Then let me add that I shall never see a red beard again without an intense desire to recall your memory by—cutting it!"

He—And if any beard or any baby would answer, we should not have long to wait. We are nearing the pier, and your uncle will be there. You could not introduce him to a man whose name you don't know. Good-bye. [He is shaking hands again.] And, remember, I have sworn a mighty oath—we shall meet again!

She—Remember the condition!

He—To ask for you? I will!

And he is gone.

FOURTH DAY.

One year has elapsed.

SCENE—Palace car at Calvert Street Station, Baltimore; engine uttering premonitory snorts as before.

Enter middle-sized man, with strong, square shoulders, jovial eyes and—no beard. On his arm undersized young lady with crisp, blonde hair, cameo features and violet eyes, a little red as if from crying.

He—There, darling! It makes me wretched to see tears in your eyes.

She—B-but they've all b-been so k-kind and g-good to me.

He—And therefore you cry? O, wise little wife! If kindness makes you weep, then may I never give you cause for anything but tears.

She (putting a timid little hand to his face)—Do not think I am marring our wedding day by crying. Do you remember the first name you gave me?

He—A little "Cry Baby?"

She—And mine for you until I made you shave it off: "This is the priest all shaven and shorn"—

He—"Who wedded the maiden all forlorn."

The Conductor (outside)—All aboard!

—The Argonaut.

—A Chinese sheep-herder, employed by Mr. Johnson, whose place is on the north fork of John Day's River, had a rough fight with a bear lately. Bruin was hungry, and visited Mr. Johnson's corral for a supply of fresh mutton. John did not believe in such pilfering, and tried to slay his visitor with an axe. The bear had too much Sullivan-like science for the Chinaman, and knocked him out with an upper cut. Not being fond of Chinese meat he left John for dead and carried off a sheep. The Chinaman came to in an hour and pluckily drove the sheep eight miles to the ranch.—Salem (Oregon) Statesman.

—The trappings of the white elephant of King Theebaw are said to be worth a million dollars. The royal regalia are reputed the most valuable in the world, especially in rubies and sapphires. Ruby mines exist just north of Mandalay, to which no European has ever been allowed access. The Burmese war is, therefore, likely to yield plenty of loot.—N. Y. Sun.

—The quantity of sumach gathered in Virginia this year was very large. Some poor men have made as high as four hundred dollars by gathering the leaves of a shrub that received no attention till since the close of the war.

THE OLD LADY.

She Knows all About Bashful Lovers and Advises Her Daughters Accordingly.

"Mary Ellen," said an anxious mother to her daughter, in reference to a beau who had been to see her the night before; "did he hint anything about marrying?"

"No, ma'am."

"Didn't he sigh nor look as though he was suffering?"

"No, ma'am."

"Didn't he say nothing about his plans?"

"No, ma'am."

"Didn't he talk any ways sweetish?"

"No, ma'am."

"Was he chatty, or otherwise?"

"He was right smart otherwise, mother; a heap so."

"Didn't he say nothing?"

"Not much."

"Oh, he did talk some, did he?"

"A small bit."

"What about?"

"Well, about all he had to say was about his hat."

"About his hat?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Mary Ellen, what on earth did he have to say about his hat?"

"He said he had three more at home, and it was the worst one of the lot."

"Is that all he had to say?"

"Just about."

"How long did you set him."

"Four hours."

"And he didn't say nothing else?"

"I don't believe he did."

"Mary Ellen, do you know what you've got to do?"

"No, ma'am."

"You've got to give him the grand bounce. He's just such another numbskull as your father was. He sot me seven years without comin' any nigher to broachin' the subject I wanted to hear about than that, and I reckon he might a been keepin' it up yet, if I hadn't got my dander up at last, and told him that Quaker-meetin' sort o' nonsense had got to be stopped in short meter, and that I had to know immediately what he was hangin' around there for, or I'd marry a peddler who was after me hot-footed, before the moon could full. That brought him to his mutton mighty suddint, and he hopped up and popped so quick it made my heart flutter. It turned out all right for me, though it used up an awful sight of fire-wood, cider and so on, before he got to the poppin' pint, but I was a heap younger'n you and it didn't make so much difference. The old folks they used to howl like all sin at the way your fool of a daddy dilly-dallied around, and I can see now that they was right about it, though it used to vex me like the mischief then. You're too old, my gal, to run such tedious chances, and so you've got to drop this feller and clinch on to some body that hain't so slow with his chin-music, or your har'll be gray before you get an offer. This thing of sparkin' long enough to go to Jericho and back again before you get to housekeepin' is played out, and I won't put up with it. Mary Ellen, you understand me?"—Lige Brown, in Chicago Ledger.

"DOG STARS."

The Most Startling Production of "Hamlet" Ever Witnessed.

Astley introduced performing dogs at his amphitheater, but only in such tricks as are now to be seen in the concert halls; the Royal Circus seems to have been the first place in which the dog appeared as an actor in a play written expressly to display his peculiar talents. The Roscii of the canine stage, two in number, were called Geler and Victor, and such was their popularity that they held daily receptions, and people flocked in hundreds to gaze upon and fondle these canine phenomena. Dog pieces became quite the rage, they even invaded the classic stage of Drury Lane, and one saved Sheridan from bankruptcy when Kemble, Siddons and a magnificent company of two-legged players had been performing to empty benches. The actors who owned the animals were called "dog stars." They always traveled in pairs; one played the villain, the other the virtuous individual; the latter was always attended by his faithful "dawg," who protected him from all the machinations of his enemy, the villain of the drama. At the wind-up the latter took "the seize" as it was called, that is to say, at a given signal the dog sprang at his throat, which was guarded by a thick pad, invisible, of course, to the audience, covered with red cloth; after turning round like a tetotum, and shouting "mussy, mussy"—they invariably so pronounced the word—he would fall and roll about in great agony upon the stage, the dog still keeping a tight hold, until he was supposed to be dead. Shakespeare's plays in their time have been made to assume many curious forms, but "Hamlet" as a dog piece is the most startling of all, yet this was actually achieved by one of these "dog stars" about five and twenty years ago in the provinces. He announced himself as "the only dog Hamlet," which he probably was, though the phrase, from a natural history point of view, was a little mixed. The play was very much abbreviated, of course; the Prince of Denmark in every case was attended by a large black dog, and in the last the sagacious animal took upon himself the office of executioner by springing upon the King and putting an end to his wicked career in the usual orthodox (dog) fashion.—London Society.

AN ADMIRAL'S PLEA.

Why Siberia Should be Relieved of the Stigma of a Convict Settlement.

The Russian Admiral Possiet, who has traveled a great deal in Siberia, has published a pamphlet on the system of transportation of criminals in Russia. He thinks the time has arrived when the practice of colonizing Siberia should cease. "Siberia is no longer," he says, "the same country it was when it became a convict settlement. At that time it did not extend beyond Kamtschatka. But now that Russia, by the acquisition of the Amoor district, has extended her frontier to the Sea of Okhotsk, which is being gradually converted into a second Mediterranean, and that China and Japan are waking out of their sleep of centuries, it is time to relieve Siberia of the humiliating stigma of a convict settlement and to place it in a position more suited to the development of its resources. The criminals who have been transported into Siberia during the last two centuries exercise a ruinous influence on the population. The purpose of the transportation is twofold; it aims both at the punishment and at the reform of the criminal. The penal object is fulfilled; the punishment of forced labor in Siberia is most severe. But so long as the present system continues there can be no moral reform." It is a proverb in Siberia that "forced labor is the school of corruption," and the convicts themselves say that the journey from European Russia is far more terrible than the forced labor imposed upon them when they reach their destination. The convicts are mostly employed in gold washing, the silver mines having been almost entirely abandoned. Admiral Possiet visited the gold washers of Us. Kari, to which two thousand convicts had been sent. Two hundred of these were ill in the hospital from scurvy, three hundred had fled, and the rest worked indolently and carelessly.—Brooklyn Eagle.

—Most farmers feed corn to everything. Corn to the cows, corn to the calves, corn to the colts, and corn to the pigs. What were oats made for? For all young animals. Corn is good to fatten grown-up animals and to be a part food to fatten young ones. Very little of it should be used for feed for young animals, as it does not contain enough of the elements to make a perfect body.—Troy Times.

—Nothing tarnishes silver more quickly than rubber, the ring around the neck of a fruit jar being enough to color a whole closet full of silver in one night. Coal gas is also inimical to bright silver or plated ware, but a lump of gum camphor in a closet will do much to protect the goods. Silver spoons, discolored by contact with cooked eggs, are easily brightened by rubbing with common salt.—Chicago Times.

—Mustard Dressing: Some one asking for a recipe for a nice mustard dressing will find, I think, that this will suit: Take six eggs with three teaspoonfuls of mixed mustard, one teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of sugar, one and one-half cup of the best salad oil, half cup of water and one cup of vinegar. Mix thoroughly and place in a water bath. Stir constantly until it creams, then put away for use. If kept in a cool place it will be good for a long time.—Toronto Mail.

WILLOW CULTURE.

It Opens a Large Field for Useful and Profitable Industry.

Considerable attention has been turned of late, in this country, to the cultivation of the basket willows, and their manufacture. That a desirable and promising industry is opened to us in this direction is indicated by the fact that we import willow rods and baskets ready made to the amount of more than $300,000 a year. The cultivation of the willows, and their manufacture, is simple and easy, and may be carried on with hardly any capital on any scale, large or small. They are readily propagated from cuttings about a foot in length, taken from well-ripened shoots, and set in the ground in a slanting direction, and to such a depth as to be nearly or quite covered with earth. Cultivators differ in opinion as to the distance apart as to which the cuttings should be set, some saying two feet each way, others eighteen inches one way by twelve the other. The closer they are set the less is the tendency to throw out side shoots, which are undesirable. The ground in which they are set should be well pulverized, and should be kept free from weeds by cultivation, for a year or two, until the plants are well established, and send up shoots vigorous and numerous enough to shade the ground, so that weeds will not grow. The shoots should be cut close to the ground soon after the leaves fall in autumn.

A large field of useful and profitable industry is here open to us. Basket work may be carried on upon thousands of farms and in thousands of dwellings without interfering with other and necessary labor. No machinery is needed. In the long, leisure evenings of winter, in many a farmhouse, while pleasant talk or profitable reading is taking place around a cheerful fire, the fingers of one or more could be fashioning the pliant twigs into forms of usefulness and beauty; and the product, if more than sufficient for home needs, would find a ready and remunerative market. Why should we send three thousand miles over the ocean for willow twigs when we can grow them as easily as we do corn? And why hire fingers in France or Germany to weave them into baskets for us when we can do the work equally well?—N. Y. Independent.

SAFE FEEDING.

The Most Desirable Condition of Breeding and Milking Animals.

A medium condition between fat and lean is the most desirable in which to keep cows, whether breeding or milking. In such a condition they are safer from attacks of parturial fever not only, but from every other disease, and in such a condition a cow will turn more of her food into milk than when fat, or growing fat, and more than when she is so thin that the demands for nourishment will stimulate assimilation instead of producing milk. In a herd kept so high that parturial fever is common, my advice would be to let the doctors keep their drugs and take off twenty-five per cent. of the rations, and see to it that the constituents of the food given are properly balanced in respect to nourishing and heat-producing qualities. Strong feed like peameal, cottonseed and linseed meal are too rich to be fed very liberally for some weeks previous to parturition, nor is it safe to indulge much in such heating food as corn meal.

Hay and straw with the waste of flouring mills and roots are more suitable, and these only in quantities necessary for support without having the animals gain or lose in condition. It is important to avoid food too poor as that which is too rich. To maintain the highest degree of health, always a point of great importance in all breeding animals, as well as in cows, it is not advisable to indulge much in such food as dead ripe straw, hay which had the goodness washed out of it by rain while curing, brewers' grains or glucose meal and the like, which have had all their soluble mineral constituents soaked out of them by steeping, or food of any kind in a state of fermentation or which has been fermented. Sound food in moderation with convenient access to good water, with reasonable care, will save from loss of cattle and from doctors' bills.—Prof. L. B. Arnold, in N. Y. Tribune.

Why Jews Live so Long.

The New England Medical Monthly comments very favorably on the proverbial long and healthful lives of the Jews. Dr. Picard holds that the superiority is due to their stringent health laws. The Mosaic, like the older Egyptian code, is very stringent regarding the eating of flesh and other articles of food. Of the animals examined a large proportion are always condemned as unfit for food. People who eat meat indiscriminately from every source have disorders of the blood and of the kidneys, for meat is composed of [illegible] matter which the kidneys have to remove from the blood, and of course they can not do this successfully except by the aid of Warner's safe cure, the best kidney strengthener, unless it is temperately used and the best meat is used. Jews also use alcoholic liquors very sparingly. They thus keep up good digestion, and they are a holiday-loving and Sabbath-observing class.—Household.

OVERWEIGHTED.

A Four-Story Building at Louisville

Gives Way, Killing Two Men—The Structure Afterward Destroyed by Fire.

LOUISVILLE, KY., January 8.—The fire bells sounded an alarm at five o'clock this afternoon in a furious snow-storm of wind and blinding snow, calling the department to a large double building at 823 and 825 West Main street, occupied by Trabue & Co., Balmforth and H. P. Forwood & Co., all cotton factors and commission merchants. The building, which was four stories high, was used jointly by these firms as a store-house for consignments of all sorts, but principally for cotton, of which there was about 700 bales packed away on the first, second and third floors. On the fourth floor there were 400 sacks of peanuts. On Tuesday Bamberger, Bloom & Co. packed 50 cases of heavy prints on the second floor and the presumption is that this heavy consignment caused the floor, which was already overweighted, to give way, forcing out the front walls and causing the entire building to fall in. The stove in the front part of the house set fire to the cotton, and in twenty minutes after the first crash the place was in a mass of raging flames. The firemen were at great disadvantages from the blinding storm, but by gallant work kept the fire from communicating to the adjoining buildings. The report rapidly spread that Messrs. J. M. Balmforth and H. M. Wright, who were in the front office had been buried beneath the ruins and were lost. Peter Perkins, a colored porter, who had just come in from the cellar, heard the floor cracking above and sprang toward the street-door, at the same time crying loudly to Mr. Balmforth to run. He was too late, however, for just as he sprang through the window and escaped into the street, with the debris falling all around him, that part of the building over the front office fell with a crash, burying both Mr. Balmforth and Colonel Wright under twenty bales of cotton that came down from above. The firemen have been unable to work in the ruins yet, and neither of the bodies have been discovered. Colonel Wright, who was a graduate of West Point and a brave Confederate soldier, leaves a large family in limited circumstances. He was employed as Superintendent of the concern, and was an expert on cotton. Mr. Balmforth was a well-known cotton factor and a man of wealth and prominence. He leaves an interesting family. Messrs. Richard Trabue and Trabue Barksdale, together with Mr. H. P. Forwood and a boot-black, were in Trabue's office, in the rear end of the building, when the front walls fell. They escaped by cutting their way out through the iron grating of a back window. It is thought that a negro truckman was buried in the ruins, but this report can not be verified. The building belongs to the estate of the late Charles Rufer, was valued at $30,000, and was fully insured. Nearly all of the supplies stored in the ware-house were insured, but in what companies can not be learned to-night. The total loss is about $140,000. Bamberger, Bloom & Co., as it happened, took out a policy on their consignment of prints at two o'clock this afternoon. The work of excavating the bodies of Messrs. Wright and Balmforth can not be begun until in the morning.

A TERRIBLE TRAGEDY.

A Crazy Michigan Doctor Kills His Whole Family and Then Commits Suicide.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH., January 8.—Neighbors noticing the absence of persons around Dr. Martin White's residence, in this city, broke into the house this afternoon and found the entire family with their throats cut from ear to ear. Dr. White and wife were lying upon the floor and the two children in bed. It is thought they have been dead since Sunday night, as they have not been seen since then. It is thought that he became insane and murdered his family. The room shows evidence of a terrible struggle between husband and wife. No other cause is known. Intense excitement prevails over the tragedy. The family consisted of White and wife and Bessie and May, aged 4 and 12 years respectively. Mrs. White was found by the side of the kitchen stove, dressed as she came from church, with a terrible cut on the chin and her throat cut. White lay in front of the stove with a great cut on his throat. Bessie was found up stairs on a bed with her throat cut, and on the floor lay May in a pool of blood, her throat cut from ear to ear and her head nearly severed from her body. The walls were spattered with blood. It is supposed that White took little Bessie upstairs, cut her throat, then called May up, had a struggle with her, waited for his wife to come home from church, struck her with an axe and cut her throat. White was a cousin of the White who was murdered in the Crouch slaughter near Jackson.

A Good Decision for Mexican Soldiers.

WASHINGTON, January 8.—The Second Comptroller of the Treasury has decided that Oliver Hayward, late Sergeant Second United States Artillery, is entitled to the three month's extra pay allowed the soldiers who served in the Mexican war. The Comptroller holds that the war with Mexico ended May 30, 1848, when ratifications of the treaty of Guadaloupe-Hidalgo were exchanged, and not, as heretofore held, on July 6, 1848, the date on which the War Department made official announcement of the same. Under this ruling all soldiers who served in that war and were not discharged until after May 30 are entitled to the benefits of the act of July 19, 1848, and February 19, 1879.

Prosecuting the Poor Gambler.

NEW YORK, January 8.—David C. Johnson, the gambler, has been arrested by the Sheriff in a suit begun against him by August Bernheim & Bener to recover about $60,000, embezzled by Frederick Fisbel, their defaulting bookkeeper.

Singular Accident to a Chicago Boy.

CHICAGO, January 8.—Julius Beck last evening was driving in company with his uncle, Ignatz Beck, down Blue Island avenue in a buggy, when the horse became frightened. It reared and plunged about, throwing Mr. Beck out. The horse then started to run for the viaduct, and on reaching it jumped the railing, taking buggy and boy along. The whole outfit landed thirty feet below in a coal-yard. Julius was very badly injured.

A Banker Convicted of Embezzlement.

ISHPEMING, MICH., January 8.—D. F. Wadsworth, an ex-banker of this place, was to-day convicted on his second trial of embezzlement in the sum of $60,000. Sentence was deferred.

Business Part of a Town Burned.

ST. LOUIS, MO., January 8.—The business portion of the town of Cuba, Mo., on the San Francisco Road, was almost entirely destroyed by fire yesterday. Two blocks were burned, and among the buildings are the Cuba Bank, Parks' Hotel, Newmans & Jones' general store, G. A. Cairns' billiard hall, the Blair Building, etc. The loss is about $50,000.

Three Dozen Mules Drowned.

ASHLAND, PA., January 8.—All the mules in the Preston mine, numbering thirty-six, were drowned yesterday. The water gained on the pumps so rapidly that the animals could not be rescued.

A Week's Failures.

NEW YORK, January 8.—The business failures occurring throughout the country during the last seven days number for the United States 316, and for Canada 20, or a total of 336, being the largest aggregate for any week since January, 1885. The casualties are exceptionally numerous in the Southern States.

Fearful Ravages of Small-Pox.

MONTREAL, January 8.—It is reported that in Assumption, a small village seventy miles from this city, there are sixty cases of small-pox. A dispatch from Balliduff, Ont., says there is an alarming outbreak of small-pox at that place.

BEATEN BY STRIKERS.

Non-Union Boxmakers at Chicago Suffer Terrible Treatment at the Hands of a Mob.

CHICAGO, January 7.—The strike in Maxwell Bros.' box factory is assuming a most serious aspect as the days elapse, and the strikers have several acts of violence laid at their doors. When the employes of the factory left last night, some of them received severe beatings, but this morning far more serious trouble took place. At 7:30 o'clock when eight of the non-Union men were on their way to work and had reached the corner of Blue Island Avenue and Eleventh street they were attacked by a crowd of the strikers. It was a wild turbulent mob of men and boys armed with sticks and stones. One of the non-Union men had also armed himself with a club. This was quickly taken from him and he was knocked down. The mob then got the eight men separated; five of them ran off, but three found themselves entirely surrounded by the furious crowd. William Morrison, one of them, was the first to feel the fury of the strikers and their sympathizers. He was felled to the ground by a blow from a club. A gash three inches in length was made on the top of his head and he was otherwise badly bruised. H. B. Owen, another employe, met with a similar fate and was brutally beaten about the head and face. B. Perry, the third employe, received the worst injuries. A long and deep gash was inflicted on the side of his head, and his face was pounded into a jelly. Perry was unable to walk without assistance. He was removed to a store near by and a number of stitches put in the side of his head.

NEW BILLS IN THE HOUSE.

Important Measures Introduced Under the Call of the States

WASHINGTON, January 7.—Immediately after the reading of the journal in the House the call of States was resumed, and the following were among the bills and resolutions introduced and referred: By Mr. Goff, of West Virginia—To repeal the internal revenue tax on tobacco. By Mr. Caswell, of Wisconsin—to levy a tax on oleomargerine, and to collect the same through the Internal Revenue Bureau. By Mr. Price, of Wisconsin—For the creation of a committee on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic. By Mr. Gifford, of Dakota—For the admission of the State of Dakota; also, for the appointment of two additional Justices of the Supreme Court of Dakota. By Mr. Voorhees, of Washington Territory—For the admission of the State of Washington; also to forfeit the unearned Northern Pacific land grants; also, to secure more efficient civil-service reform. By Mr. Anderson, of Kentucky—To prevent unjust discrimination by railroad commissioners, and to subject them to the control of States; also, prohibiting the use of railroad and other passes and telegraph franks by members of Congress and the judiciary; also, to reduce the rate of postage on drop-letters to one cent; also, to reduce the lifetime of a patent to seven years.

A BURGLAR'S HAUL.

Fourteen Hundred Dollars in Gold and Silver Coins Stolen from an Old Lady.

TIFFIN, O., January 7.—Burglars entered the residence of Elizabeth Day, a lady seventy years old, who lives entirely alone, about seven miles northwest of this city, and breaking open all the drawers in a bureau, stole gold coins of different nationalities, weighing five pounds avoirdupois, and silver weighing nine pounds, valued at about $1,400. The old lady slept up stairs and did not hear any noise. The money was kept in small canvas sacks, and was easily carried away. Mrs. Day was a very erratic old lady, and had the reputation of being rich and miserly, but not even her own sons knew of her possessing this money, which she had been hoarding for forty years. She is an old resident here, being the daughter of the first blacksmith in Seneca County. The robbery was committed on Sunday night, but was not reported by the old lady until late last night. There is no clue to the thieves. A man had been seen acting suspiciously in the neighborhood several times, but nobody knows or can describe him.

Parents in Name Only.

TORONTO, ONT., January 7.—An inquest which was concluded here late last night on the body of the fifteen months' old infant of John Crowe disclosed a terrible tale of inhumanity on the part of the little one's parents, who are a worthless degraded couple. The infant was frequently left alone in the house half starved. It had been frost bitten at times, and on more than one occasion was severely burned when left uncared for. Both its thighs were broken, its skull was fractured, its nose was knocked out of shape, and its body was covered with bruises. The father and mother have both been found guilty of manslaughter.

Cold Weather in the Northwest.

ST. PAUL, MINN., January 7.—A heavy snow storm and blizzard is reported to be raging throughout the Northwest. At Fergus Falls the thermometer is 15 degrees below zero and snow is badly drifting. At Mankato the blizzard has been raging for the past twelve hours, with the mercury 10 degrees below zero. Along the Northern Pacific Railroad the thermometer is reported as follows: Fargo, D. T., 20 degrees below; Carrington, 24 degrees; Glendive, Mont., 30 degrees; Billing's, Mont., 26 degrees; Helena, Mont., 28 degrees; Missoula, Mont., 10 degrees; St. Vincent, Manitoba, 35 degrees.

Why John Eggler is Being Boycotted.

ST. LOUIS, January 7.—John Eggler is the victim of a boycott by the Knights of Labor, and unless he can prevail upon the knights to withdraw their boycotting order he will have to withdraw from business. Eggler can get no one to rent his hall, can get few to patronize his bar, and can get no beer to sell over his counter, even if he had the customers to consume it. Eggler refused to let the St. Louis street-car drivers have his hall for a ball just after the dynamite fiends tried to blow up several cars loaded with women and children.

Buying Up Gas Lands.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 7.—Messrs. Bates, Holden and Smith, three Cleveland, O., capitalists, have leased five thousand acres of gas territory in Butler County, and are negotiating for ten thousand acres more in Hancock County, W. Va. It is their intention to construct a pipe line eighty miles long and convey the gas to Cleveland as soon as the right to enter the city is granted by Council.

Senator Sherman Renominated.

COLUMBUS, O., January 7.—The Republicans held a caucus to-night. Hon. John Sherman was renominated for U. S. Senator without a dissenting voice.

Amnesty to Mormons.

WASHINGTON, January 7.—The President has granted amnesty to Severen Jensen and a number of other Mormons apprehended but not convicted in Utah under the Edmunds law. This action is taken under the law of 1882, which authorized the President to pardon Mormons who desired to abandon polygamy, and the purpose of which was to encourage such abandonment.

Colored Man Drowned.

CAIRO, ILL., January 7.—M. Gladden, a prominent colored man, was drowned in Cache River yesterday. He tried to cross on a log and it turned with him.

Houses Engulfed.

SHENANDOAH, PA., January 7.—A cave-in occurred at Boston Run, near Mahanoy City, to-day, and a block of houses went down out of sight. The families living in the houses made a narrow escape. The surface is still caving, and five more blocks are expected to go down.

A Boy Lost in a Fire.

PHILADELPHIA, January 7.—A fire occurred this morning in the third story of No. 715 Sansom street and the adjoining house. A boy four years old, the son of Mrs. Hardin, the janitrix, perished in the flames. The financial loss is slight.

XLIXTH CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, January 6.—SENATE.—Mr. Hale spoke on a communication from the Postmaster General giving information called for about fourth-class postmasters recently appointed in Maine on the recommendation of Chairman Brown, of the Democratic Committee, who levied contributions from appointees and applicants. A number of bills were introduced. Mr. Gray called up Beck's resolution of inquiry regarding the payment of customs duties and bonds in coin, and spoke against further silver coinage although favoring the resolution. He was followed by Mr. McPherson in a similar strain. In the Utah bill Hoar's motion to strike out the section disfranchising the women of that Territory was lost—yeas 11, nays 37. Van Wyck's amendment to abolish the Utah Commission was also rejected. The debate went over until to-morrow. The Judicial salary bill was postponed until Monday next. Mr. Blair reported favorably the bill to aid in the establishment of common schools which was passed last session by the Senate. At 5:20 the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—The call of States for the introduction of bills was continued until all but two States and Territories had been passed. Eight hundred and eighty-two bills were introduced. The committees were not announced. Among the bills introduced were the following: To repeal the civil service act; also to make shareholders in National banks individually liable for the debts of the banks; also to retire trade dollars; also to regulate the removal of causes from State to Federal Courts; to restore the rates of duty on imported wool; to provide for the sale and disposal of the public lands; for the restoration of wages in the Government printing offices; to retire National bank notes and substitute therefor Treasury notes; also to facilitate the payment of the public debt and provide a uniform paper circulation; extending the letter-carrier service to cities of ten thousand inhabitants; also prohibiting the mailing of any newspaper or publication containing lottery advertisements; also to provide for the establishment of a postal telegraph system; directing the Secretary of the Treasury to call $10,000,000 three-per-cent. bonds, and pay them in coin of standard value as is specified in said bonds. The Speaker laid before the House a Senate joint resolution tendering thanks of Congress to the Governor and people of the State of Ohio for a statue of James A. Garfield, and accepting the same. On motion of Mr. E. B. Taylor, of Ohio, the resolution was laid on the table for the present.

WASHINGTON, January 7.—SENATE.—In the Senate a petition from West Point students who are to graduate in 1886 was transmitted through the Secretary of War praying that provisions may be made for their appointment to the army; also a petition from American artists in Rome praying for the abolition of the duty on works of art. The failure of the Washington street railways to pay taxes was discussed, and a resolution adopted to investigate the present and past administration of the Pension Office. The Utah bill was debated from 2 o'clock until 6:15 without concluding the discussion, when the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—In the House the call of States was resumed and concluded, when the committees were announced. After the reading of the list the House adjourned at 2:50 P. M. until Monday.

WASHINGTON, January 8.—SENATE.—Mr. Eustis offered a concurrent resolution reciting that in the opinion of Congress, the last bond call for ten millions should be redeemed in standard silver dollars. Referred to Finance Committee for early report. The resolution for the investigation of the Pension office went over until Monday. A resolution was adopted authorizing the District Committee to investigate the Washington street-railway management. The Edmunds Anti-Polygamy bill was taken up and after long debate passed, 38 to 7. The nays were Blair, Call, Gibson, Hampton, Hoar, Morgan and Vance. Adjourned at 5:50 p. m. until Monday.

HOUSE.—Not in session.

WASHINGTON, January 11.—SENATE.—A number of petitions for the suspension of the coinage of the standard dollar were presented. Senator Morgan offered a resolution against Governmental interference with religious bodies. The Committee on Territories reported a bill providing for the admission of Dakota into the Union, and for the organization of Northern Dakota into a Territory under the name of Lincoln. After a number of bills had been introduced, Mr. Manderson spoke upon the improvement of the army, and Senator Pugh criticised the President and Secretary Manning for their anti-silver recommendations, and opposed the suspension of standard dollar coinage. At 3:45 p. m. the Senate went into executive session, and at 5:20 p. m. adjourned.

HOUSE.—The called States brought 650 additional bills to the 3,000 already presented. Among them were the following: Authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to fit out an expedition to observe the total eclipse of the sun on August 29, 1886. Also, to provide for a new naval observatory. To prohibit aliens from acquiring title to, or owning lands within the United States. To divide the Territory of Dakota, and to create a Territory of Lincoln. A proposition was submitted for the appointment of a select committee of nine members, to be called the Committee on Internal Revenue, with authority to investigate the workings and details of the internal revenue laws, and to report measures touching their repeal or amendment. The Speaker then called the committees for reports, but with the exception of the Judiciary Committee, which reported two or three private bills, there was no response to the call.

Agriculture in Germany.

WASHINGTON, January 11.—Consul Dittmer, at Breslau, Germany, has made a report to the Department of State relative to agricultural labor. He states that the laborer usually lives upon the estate, and is employed upon it the year round. The working hours are, in summer, from 6 a. m. to 7 p. m., and in winter, from sunrise to sunset. He is given free lodging and free fuel, and it is customary also to allow his family the use of 100 square rods of land for raising vegetables. As direct wages he receives, per annum, from $19 to $23.80 in cash, and 24 bushels of rye, 3 bushels of barley, 3 bushels of peas and 1½ bushels of wheat. The laborer's wife is bound to work in the field whenever required, and receives for a day's work in summer 12 to 14 cents, and in winter 10 to 12 cents. A writer on economic subjects figures that a laborer's family, consisting of himself, wife and five children under twelve years, can subsist for $1.09¼ a week, or $57 a year. Consul Dittmar also gives a tabular statement of the wages paid to miners and mine laborers, showing that they receive daily from 5½ cents (which is paid to foremen, engineers and carpentors) to 18 1-2 and 15 cents paid to women and miners. The average cost of the subsistence of a miner's family, including rent, clothing and taxes, amounts to $122.82 per annum. The rents paid by miners range from 36 cents to $1.19 per month. The Consul at Brunswick, Germany, Mr. Fox, transmits a report on agricultural labor in the Duchy of Brunswick. In the level country the wages of a man and wife aggregate $194.30 per annum, while in the mountainous districts a man and his wife, assisted by a child, earn but $184.93. In the District of Walfenbuttelle the labor receives a cash wage entirely of 25c per day, summer and winter; working time, 5 to 11 A. M., and 1 to 6 P. M. Women are paid 19c for the same time. A man will earn from 59 1-2c to 71c per diem mowing, and a woman from 29c to 35c for gathering behind the scythe. Men and women both earn from 35c to 47c per day hoeing and from 47c to 59c gathering beets.

—According to the Bulletin of the Geographical Society, of Marseilles, which is good authority, there are only 300,000 Jews in America. Making allowance for women and children, there are probably not more than 60,000 men. Yet these 60,000 men control more than half of the dry-goods, clothing, boot and shoe manufacturing and banking business done in America. In fact, there is no line of business excepting agriculture, that the Jews are not largely represented in.

—Over in England in a great house thirty or forty servants is no unusual number, and when there is a house party as many as one hundred are often assembled, for each guest brings his own servant, and the various valets and maids, the extra coachmen and grooms, make up a company that rivals the array in the drawing-room for pretension and pride; for all those—especially the upper servants—must be placed according to the rank of their masters.

FIGHT WITH FUGITIVES.

Desperate Prisoners Escape From Jail and Seek Security in a Swamp—One Captured After Being Wounded and Nearly Frozen.

WAYNESBORO, GA., January 10.—A special guard has just returned from the swamp on the Savannah River with Jerry Traver, one of the escaped prisoners, who was badly wounded in the effort to capture him. The escape from jail took place at 4 o'clock, Wednesday morning. A fire was kindled in the second floor, and a hole burned through, by which the prisoners escaped down stairs. By means of an iron bar the front door was broken open. Wm. Garvin, the murderer of Bill Hankinson, was heavily ironed with a chain around his neck and made fast to the center of his cell. This was broken, and Garvin carried his necklace and chain with him. Garvin is the man who, some weeks ago, after killing his victim, took the body, ironed, and endeavored to sink it in the current of the Savannah River. Deputy Sheriff Zorn, as soon as he learned of the escape, summoned a posse and went in pursuit last night. He found Wm. Garvin and several of his companions camping in the woods on the Savannah River, near the scene of his murderous act, about thirty miles from this place. An attack was made, and Mr. Zorn was badly shot with bird shot in the leg and foot. The officers bravely made all efforts to secure Garvin, but failed, the night being dark and the woods being too thick to make an effectual following of the fugitives. This morning Tarver was arrested almost frozen to death, and bleeding from wounds inflicted the night before. The swamp is in a bend of the river, which is guarded on the land side by officers, and as the Savannah is swollen above its banks Garvin can not escape, but will probably be frozen to death.

WAS IT SUPERNATURAL?

Strange Occurrences Coincident With a Death in the Next Room.

CLEVELAND, O., January 10.—At about 3 o'clock last Friday morning, Mrs. Emily Frayne, a widow, of Hamilton, Ont., who had come to Cleveland to visit her sister, who resides in a block on Prospect street, died very suddenly. Frank Lumb, a fresco-painter, aged 33, who occupies apartments adjoining those in which Mrs. Frayne died, relates a remarkable story. He says that between 2 and 3 o'clock on the morning in question he was awakened by something and looking across the room he saw a lady sitting on a lounge about four feet from the bed. "What do you want?" he asked. Raising her right hand the lady said, "Hush, hush," and then she disappeared. Lumb is a disbeliever in ghosts, and he at once made a search of the room and examined the lock of the door. He found that the door was securely fastened, and getting into bed he lay for ten minutes thinking about the strange occurrence. Suddenly the clothing of his bed and the tick were tumbled off by some unseen power, and he found himself on the floor. Being angry by this time, Lumb made another search of the room, without finding anybody. He then opened the door, and as he did so Mrs. Hodden, the sister of Mrs. Frayne, came from the room into the hall, saying, "My sister is dead." Lumb declares that he was not excited and that he was perfectly sober. He can not account for the strange occurrence. Other people in the block who heard Lumb fall also left their rooms, and they corroborate his story as to the coincidence of his fall with Mrs. Frayne's death. The Coroner has decided that the woman's death was caused by heart disease.

Four Railroad Workmen Drowned.

MEMPHIS, TENN., January 10.—At 10 o'clock yesterday forenoon a negro skiffman, while conveying six men from the Arkansas side of the river to Memphis, was swept by the current at the foot of Market street against some coal flats anchored there. In the confusion which ensued the skiff capsized, and four white men and the colored skiffman drowned. Patrick Block, of Dallas County, Tex., and Walter Brashey, a printer, from Waco, Tex., were rescued. The men who were drowned had been employed as section hands on the Memphis and Little Rock Railroad, under foreman John Shea, at Buttermilk Section, forty-two miles this side of Little Rock. They had time checks with them, and were coming to Memphis for their pay. Their names could not be learned, and the colored skiffman's name is unknown.

The Judge Made Law to Suit the Case.

OGDEN, UTAH, January 10.—T. B. Gray was convicted yesterday, in the First District Court, of attempted abortion. The proof showed that Gray had seduced his step-daughter when she was twelve years old, and had been sexually intimate with her for four years. He claimed the girl seduced him, and denied administering drugs. The jury all voted guilty on the first ballot. Judge Powers sentenced him to the penitentiary for ten years, calling attention, in passing sentence, to the fact that there is no law in this Territory against seduction, adultery or incest.

Two Freight Trains Collide.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., January 10.—A collision of two sections of a freight train on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, at the Flint River Bridge, in Alabama, caused a collapse of the bridge, which was undergoing repairs, and an engine and twenty-two went down. Eighteen cars were burned. Of the men, John Johnson was drowned. Henry Belela was burned to death and W. D. Johnson fatally burned, and others seriously so. Conductor Harris swam the almost frozen river to flag an approaching passenger train.

The Blizzard.

CINCINNATI, January 10.—The "blizzard" dominates the whole country, freezing weather existing even in Florida. The lowest temperature reported is 52 degrees in Manitoba. There is no report of any great fall of snow, but drifts have blocked railway traffic in the Northwest, the intense cold preventing their removal.

Six Boys Buried Under a Fallen Wall.

MOBILE, ALA., January 10.—This afternoon, while a crowd of boys and negroes were searching the ruins of the burned block, a wall thirty feet high fell, burying six persons. Howard Hall, aged twelve years, was taken out dead. Wyatt Hall, aged nine years, brother of Howard, had his skull injured and his hip broken. Both boys are sons of Howard Hall, superintendent of the Seaboard Manufacturing Company's establishment. John L. Still, a newsboy, thirteen years of age, was badly hurt; Willie Covington, aged twelve years, was injured, but not seriously; John Glass, aged fourteen was slightly hurt. A colored man was buried to the hips, but escaped with a few bruises.

Cable Cars to Capture the St. Louis Lines.

ST. LOUIS, January 10.—There is considerable talk that the Western Cable Motor Company, which is building a cable street railroad here, will organize what is to be known as the Traction Company, for the purpose of buying or leasing of the present horse railroads and turning them into cable companies.

A Million Dollar Fire.

PHILADELPHIA, January 10.—The extensive mill buildings in Kensington, known as Arnott's Mills and Beatty's Mills, occupying two blocks, bounded by Emerald, Letterly, Taylor and Coral streets, and separated by Adams street, were destroyed by fire this morning, involving a loss estimated at $1,000,000.

A Child's Long Journey Unaccompanied.

NEWARK, N. J., January 10.—Ten-year-old Katie Erb started hence alone for Cheyenne to-night, having a tag attached to her clothing giving her name and destination. Her mother is a notorious woman, and her father is in Cheyenne. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children took her in charge, and wrote to her father, who sent money to pay her way to him.

Italy Afraid of Florida Oranges.

ROME, January 10.—The Ministry of Commerce has received a consignment of American oranges and lemons from the Italian Consul at New York, and has been sampling the fruit with the view of ascertaining the chances of American competition affecting the exportation of oranges and lemons from Italy.

THOMAS DOWLING, at Newport, one of the newly-appointed letter-carriers, has become sick of his job on account of the large territory he has to travel over twice a day. He has given up his position and a successor will be appointed to take his place. The present force is entirely too small for the size of the city, and the Postmaster will have the force increased as soon as possible.

IN the Circuit Court at Henderson the trial of William Matthews for the murder of George Bradley in 1878, ended by the jury returning a verdict of guilty and sentencing him to the penitentiary for five years.

GEORGE W. KINDER, who was convicted in the U. S. Court at Louisville, two years ago, for counterfeiting, and sent to the Detroit Prison, from whence he was sent to the asylum at Washington, and pardoned by President Cleveland, died in his father's arms at Lexington while being taken off the train en route to his home in Lincoln County.

THE Commonwealth's portion of all fines remitted by Governor Knott during 1885 was but $10,399, an average of only $88.12 per county, instead of $1,000 per county, as stated by a recent writer.

J. C. FENTON, postmaster at High Grove, was put in lock for refusing to turn over the office to his successor, W. F. McCormack.

AT Louisville, Edward Doty and William Catlett, colored boys of twelve years, were convicted in the Circuit Court of detaining Jennie Mayfield, a light mulatto nine years old, against her will, and were sentenced to seven years each in the Penitentiary.

MRS. GEORGE BECK, of Newport, while temporarily deranged, made an unsuccessful attempt at suicide by jumping into a cistern, the other day. Some neighbors, attracted by the noise, fished her out more dead than alive, but by prompt attention she was brought around all right.

Proceedings of the Legislature.

FRANKFORT, January 2.—SENATE—The Senate was in session only twenty minutes this morning, and nothing of interest was done. A few leaves were introduced, but none of importance, except a "bill to regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquors in this Commonwealth," which proposes to change and simplify the whole system now governing the whole matter. It defines a dram-shop to be "a place where spirituous, vinous, malt, ardent and intoxicating liquors, or any or either of them or any mixture thereof, are retailed in quantities less than a quart." "A wholesale liquor merchant is a person permitted by law, being licensed as such according to the provisions of this act, to traffic in spirituous, vinous, malt, ardent and intoxicating liquors, or any or either of them or any mixture thereof, in quantities not less than ten gallons." It requires a bond of $3,000 from retail liquor dealers, as a security for all fines that may be assessed against them, and allows the relatives of a known inebriate to recover damages of a saloon-keeper who gives or sells him liquor. It does not repeal in any way the "Local Option" Act of 1874. Senator Dixon, of Henderson, is the father of the bill.

HOUSE—Not in session.

FRANKFORT, January 4.—SENATE.—The Senate was presided over this morning by Senator Martin, of Cynthiana, in the absence of Lieutenant-Governor Hindman, who is quite ill. Among other leaves introduced were the following: A bill to repeal the act establishing the State Board of Equalization; a bill to suppress the sale of pistols and other firearms in this Commonwealth; a bill to prohibit the playing of base ball in this State on Sunday; a bill to establish a State Board of Public Charities, after the manner suggested by the Governor in his message.

HOUSE.—The first business in the House this morning was the offering of a resolution by Mr. Straus, of Bullitt, requesting the Committee on Circuit Courts to bring in a bill to redistrict the judicial districts in this State, and it was voted down by a large majority. Mr. Spalding, from the Committee on Rules, reported a set of rules for the government of the House, and also joint rules for the government of both House and Senate. They are substantially the same as the rules adopted at former sessions, except as to the introduction of bills. The new rules permit bills to be introduced only on Wednesdays and Saturdays of each week. Over an hour was occupied in reading the report, and only one or two unimportant amendments were made, and the report was adopted. The hour of assembling was fixed at ten o'clock, and adjournment at half-past one.

FRANKFORT, January 6.—SENATE.—A bill was introduced to establish a Board of Railroad Commissioners; also amend the General Statutes so that the cost of maintaining pauper lunatics and idiots shall not be borne by the State, but by the respective counties in which these pauper idiots belong; also to regulate and equalize the jurisdiction of quarterly, police and justice's courts in the State of Kentucky. The remainder of the bills introduced were local and private in their nature.

HOUSE.—Mr. Offutt, of Bourbon, presented a bill providing for calling a convention to tend the constitution, and also to ascertain the number of voters within the State entitled to vote for Representatives. The bill is in nine sections. The first says that at the next general election for Representative of the General Assembly it shall be the duty of the several Sheriffs and other officers of election to open a poll and to make a return to the Secretary of State of all citizens entitled to vote who have voted at said election for calling a convention to amend the constitution. The second section provides that any Sheriff failing to fulfill these duties shall be subjected to a fine of $500. The third section says that the Sheriffs and other officers of election shall, in August, 1887, provide a registration book, in which shall be recorded the names of all persons entitled to vote for Representative at said election. The fourth section says that it shall be the duty of said officer of election to propound to each voter the question: "Do you vote for calling a convention or not?" and his vote shall be recorded according to his answer. The fifth section says that the officers of election shall, within thirty days after said election, file the election books in the office of the Secretary of State, who, on the convening of the next General Assembly, shall transmit to each House how many votes were cast at said election in favor of a Constitution and how many were cast against it, and also the total number of citizens within the State entitled to vote for Representative. The sixth section provides that any officer failing to perform the duties laid down in the third, fourth and fifth sections shall be fined $500. The seventh, eighth and ninth are merely for the purpose of seeing that the other provisions are carried out.

FRANKFORT, January 7.—SENATE.—The members discussed a resolution for the appointment of pages, and listened to a two hours' speech against time by Mr. Berry, of Newport.

HOUSE.—Mr. Cline offered the following joint resolution: "Whereas, A reduction of the general expenses is necessary in order that the present rate of taxation may meet the current expenses of the State and supply means to meet the deficit in the Treasury, therefore, be it Resolved, by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, That the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform be instructed to prepare and bring in a bill stopping all unnecessary strains upon the treasury, also reducing and regulating the fees and salaries of all whose fees and salaries are regulated by the General Assembly." Lies over one day. A resolution was offered requesting the Auditor of Public Accounts to furnish an itemized statement of the expenses incurred in organizing, arming and equipping the several companies of the State Guards. Referred. Mr. Sharon's resolution in regard to the appointment of a committee to visit, investigate, and ascertain the needs of the feeble-minded institution, came up; referred to the Committee on Charitable Institutions. Senate resolution requiring the State Geologist to report a detailed statement of moneys expended by him, under Chapter 877, general laws of 1883-4, was reported and a defect in the resolving clause was amended.

FRANKFORT, January 8.—SENATE.—Bills were introduced to co-operate with the General Government to extirpate the cattle disease, to provide a whipping-post for wife beaters, and to incorporate the Masonic Temple Association of Newport.

HOUSE.—A resolution was adopted calling upon the State Auditor for information relative to the payment of pro tem. attorneys for the State in 1884 and 1885. In Caucus Mrs. Virginia Hanson was nominated for State Librarian, and Dr. John D. Woods for State Printer.

Miscellaneous Items.

DR. H. K. PUSEY, Superintendent of the Central Asylum at Anchorage, has utilized several spring branches and brooklets, fresh from the fountains in the extensive surrounding slopes, by making them create a clear, beautiful lake, which covers seven acres of ground, and will finally have an area of ten acres. It is twenty feet deep in places and contains 20,000,000 gallons of clear and comparatively fresh water. Dr. Pusey has made this contribution to the asylum grounds by constructing a formidable-looking dam across a convenient ravine.

Two children of the family of Martin Lewis, in Millersburg, have been attacked with trichinae spiralis from eating raw pork. The balance of the family are expected to become attacked also, as all ate of the same meat.

ON a road in Wolfe County, three ruffians attempted to capture Miss Sallie Van Cleve from her father the other day. The young woman beat off the leading assailant with a hickory stick, and her father nearly severed his head with a blow from his knife. The scoundrels then fled into the brush.

CAPTAIN T. N. FINNELL, a veteran Kentucky whisky gauger, died at Georgetown a few days ago.

SENATOR SMITH, of Louisville, will introduce in the Senate a bill providing for the creation of a State Board of Charities, composed of three persons to be appointed by the Governor, who is to be ex officio Chairman of the Board. The bill is modeled after the Illinois law.

AT a party in Clay County the other night, Dan and George Gray, Sam Bauge and Dink Stivers engaged in a fight, in which Dan Gray, Stivers and Benge were killed, and George Gray fatally wounded. Three years ago Stivers and his brother waylaid and shot Dan Gray near the same place where this tragedy occurred, which is the cause of the trouble.

SILVER AND GOLD.

Statistics of the Production of Gold and Silver in the Various States During 1885.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—The Vice-President and General Manager of the Wells & Fargo Company, Mr. John J. Valentine, has issued his annual statement of production of precious metals covering the last calendar year. It shows that the States and Territories west of the Missouri River, including British Columbia and receipts by express from the west coast States of Mexico, produced as follows: Gold, $27,290,294; silver, $46,489,939; copper, $7,838,036; lead, $8,562,991; total, $90,181,260. California leads, of course, in the production of gold, the total for the year having been approximately $12,338,000. Colorado follows with $2,653,000, Dakota stands third and very close to Colorado, with $2,606,623; Montana is fourth, with $2,091,000; Nevada fifth, with $1,253,355, and Idaho sixth, with $1,105,946. No other State or Territory produced quite three-quarters of a million. Colorado stands at the head in the production of silver, with $18,719,000. Next comes Montana, $12,133,512; next Utah, $8,893,372; next Nevada, $7,959,766; next Arizona, $5,748,720. California produced $2,698,658. The largest product of gold in the territory covered by these returns since 1870 was $44,880,223 in 1877. The silver product for the same year was $45,846,109, which was exceeded only in 1882, when the product was $48,133,039.

NORTHWEST INDIANS.

The Canadian Government Warned of a Threatened Uprising of Savages.

MONTREAL, Can., Jan. 8.—The Government has received urgent and earnest warnings from army officers and the best-informed priests in the Northwest that another Indian outbreak is imminent; that the Blackfeet, Bloods and Crees are defiant; that they go about levying blackmail in the shape of provisions and supplies; that they believe Riel's rebellion only failed through lack of ammunition, with which they are now plentifully supplied; that the Indians are chafing at being cooped up on their reserves, and that unless the force there is largely augmented another and bloody outbreak is only a question of a short time. The special adds that the Government now realizes the gravity of the situation, and is taking measures looking to an increase of the force in the Northwest.

J. Clinskill, a merchant of Battleford, N. W. T., has left for Ottawa to impress upon the authorities there the necessity of taking proper precautions to prevent an Indian uprising. He says that the Indians are enraged because of the execution of the eight Indians in November, and are making all sorts of threats.

The Hill-Terry Wedding.

STOCKTON, Cal., Jan. 8.—David S. Terry, ex-Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of California, and Miss Sarah Althea Hill, claiming to be the widow of ex-Senator Sharon, of Nevada, were married in the parsonage of the Catholic Church shortly before ten o'clock yesterday morning. Father O'Connor, of St. Mary's Church, performed the ceremony. The only other person present was the groomsman, State Treasurer Oulahan, Miss Hill having decided to dispense with bridemaids.

The marriage following the decision of the United States Court that Miss Hill never was the wife of Senator Sharon, has given rise to the opinion that it was planned some time ago. And so it has come about that her suit resulted in the securing of a legal husband and a comfortable home. And thus ends the story of the most romantic law-suit in the records of California.

Left Destitute and Then Murdered.

WEST SARATOGA, Ill., Jan. 8.—J. W. Wilson, a shoe-maker and a loafer, separated from his wife, leaving her with seven children in a destitute condition. Yesterday afternoon about two o'clock he reappeared, after an absence of six weeks. Three neighbors were at the house, replenishing Mrs. Wilson's wood-pile as an act of charity. Wilson knew them and spoke to all three. He then walked into the house, and without a word began shooting at his wife. She started to run, but fell dead at the threshold. Wilson was arrested.

The New French Cabinet.

PARIS, Jan. 8—The new Cabinet was announced in the Official Gazette yesterday afternoon. It is as follows:

M. De Freycinet, President of the Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs; M. Sarrien, Minister of the Interior; M. Sadi Carnot, Minister of Finance; M. Goblet, Minister of Public Instruction; M. Demole, Minister of Justice; M. Develle, Minister of Agriculture; General Boulanger, Minister of War; M. Aube, Minister of Marine and the Colonies; M. Brabant, Minister of Public Works; M. Granet, Minister of Posts and Telegraphs; M. Lockroy, Minister of Commerce.

Within a few weeks wheat has dropped seven cents per bushel, and small dealers in Minnesota and Dakota anticipate that they will be "frozen out."

GRANT county has fifteen candidates for county offices.

ALLEN G. THURMAN was selected umpire between miners and coal operators in Ohio, and decided in favor of the miners, which places the pay for mining at 60 cents a ton.

THERE were 336 failures in the United States and Canada reported to R. G. Dun & Co., of the mercantile agency, New York, during last week, being the largest aggregate for any week since January, 1885.

A LONDON dispatch says: "The number of people who emigrated from England to the United States in 1885 show a decrease, as compared with 1884, of 10,000, and a decrease of 9,000 in the number who emigrated to Canada, and an increase of 9,000 in the emigration from Ireland to the United States and of 2,000 from Ireland to Canada."

THE residents along a lumber flume in the mountains above Chico, Cal., have a novel way of getting their mail. It is started on a raft from the head of the flume at regular dates, and the people below watch for it, take out what belongs to them and then send the raft with its precious cargo on the way.

DURING the past fiscal year there has been an increase of 22,369 on the government pension list. This increase has occurred, notwithstanding the fact that 15,233 pensioners were dropped during the year. The roll of pensioners now contains 350,000 names, and these are paid, each year, more than $38,000,000, or on an average of $110 a head.

THE County Superintendent of schools has prepared, and will send to Hon. Reuben Conner for passage by the Legislature, a bill which if it become a law will authorize payment of the teachers of public schools each month. It will require the teacher to obtain from the trustees certificates at the close of each month that he has taught a month, upon which authority the Superintendent will draw on the Sheriff for the month's wages. It is a move in the right direction, but it is altogether doubtful if it meets with favor in the Legislature. It is more than probable that the Superintendent of Public Instruction will oppose its passage.

THE Washington Star says that in his report upon the work of the special Indiana committee who visited the various reservations during the summer recess of Congress, Mr. Holman is going to recommend the appointment of a commission to take the matter in charge, giving land in severalty to such of the Indians as are far enough advanced in civilization to warrant such action, and assembling the rest in one locality as far as practicable. At present, he says the reservations are scattered all over the country, and their lands are useless to the Indians in many cases. Some of these lands should be sold in their interest, and such of the Indians as are friendly should be put upon the same reservation in certain cases, and kept there until, ultimately, they have reached that state of civilization that would warrant their having lands in severalty and becoming citizens. There are some cases where it would not do to move the Indians from their present localities or interfere with them, as their attachment to their homes is very strong. In most cases land in severalty should be given to them.

SENATOR MARTIN, of Harrison county, has introduced a bill in relation to infectious and contagious diseases. It is in nine sections.

The first section provides that whenever and infectious or contagious disease shall break out among the cattle of the State, it shall be the duty of the State Board of Health to suppress the same.

The second section provides that in case of such outbreak in any cattle herd, that herd shall be secluded from all others, and other herds that have been similarly exposed shall be treated in like manner. The State Board of Health shall be authorized to call upon the Sheriff and Deputy Sheriffs to assist in carrying out such regulations. The board shall also employ a veterinary surgeon and practitioner from time to time, as it may be necessary, to assist in carrying out its instructions. This section also says that the board shall provide for the disinfection of all buildings, railway cars and other objects which may have been exposed to the infection

The third section provides that any person transgressing said rules shall be considered as having committed a misdemeanor, and shall be subject to a fine of not less than $200 and not more than $1,000. Also, that when the Board shall instruct the owner of infected cattle to kill them and he does not do it, the Board shall see that the cattle are destroyed.

The fourth section provides that any person who shall knowingly bring into the State cattle infected with pleuro-pneumonia shall be confined in the penitentiary not less than one and not more than four years.

The fifth section provides that any owner of infected cattle who has them driven upon the public highway shall be fined not less than $200 and nor more than $1,000.

The sixth section says that the State Board of Health shall provide a veterinarian, and he shall be paid by the State.

The seventh section is substantially the same as the above. The eighth provides that the Governor of the State shall appoint three housekeepers to act as members of the Board of Health, to receive no salary and to have their duties confined to the subject of pleuro-pneumonia.

The ninth section says the act shall go into effect from its passage.

At a meeting of the Democratic Executive Committee of Boone county, held in the Court-house in Burlington, Ky., on Monday, December 7th, 1885, it was ordered.

That a Democratic primary election be held in the several voting precincts in Boone county, on the first Saturday in April 1886, between the hours of 8 o'clock a. m., and 7 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating Democratic candidates for Circuit Clerk, County Judge, County Clerk, County Attorney, Assessor, Jailer, County Superintendent, Surveyor and Coroner.

That the qualification of voters shall be the same as those specified in the call of the district committee, which is as follows: "That no one shall be eligible to vote at said election except those who are and will be entitled to a vote at the August election 1886, according to the laws of the State, and who are identified with the Democratic party, and who if voting at the November election, 1884, voted for the Democratic Electors for President and Vice-President."

That the Democratic voters of the county may have the privilege in voting for the county offices alone, to to express a first and second choice when there are more than two candidates for one office, so that before the board to count the votes the hindmost candidate shall be dropped and those votes cast for said hindmost candidate expressing a second choice, said second choice shall be counted as first choice for the candidate so named.

That the clerks of the several voting precincts together with the chairman of the Democratic County Committee shall constitute a Board to compare poll-books and count the vote, and shall, upon ascertaining who has received a majority of the votes cast for the respective offices, declare said candidate the regular Democratic nominee for said office. Said Board shall meet at the courthouse in Burlington, at 1 o'clock the following Monday, April 5, 1886.

That the clerks appointed in the several precincts, prepare the poll-books to include both district and county candidates, and at the close of the polls, shall duly certify seal and deliver to the chairman of the Executive Committee of the county, on the day named in sec. 4.

That a list of the officers of the election shall be published in the Boone County RECORDER the first week of said paper's publication after the first Monday in March, 1886, and said officers shall consist of two judges and a clerk, and in case of anyone failing to serve who has been selected any good Democrat present may be selected to fill the vacancy.

Done by order of the committee.

N. S. WALTON, T. F. CURLEY,
J. W. KENNEDY, J. A. WILSON,
J. G. FURNISH, Committee.

C. J. NORWOOD, the Inspector of Mines for Kentucky, has made a report to the Governor of his work for the two years since the creation of the office. This work affords an instance of the necessity for new laws and new institutions continually arising from the growth of the State in various directions. The report gives 1870 as the date of the beginning of coalmining as an important industry in this State, the output prior to that time having depended chiefly upon local demands. In that year it is estimated that less than 170,000 tons of coal were mined, while in 1884 seventy-six mines yielded 1,538,254 tons. The large increase is due to the improved facilities afforded by the railroads built since 1870, which are the Chesapeake Ohio and Southwestern, the Cincinnati Southern, the Knoxville branch of the Louisville & Nashville, and much of the Chesapeake & Ohio not to mention some short lines of coal roads tributary to these. Yet Mr. Norwood deems the coal-mining industry in this State yet in its infancy. "The proportions of Kentucky coal used in Louisville, compared with the total amount annually consumed there—from 500,000 to 600,000 tons—is small; much smaller than is justified by the relative merits of the various coals shipped to that market." The demand here is growing, however, the predjudice against Kentucky coal having been due to the inferior specimens at first sent from the mines. The amount of Kentucky coal brought into Louisville over 2 railroads increased from 3,000 tons in 1883 to 97,000 tons in 1884, and Mr. Norwood thinks that much larger figures will be shown for 1885. About 4,500 persons are given employment in the coal mines, and $1,500,000 is put in circulation annually through them.—Louisville Commercial.

THERE is a surplus of nearly forty thousand dollars in the treasury of Hardin county, resulting from good management of the sinking fund formed to liquidate the railroad debt. It is the desire of the citizens that this shall be set apart as a permanent school fund for the benefit of the county. Auditor Hewitt offers a suggestion as to how this may best be done. It is that by an act of the Legislature the money be paid into the State treasury, the Auditor to be required to pay annually 6 per cent interest on the same. Such an act, the Auditor thinks, could be passed without any trouble. The funds thus invested would be safe as United States bonds, and there would be no cost attached to handling the money.—Commercial.

STATE NEWS.

There is some talk of starting a bank at Ghent.

Tobacco is very low—so low that farmers are receiving but few offers on their crops.—Robertson Tribune.

Latonia Jockey Club sold its pool privileges for spring and fall races to C. H. White & Co., of Lexington, for $34,800.

Buyers are offering, in many instances, two or three dollars less than the producers are willing to take for their tobacco—Owen News.

W. A. Seobee, of Montgomery county, sold 325 barrels of corn at $2 delivered, and 500 shocks of fodder at fifteen cents in the field.

Ex-State Auditor D. Howard Smith has been commissioned a storekeeper by Collector Cox. Col. Smith was an applicant for the Collector's place.

There were sold at public sale during 1885, in Fayette county, 374 yearlings; 188 colts, and 186 fillies. The 374 head brought $261,202, an average of $698.40 per head.

Asbury Crisp, who shot and dangerously wounded Craig Tolliver, the notorious desperado, about ten days ago, was captured in Scioto county, Ohio. He will be taken to Elliott county, Ky.

R. S. Ratliff, a wealthy farmer living six or eight miles from Owingsville, this State, held a reunion one day last week, at which each of the six children was presented with a check for $5,000.

In answer to Gov. Knott's allusion to a depleted State Treasury, a "Citizen" of the State says if the remission of fines were stopped there would not be an empty treasury. He says fines to the amount of $1,000 were remitted by the Governor and his predecessors in his own county. Now there are 118 counties in the State, and if they hold up as well as the county of "Citizen," there would be $118,000 in the State Treasury.

The longest headed man in the Kentucky Legislature, Old Phil. Thompson, said to an interviewer: "Our jury system certainly needs overhauling. At present it is a farce. I hope by the end of this session the law may be so amended as to make it possible for an intelligent gentleman to serve on a jury. I am tired of seeing men who read newspapers excluded from the jurybox." If the old man can effect such a change he will not have lived on turkey brains in vain, and a grateful country will rise up and do him honor.—Stanford Journal.

The Brooksville Democrat is rather severe on Collector Davison for passing by Bracken county in giving out appointments, and suggests, as Kenton and Campbell county Democrats seem to be the only person Mr. Davison thinks worthy of appointments in the revenue service, that the Democrats of Bracken entirely ignore in the future any candidate for office hailing from Kenton or Campbell. This would look like proscribing a community because one man in it has not done his duty. Mr. Davison has ignored other Democrats besides those of Bracken, and if he was running now for office, he would not get many votes in several of the counties of the district, if one would listen to the malcontents. But we see no good to result from unjust criticism. We have faith in true Democrats, and advise the boys to wait "wait for the wagon, and we'll all take a ride."—Milton Press.

In this impression we announce Esq. M. C. Norman, of the Union district, as a candidate for the office of County Judge, subject to the action of the Democratic primary election. Mr. Norman is a man of mature years, and possessed of fine mind. His neighbors have manifested their confidence in him by repeatedly electing him to the office of Justice of the Peace. If elected Mr. Norman will make a good Judge.

He Accepts.

UNION, KY., Jan. 7th, 1886.

S. T Johnson, Esq., and others,

GENTLEMEN:—In response to your call in the columns of the RECORDER upon me to become a candidate for the office of County Judge of Boone county, I am compelled to say that the honor you seek to confer upon me was unsolicited and is, I fear, undeserved. But, coming as it does from so many gentlemen in whose judgment I confide, and whose favor I appreciate, I feel that I am not at liberty to decline, and, gentlemen, if I shall be elected, I trust that no act of mine, official or other, shall ever reflect discredit upon you or myself. And I shall to the best of my ability endeavor to discharge the duties pertaining to the office, honestly, faithfully and impartially.

Most respectfully your obedient servant,

M. C. NORMAN.

The cold wave struck this latitude last Friday about midnight and by Saturday morning the temperature had descended to zero, with a stiff wind blowing, and the snow penetrating every nook and corner. Saturday was one of the most disagreeable days known to this section for a long time, and was particularly severe on stock which was exposed. Sunday dawned bright and clear, with the mercury 10 to 13 degrees below zero. Unless compelled, no one ventured out during the day. Early risers Monday morning found the temperature still further reduced, and at a point four degrees further down the scale. Tuesday morning was somewhat warmer, but not so much as to create a demand for linen dusters and straw hats. Taking it all in all we are now about convinced that winter is not an entire failure—aint you?

Geo. W. Titley, an old citizen of this county, died at the Poor-house Wednesday night of last week. Mr. Titley was a very popular painter in this county for many years previous to being stricken by old age, and besides being a fine mechanic in his branch of business, he was a man who stood high for honesty and truthfulness. Although he leaves three sons, John, Dill and Sylvester Proctor, he was sent to the Poor-house about two years ago, where he died. The old gentleman died, as it were among strangers, but not unattended; for the Superintendent, Mr. Hall and his wife, assisted by Timothy Howe, an inmate, waited on him and administered to his wants as best they could, throughout his last days. About his last request was that his children be notified of his condition, which was done, but none of them were present when their father died, nor at his funeral, and he was laid to rest in the cold ground last Saturday morning, in a pine box furnished by the county, in the pauper burying ground.

The fine appearance of that part of this county lying between Walton and Verona and extending to the Grant and Kenton county lines is only an index to the prosperity of the farmers to whom the land belongs. Large, substantial and commodious residences with all necessary out buildings to correspond, are seen in every direction, while every thing about the farms indicate that the owners are cultivating the land with a due regard for its preservation. The production of the tobacco the past few years has caused to be put in cultivation in that neighborhood many acres of fine land which hitherto had been abandoned to the bushes and briars. An exceedingly large crop there, is now awaiting the buyer. Much of it is of the best quality that can be raised in this section of country; and the owners are reluctant about accepting the prevailing prices which range no higher than $7. In the last fifteen years the lower end of this county has made rapid strides in improving its appearance, in which respect it will compare favorably with other sections of country much more noted. Among the people down there genuine old Kentucky hospitality prevails, and contentment reigns supreme.

Mr. M. S. Rice says there will be no peaches in this county next year.

An Ideal County Judge.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

The question as to what qualification a County Judge should possess is attracting more than its usual attention. The point is, should he be a lawyer?

We all know that a position of so much importance to the people should be filled by the best qualifications obtainable at a fair and reasonable compensation. But we differ as to what those qualifications are as well as to what is a reasonable compensation. However that is not the point upon which the people are now at variance. That will be settled at a later day. When the services have been rendered their quality and extent ought to be a fair guide to their value.

We all agree that a County Judge should possess first-class business sense—a general knowledge of the business affairs of the county—should be of a good moral character—far above contaminating influences—and watchful of the interest committed to his charge and of sufficient force of character, independence and courage to enforce so far as is in his duty, whatever he believes, on a fair hearing, to be right, regardless of friend or foe.

In the management of the financial affairs of the county, the judge is supposed to be assisted by the justices of the peace, and they are supposed to be assisted by each other and the judge, too. But observers of the working of the court of claims will agree that the justices are in each other's way, and that they are all in the judge's way and he in their way, and that the whole concern is a nuisance—a large unwieldy mass, the best it can do is to jump to conclusions—drive a head-get through and go home, the quicker the better.

The great object to be accomplished by the judge is to arrive at an enlightened view of the right in all his duties and then enforce it fairly.

The duties of the judge being ascertained and pointed out by the people they can readily see what his qualifications should be. Whether he has those qualifications the voter will decide for himself. The want of them can not be hidden on the bench, nor can they be called to his assistance if he have them not at hand.

No one conversant with the duties of county judge will deny that there are some few duties of his station requiring but little legal knowledge, and that, too, of a character he might possibly acquire. Yet he has duties to perform as judge of the county court—as judge of the quarterly court, and as county judge, which can not be done with any degree of correctness, convenience or satisfaction, except by one possessed of a good knowledge of the law. Any one witnessing the trial of a case (seldom better than a burlesque) before a county judge, who is not a lawyer, will want nothing more to satisfy him of the utter unfitness of such a one for the position.

Litigation and legal questions will arise continually before the county court in involving the county's highest interest, and important interest of individuals, of infants, interest of estates, &c., demanding more or less legal knowledge for their proper and fair adjustment.

The duty of the county judge as judge of the quarterly court, and in matters of criminal nature are such that none but a lawyer can or ought to be excepted to perform them correctly. To discharge the duties as judge of the quarterly court, especially is a general knowledge of the law indispensable; so much so that without it the court becomes more of a mob than a court, and a more appropriate place for the hazzard and loss of justice and right than for their preservation.

Is it possible for one not posted in the rules for conducting a trial to preside and have those rules observed; or can one not knowing the legal rules by which rights are determined, determine rights according to such rules with any certainty? The statement of propositions so plain carry along their answers.

We are not for the lawyer alone; but other qualifications being equal, then the lawyer is entitled to the preference by far. And then the better the lawyer, the more public and private interests in all their varied characters will be protected and advanced, and the more respect will there be for the court and its decisions; and the more cheerfully will its judgments be acquiesced in by the people and litigants.

The voters have the remedy in their hands for the prevalent complaint against courts and judges. Select men of the proper qualifications to know their duties, and character and force to do them. Put such men in office and no just grounds of complaint will long exist; but go it blind and recklessly choose a man for the office because he is a good buttonholer, wire-puller, treater and drinker at the bar, instead of one you know or ought to know is qualified to fill the office as it should be done, and then continue to complain of the courts and of the county's bad luck.

BEANS

A Valuable Part of the Regular Farm Rotation.

Our climate is not favorable to peas which are apt to mildew with the heat, but beans succeed very well, and the fruit is always salable. Moreover, the bean may be turned to good account as a food for stock, for which it furnishes a most nutritious and healthful aliment, although at first it is not eaten with relish. After becoming used to it when ground with bran and corn it is readily eaten, and when thus mixed it forms a perfect food, and containing a large quantity of nitrogenous matter it is excellently well adapted for young and growing animals. It differs but little from the English bean in this respect, and this grain is considered in that country the most nutritious and healthful that is grown. We can not grow the English bean, and the English can not grow our bean, on account of climate, and each must keep his own variety. But we may well take an example and a hint from English farmers, and give more attention to this useful crop than we have done, as a stock food.

The prevalent idea that beans will grow upon any soil, however poor it may be, is a mistake and an injury. It is true that beans will grow; but growing alone is not what a good farmer wants. The largest possible crop is what should be aimed at, and if an English farmer can grow forty and fifty bushels an acre of his beans so we ought to be able to produce an equal quantity of our beans. And we may, if we will only take the same pains with the crop as they do. The English method is to summer fallow, to plow in manure in the fall, to apply bone dust or superphosphate of lime in the spring, and to cultivate the crop with horse hoe and hand hoe with thoroughness, and by this fitting of the soil to get a full yield of beans, and to follow it with a large crop of wheat. Here is just where we should put this crop in our rotation, and, so to speak, kill two birds with one stone.

Our method of growing beans has been to plant two rows together eight inches apart, and put these double rows twenty inches apart. These wider rows only are cultivated, but the surface is left flat and no ridges are made by earthing up the beans. By drilling in the seed three inches deep the plants are sufficiently well rooted to stand up firmly. A cultivator made for the purpose, with spaces to straddle two rows, the horse passing in the middle row, works two spaces at once, and after three workings the plants will so shade the rows that weeds get no chance to grow. The variety we have grown is the small pea bean. Recently we have grown the white wax, which yields very abundantly and affords in the stalks and leaves an excellent fodder. The crop may be cut with a mower or a reaper and a self-raker when the mower is used a cloth apron is fitted behind and a boy following rakes off the beans in a row, where they are left to dry. When dry they may be stacked in a barrack or put in the barn, but it is preferable to thrash them as they come from the field. We have fed them to cows, finely ground with an equal quantity of corn and as much fine bran or coarse mill feed as of corn and beans together, and have found the feed to be excellent for yield of milk and product of butter. This meal, too, makes the very best feed for calves, and if boiled well and the gruel strained and thinned to the substance of milk, with a small quantity of sugar and salt added, it makes the best substitute for milk for weaned calves. Beans contain a large quantity of a nitrogenous substance called legumin, which is identical with caseine in composition, and which can be curdled and made into cheese, and this substance replaces in the food made of it the caseine of the milk, and so supplies healthfully one of the greatest needs of the calf.—*N. WORSTED WORK, Revival of an Industrial Pastime Which Was Once Very Popular.

Many ladies will welcome the revival of the cross-stitch worsted work, which promises to regain all its old-time popularity. The designs follow closely the antique, and are in lovely, delicate shades. Sofa pillows worked on canvas, and strips for chair seats, footrest, etc., to be upholstered with rich, dark plush, follow some of the fashionable designs for Kensington work, and as so many ladies are familiar with this style of work, it is being adopted even more than the applique work, for which one is constantly finding new and lovely designs. A very pretty fancy at present is the making of bags of silk handkerchiefs with bright colored borders. The handkerchief is first trimmed around all four sides with white lace about two and a half inches wide. A place for a drawing string is then made in a complete circle in the handkerchief, leaving about three inches of the border, exclusive of the lace, to fall over the outside, the circle forming the bag part. After the drawing string or elastic is put in, finish with long loops of ribbon about an inch wide. The bags are very handsome and are also useful. Bags are in fact seen everywhere, at the present time, suspended from chandeliers or from little brass hooks beside mantel-pieces and windows and even hanging from the tall backs of old-fashioned chairs. They are of all sizes and shapes. Quite a pretty bag is made of blue ticking, that with white stripes. Over the first blue stripe tack black velvet the same width, fasten it on with fancy stitches, embroider the white line in some simple design or with two or three rows of herring-bone stitches. On the next blue stripe tack gold or silver braid the same width, fastening it on the velvet, and so on [illegible] each stripe. Make the ticking seven or eight inches square and line with [illegible] each color, drawing up the lining [illegible] handsome satin ribbons of the same or a contrasting color. Although almost everybody has a macreme bag few ladies carry them, and they are also fastened on the wall or on a door, and trimmed with a few peacock feathers and a bright bouquet with large bunches of artificial flowers, and used for ferns and leaves, or cones and [illegible] mementos of summer journey [illegible] the country.—Demorest's

'HOME COMFORT RANGES'

30,000 In Use.

Who would be free must themselves "strike the first blow," and when a "woman says she will, she will." Henceforth the desertion of the cook need not be the signal for house hold wheels to stop, for with a "Home Comfort" Wrought Iron Range in the kitchen, the mistress can do the cooking without danger to health or temper.

Remember, the Home Comfort Ranges are the only Wrought Iron Ranges that have Malleable Iron Top Plates and Malleable Iron Fire Linings. And all other Wrought Iron Ranges you see advertised are Cast Iron Tops and Fire Linings.

LITTLE ✦ PARAGRAPHS

Expressing the Sentiments of our Customers.

I gladly add my testimonial to the perfectness in construction and its adaptability to the wants of the public. PETER JETT, Mt. Olivet, Ky.

We could scarcely over-estimate its advantages. The fact that a 20-pound roast of beef and a delicate cake can be baked successfully at the same time is sufficient evidence of its merits. To testify to this is a pleasure duly appreciated by Robt. OVERBEY, Ellisville.

Having purchased a Home Comfort Range of J. D. Gates, we take pleasure in recommending it to our friends of Bath county as the best thing of the kind we ever used. It heats up very quickly, with a small quantity of fuel, and does better baking and cooking than any cast iron range or stove we have ever used. J. VARNSDALE.

We have used it a sufficient length of time to know that we could get nothing better. E. KENTON, Mt. Olivet.

Having had long experience in the use of many kinds of stoves, but for quick work and economy of fuel it takes the lead. A. HILDRETH, Blue Licks.

It is the most excellent article I have ever purchased in its line, and it is most happily named Home Comfort.
WM. MCCLANAHAN, Ellisville.

I can safely say for perfect baking, cooking and economy of fuel it excels all others. JAS. HENRY, Nicholas Co.

I seldom recommend an article for others' use, but in this case will say I consider it superior to anything of the kind ever manufactured.
WM. HALL, Sardis.

It is a very satisfactory piece of house furniture. Strong, well made, and does its work with certainty and dispatch.
H. B. SAMPSON, Blue Lick.

No one can appreciate its great advantages without using it. Had we known its merits we would have bought one long ago; and discarded the old one.
J. DOOLY, Carlyle.

You can not say too much in parise of it, I have the best biscuit and the best meals in the world baked on it. I would not part with it for any reasonable amount of money.
W. N. SMITH, Nicholas County.

Dear Sirs: You can write anything you choose in recommending your beautiful and perfect operating Home Comfort Ranges, and sign our names

J. W. RALLS, J. H. BOWEN,
JAS. DOOLEY, J. H. CAYWOOD,
WALTER POTTS, N. P. RALLS.

The "Home Comfort" Range is all right in every respect and I do not see how we could get along without it as it does better work and takes so much less fuel than our old cast iron stove.
J. A. MCCORD, Fleming County.

I indorse all that has, or can be said in favor of the "Home Comfort" Range
S. C. STOCKDALE, Fleming Co., Ky.

The above statement in behalf of the "Home Comfort" Range suits me, and I claim enough can not be said in their favor. I am using one and could ask for nothing better of the kind.
J. E. MCCARTY, Fleming Co. Ky.

GROWING OLD.

I'm growing old. I daily feel
The years are creepin' on apace,
The seasons and the holidays steal
Around with but a little grace.
The lines are deeper on my brow,
My walk is more sedate, I'm told,
My friends are fewer, choicer now—
I'm growing old.

The things that pleased me when a boy
No longer please, but bore instead;
The friends that gave me earliest joy
Are scattered far and wide—or dead.
I find my mem'ry has a gap,
I thrice retell a tale I've told,
I like an after dinner nap—
I'm growing old.

I'm growing old. Alack! Alack!
But yesterday I was a boy,
With life a new, an unknown track,
A dream of gold without alloy.
Oh, but to live it o'er again!
Oh, for the days of youth and gold!
But boys are boys and men are men—
I'm growing old.

A BLOOD-STAINED LEAF.

It Kept Alive the Memory of Two Fatal Duels.

Two fatal duels fought within a few months of each other on the same spot—the life-blood of two men staining a little shrub, which, too, was sapped to death—are the bases of a story as true as it is hideously romantic. Every one who was in New Orleans in the summer of 1872, and is still living, must remember the Rhett-Cooley duel. Judge Cooley resigned his position as a Judge in one of the courts of the Parish of Orleans to challenge and fight R. B. Rhett, then editor of the New Orleans Picayune. Colonel Rhett had published an extremely abusive article, impugning the Judge's motives and viciously assaulting his character. The duel was arranged, and Bay St. Louis, Miss., on the other side of Pearl River, fifty-two miles from New Orleans, was selected as the ground. It is unnecessary to mention the names of those who witnessed the said affair; one, in addition to the principals, will be sufficient to explain the remarkable coincidences of which this reminiscence treats.

Carson Mudge was at that time the most prominent dealer in guns and sportsman's materials in the Crescent City. He was known by all sportsmen and liked. The weapons selected were double-barreled shotguns loaded with ball. The manner of loading the gun is an important factor when accuracy is desired, as every sportsman knows. Mr. Mudge did this service for Colonel Rhett, at the earnest solicitation of the seconds. He had performed similar favors before, but up to that time the arm of his man had not been as true, nor the intention as deadly, as those which characterized and governed Colonel Rhett. It was to be a duel a l'outrance, and Mr. Mudge did his best.

Two parties of men left New Orleans on an early train for the bay, and arrived at about ten o'clock. Carriages were taken to Nicholson avenue a broad lane running from the edge of the Mississippi Sound to the railroad, a mile distant. Just half way from the railroad track forty yards were stepped off and the positions drawn. Colonel Rhett's two seconds stood over Mudge as he carefully measured the powder, weighed the ball and wrapped it in a small piece of cloth, until the leaden missile had grown with its covering to a size to tightly fit the bore. It was driven home, a few moments after the same operation had been performed among the little cluster of anxious men who stood across the lane. The principals parted with the surgeons with whom they had been speaking, and were led to their places. Both men stood erect, their faces showing determination, a deadly hatred, but no fear.

Facing Colonel Rhett were orange trees just beginning to bud, and in front of Judge Cooley was a long row of oleanders, whose blushes contrasted strongly with the spotless white Cape jasmines that alternated with the acacias dotting the rear of a large, inclosed garden.

The Sound lay in limitless space on the east, gleaming like polished brass in the dancing rays of the sun. The barrels of the shotguns, too, were gleaming, but the glints were the smiles of a Mephisto.

The mocking birds were still singing their morning welcomes to the bright day when the word was given:

"Are you ready?"

The two men nodded assent.

"Fire! One, two."

The reports were almost simultaneous, and the duel was over.

Judge Cooley had washed out the stain on his honor in his blood. Colonel Rhett had sustained his by killing his adversary.

The birds had been frightened into silence, but only for a moment, and again their carols went up and their music blended in the ethereal with the perfume of flowers. A man had been killed and that was all—it had been done in a gentlemanly way. One glance of the surgeon satisfied him; one look at the face of their friend told the tale to the seconds. Carson Mudge had loaded well, the bullet had gone to the heart of the game and the sportsman was satisfied.

The two sets of seconds were satisfied; all said they were satisfied—but one.

A little scrub was growing where Judge Cooley fell, and as the red stream flowed from his breast two drops dripped upon two of its leaves. It was a sprig of deer grass, a succulent little green vegetation, tender as the sensitive plant. The two thin leaves swelled and drooped with the blood of the dead, and, saturated, sent the surplus through their veins to the stem.

The dead was removed and the living returned to the city.

The newspapers at the time published detailed accounts of the affair, as representatives of all the journals were present and vouched for the perfectly fair manner in which a question of honor had been decided under the code. There had been no interruption by law officers, and no subsequent judicial cognizance was taken of the case. Colonel Rhett returned to his old home in South Carolina, and edited a newspaper.

Though the people who lived near the scene of the duel could see spots of blood on the grass where Judge Cooley fell, little attention was paid to that, as the grass would wither and die in the winter and a new crop sprout in the spring. And so the stains were left undisturbed.

It was not very long after that a Mr. Bienvenu challenged Judge Phillips, a practicing lawyer, and had the satisfaction of receiving a favorable answer to his cartel.

Again shotguns, loaded with ball, were the weapons, and the identical spot where the Rhett-Cooley duel was fought was chosen. Once more Carson Mudge was called upon to display his ability in preparing the powder and ball. His services were secured by the Phillips party.

Little change had been made in the scene about the broad lane, and to the ordinary observer there was nothing to show that a man had been killed on the spot where the Bienvenu party were standing.

The reason was not the same, it is true, and the oleanders were not blooming. Neither was the day so fine. Clouds shrouded the sun, and the trees looked like gaunt sentinels watching some hallowed place. The wind was laden with the spray from the white caps in the wavy Sound, and left a chill upon the cheeks it kissed, as it went moaning through the pine forest beyond. It was a mournful scene, and the men who had gathered there seemed impressed with the uncanny nature of the spot and surroundings. Winter had brought death to nature's beauties, and man was preparing to deal death to his fellow.

The ground, though, bore no marks of a struggle. Apparently all signs of the previous affair had been obliterated. But to one who knew, and who cared to look, there was a mute witness to the deadly strife, the memory of which still lived with those assembled.

Two blood-stained leaves were clinging to a stem of deer grass; the stem, too was slightly tinged with red, but on the other side were two more leaves as green and juicy as they were in the spring. The cold that had intervened had not chilled nor withered them. The ephemeral life of the tender summer blades had been preserved and prolonged by the vivifying heart's blood of a strong man.

Mr. Bienvenu took his position next to the incarnadined shrub and awaited the word.

It was given and the men fired.

Quickly the seconds and surgeons rushed to each, but there was no need of assistance. Neither had been touched.

A look of disappointment came over the faces of two or three, but two or three others were glad that the bullets had sped wide of their mark.

The seconds conferred and were inclined to bring about an amicable settlement.

"No," vehemently exclaimed Mr. Bienvenu. "I have not come here for fun, nor for an apology. I came here to fight—to kill him if I could, and I insist upon another shot."

Judge Phillips declared he was not anxious, nor did he care what was done; he was in the hands of his friends.

The excitable creole was gesticulating and declaring to his seconds that conferences were useless; they had agreed to act for him, and he desired that the duel should be to a finish.

Once more the accommodating Mr. Mudge measured his powder and weighed his bullet. This time there was to be no mistake. Life was in the balance and blood should flow.

The men stood with the stocks of their guns on their hips, the muzzles at an angle of forty-five degrees and the hammer at full cock. Before "one" had been called the quick creole had pulled the trigger, and the sound of "two" was lost in the report of Judge Phillips' weapon.

Mr. Bienvenu fell, raised his hand and died.

"It is no use—he is shot through the heart," sorrowfully said the surgeon, and they bore him away.

His wife had lost a husband, but he had avenged what he had pleased to term an insult with his life.

When the duelists left the ground the two green leaves of the deer grass were no longer so. The dead man had fallen to the left of the sprig, and the leaves had dipped into his blood and taken its color.

Four years after, the writer visited the spot when attending another duel, which was fought in the vicinity, and which ended by one of the combatants receiving a Colichmard thrust through the arm. The season was winter, and everything around seemed dead but the orange trees, with their yellow fruit, and the magnolias. The surroundings looked gloomier than they ever did, and it seemed as if the stranger were treading on unholy ground.

An indefinable something impelled him to search for the sprig of deer grass. There it was, keeping guard over the ghosts of Cooley and Bienvenu. Its color was then a deep red, and its appearance that of a rusted wire. It was petrified, but cemented by blood; its leaves were as fast to the stem as when at maturity. The winds from the Gulf had blown the Sound into storms, and havoc had been made with the giant oaks and pines in the background; but the stream which had made human hearts bent had kept the little shrub erect and firm.

Two years more and the tree of blood had disappeared. Inquiry developed the fact that an old negress, a voodoo woman, had stolen it, and was using it piecemeal in her fetish work. How many innocent heads slept over that murdered blood no one will ever know; old Celestine is dead.—N. Y. Star.

SNAKE INOCULATION.

How It is Successfully Practiced in Dutch Guiana.

Apropos the widespread discussion as to the practical value of Pasteur's inoculation of rabies as a preventive of hydrophobia, the following statement of a similar method of inoculation as a preventive of the deadly effects of the bites of poisonous serpents will be of interest. The method is thus described by the Rev. Charles H. Bixby, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Kenwood, who was born in Dutch Guiana, or Surinam, and lived there until he went abroad to pursue his collegiate studies:

"The practice is so common there that it excites no comment whatever. It is almost universal among the negroes, who have practiced it for centuries. From them it has spread among the white men, especially the planters, until it is the customary thing among all men whose business calls them to the infested districts. Nobody makes a business of preparing the virus, as it might be termed, but it can be easily obtained in any locality. The vaccine matter is simply the poison of a snake, dried and ground into powder. The snake is caught and fastened firmly, teased and irritated until his glands are swollen with poison, and the glands then extracted. I don't know the exact process of preparing the poison; but when prepared it is a fine, harmless-appearing powder. It is then used in exactly the same way as small-pox virus. The surface of the skin is scratched, usually at the wrist, and a small amount of the powder rubbed into the cuts. It acts very much like ordinary vaccine matter, and makes a small sore, which heals and leaves no trace but a small scar. It is said that a case was never known of a man dying or even being affected by the bite of a snake in Surinam when vaccination had been properly performed. I remember distinctly seeing a drayman in my father's employ hold a deadly snake in his hand and torment it. The snake would turn its head and repeatedly fasten its fangs into the man's hand until it was covered with blood. The drayman merely laughed, and when he got through playing with the snake threw it down and stamped on its head. The poison certainly did not affect him, for I saw him for years afterwards. There is no doubt of the deadly effects of the bites of the snakes when there has been no vaccination—the death-list every year will prove that without difficulty."—Chicago Tribune.

—Much is said in favor of the new kind of bricks made from the waste sand of glass factories, which often accumulates in such large quantities as to occasion much inconvenience. For utilization in this way, the sand is subjected to an immense hydraulic pressure, and then baked in furnaces at a high temperature, so as to produce blocks of various forms and dimensions, of a uniform white color, which are composed of almost pure silex. The crushing load is from two to three tons per square inch.—Chicago Journal.

A THREATENED FLOOD.

Carelessness of Two Senators Who Desire to Stand Well with the "Soldier Element".

Nearly all the old pension projects of the Forty-eighth Congress have already been introduced into its successor, while some new ones seem to outdo in extravagance anything hitherto proposed.

Two Senators were so anxious to lead in this rivalry that each brought forward the same measure. It grants pensions to every soldier and sailor of the Mexican war, and every soldier and sailor of the war of the rebellion, who served even fourteen days in the army or navy. It gives pensions also to the surviving widows of such soldiers and sailors, provided they have not remarried. Then it raises certain pensions to the maximum of twenty-four dollars per month, prescribes that every eight-dollar pension now paid to widows or minor children shall be made twelve dollars and dates all the civil war pensions back to the death or discharge.

During the war there were furnished to the Union armies, under the various calls of President Lincoln, 2,772,408 men. Probably 20,000 men enlisted in the regular army besides those who were credited to the States. The States, too, with a few exceptions, received no credit on their quotas for men furnished for less than ninety days' service. Yet there were many sixty days' and thirty days' men. In the summer of 1863 many militia volunteered for thirty days, the State of New York alone furnishing 17,213 officers and men. According to the careful estimate of Colonel Phisterer, it is perfectly safe to say that the total number of men furnished by the States and Territories for the armies of the United States, after deducting those credited with service in the navy, will exceed 2,850,000. In Prof. Soley's "Blockade and the Cruisers" we find the statement that when the war ended there were 51,500 men in the Naval Service. Of course there had been many others who served only a part of the war, and many no doubt were discharged for disability. In round numbers we may say that about three million men responded to the various calls, on land and sea, in the regular and volunteer services.

It is clear, therefore, that the bills just spoken of propose to pension an enormous number of men. It may be said that those who re-enlisted are counted twice in these enumerations. That is true; and it is not possible, without a degree of labor perhaps never likely to be undertaken, to know just how many individual soldiers and sailors served. But it is worth while observing that if the aggregate of 2,772,402 men credited to the States and Territories under the various calls is brought to a three years' standard, it still represents 2,320,272. Thus it will be seen that the number of short-term troops was comparatively very small. It is often urged in behalf of those universal pension projects which provide a pension at the rate of a certain fixed sum per month, according to the amount of service rendered, that the great number of short terms will much reduce the amount to be paid. In reality there were comparatively few who served less than a year. In 1861, for example, 91,816 men were furnished for three months, but 657,868 men for three years.

Schemes for pensioning everybody, rich or poor, who ever bore arms during the Mexican war and the civil war, even for a fortnight, do not take proper account of the expense which would be incurred in carrying them into effect. In fact, they hardly take account of the character of the service performed, since it is well known that militia who performed duty in Northern forts for a few weeks, until regular forces could be supplied, were mustered into the service. Under such bills as have been introduced into Congress, even these soldiers would now be entitled to pensions, though never within hundreds of miles of the actual scene of war.—N. Y. Sun.

THE CONFLICT IS ENDED.

A Grand Spectacle Which "History Has Never Had to Record Before".

As a rule the Southern people are not admirers of the Puritans, and they may perhaps at first be startled at the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher's cutting them so, as he did at the Brooklyn New England dinner. But they are not likely to lay it up against him when they comprehend the splendid compliment he paid them.

He defined the Puritans as those who insisted on making themselves instruments in the correction of abuses no matter at what sacrifice; who refused to be led away from these aims and who had the will power to carry them out at any cost. "There are," he said, "men in Ireland to-day as good Puritans as the world ever saw." Every man, no matter where he lives, does the best he can without counting the cost—every such man he reckoned among the great brotherhood of the Puritans.

There are a great many Puritans in Georgia and South Carolina, he said, who meant right but who made mistakes. But though they saw everything passing away from them, their sons slaughtered, their wealth disappearing, they showed a heroism which the historian ought to celebrate. He continued:

> They were on the wrong side. They acted under false lights, but they acted nobly, in their spheres, and I, born Abolitionist, I who fought slavery as old Putnam fought the wolf to his hole, I who urged on the war and who rejoiced when it ended, I desire to go on record—and I hope this at least will be quoted of me—I desire to say deliberately that since the human race existed on the earth there is no such spectacle of a great proud people living in some twelve or fifteen States that after the war accepted the conditions allotted to them—not, I admit, without some errors here, not without some excesses there, but take them as a whole, their patience, their contentment, their noble reconstruction, with courage and zeal and work, presents to the world a spectacle that history has never had to record before.

Senator Frye, of Maine, responded to the toast "the State of Maine", in a bright and incisive speech, but he couldn't let the chance go by without growling in an undertone at Beecher's sentiments. He had his choice of several subjects, he said, among them "the heroes of the late civil war", but he took the "State of Maine" instead, because he was reminded "in these piping times of peace and reconciliation nothing is to be said about loyalty and treason; flowers are to be scattered on the graves of the blue and the gray alike; the battleflags must be furled and put away in dark places, and neither on platform nor in pulpit is it proper to talk of rights secured and sealed by the blood of brave soldiers."

Mr. Beecher's remarks were loudly applauded and so were Senator Frye's confessions that the war is over: if not for him, certainly for the mass of the people. He is certainly right. The popular feeling no longer responds to mere rhetoric and sentimentalism about the war. If anyone has anything interesting to tell—of daring deeds on either side; of the manner in which battles were lost and won; of the mistakes or failures of Generals under either flag; of adventures and escapes; of dangers and difficulties, of the distinguished men North and South, whose names will forever be associated with the great war, the public is eager to listen. The overwhelming rush of war literature and the anxiety of a new generation to learn of these not distant scenes and days proves what deep interest is still felt in the war, not, however, as a sentiment, but as a "cause". Only the old and middle-aged, and not all of them by any means, share the feelings of Senator Frye, Robert Toombs and the politicians that beat the old war drums to indifferent ears.

Senator Frye's confession, even more than Beecher's eulogy, proves to the wayfaring man that the "war is over".—Detroit Free Press.

A GRAND INTEREST.

Figures Showing the Supremely Important Interests Protected by the Department of Agriculture.

An estimate may be obtained of the vast cereal wealth of the Northwest, and the enterprise which has kept pace with its development, from an interesting list of elevators and warehouses in Minnesota and Dakota recently published in the St. Paul Pioneer Press. The following is a summary of the list:

Total number of elevators and warehouses in Minnesota and Dakota	1,513
Total capacity in country outs de terminal points, bushels	38,504,401
Total capacity, Minneapolis	9,831,500
Total capacity, St. Paul	1,500,000
Total capacity, Duluth	9,460,000
Grand total capacity	54,448,909

It is stated that in many sections of the Northwest enterprising capitalists have gone into undeveloped territory and erected elevators and warehouses even before the settler came to raise grain to till them. The grain and warehouse law passed by the Minnesota Legislature, last winter, has been a material aid to the development of the system, as previous to that time the elevator business was controlled by a few powerful companies, who were kept in power and free from competition by the railroad companies. The increase in two years in the number of elevators on lines directly tributary to Minneapolis is nearly three-fold. A noticeable feature is the great superiority in the character and capacity of the buildings in the extreme northern sections over those in the longer settled districts in the southern part of Minnesota. The cost of the elevators comprising this vast system is computed at ten million dollars, and their capacity is more than equal to this year's crop, fifty million bushels. The cost of receiving, cleaning, elevating and discharging grain is about two cents per bushel, while elevator companies, who buy and ship grain, receive from three to three and a half cents per bushel. Out of this comes the interest on the investment, all expense of maintaining and operating the elevator, insurance on grain, cleaning and loss of weight and grade at terminal points.

The thoughtful utterances of President Cleveland on our agricultural interests show that he fully appreciates the importance of the vast wealth which is annually derived from the rich farms of the West and Northwest. The above statistics must convince every reader of the great benefit to be derived from a wise and careful exercise of the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, which is charged with acquiring and diffusing among the people useful information on the subjects interesting to farmers. Could efficient precautions be also taken against grain corners, which would seem, in view of the cereal wealth of the Northwest impossible to bring about, but which are, nevertheless, of no infrequent occurrence, the country would be always ready to supply the needs of other nations without the infliction of burdens on our own people, by an undue increase in the price of grain. Should the present troubles in Europe culminate in a general war, a wonderful impetus would be given to our grain interests, as the supplies from India and other countries could not long be relied upon to feed the warring nations. As the burdensome restrictions placed by the railroad companies, in Minnesota, upon outside parties who desired to build elevators and extend the system, have been removed by law, we may look for still more astonishing results during the ensuing year in that great grain producing region.—Albany Argus.

THE REFORM RECORD.

What Has Been Accomplished Since the Democracy Commenced to Get Into Power.

In the course of the debate on the revision of the rules, the Hon. Samuel J. Randall said: "Since the House has been under Democratic control there has not been an acre of land or a dollar of subsidy appropriated." This is true to the letter and line. When the Democracy, after years of exclusion from power, obtained, during the second Administration of General Grant, the control of the House of Representatives, every department of the Government was reeking with corruption. Robeson ruled the Navy, and the plunderers in that branch of the service were supreme. Belknap was at the head of the War Department, and the swindlers who had fastened themselves there were robbing right and left. The Star-Route thieves were pillaging the Post-office. The land-stealing corporations had full swing in the Interior Department. The whisky men were tapping the Treasury. On every hand were to be found bribery, fraud and general rascality. The accession of the Democracy to the control of the House of Representatives brought the long debauch of corruption to an end.

As Mr. Randall said: "Not an acre of land or a dollar of subsidy was appropriated." The Republican party gave to corporations like the Pacific Railroad companies territories almost as large as some of the European States. It gave the same corporations "subsidies" amounting to the revenues of European monarchs. In all history no parallel can be found to the carnival of Republican corruption that set in during the period immediately following the war era. When Samuel J. Randall rapped the last session of the Forty-fourth Congress to order as Speaker the Republican raids on the Treasury came to an end. In the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses the splendid record of Democratic economy and honesty which he was so instrumental in inaugurating was continued, and the victories that have since followed the party in nearly every State in the Union were made possible. To-day only a few votes in the Senate stand between the Democracy and the complete control of the Government. It would be the supremest folly to reverse or abandon a policy which has accomplished so much in so short a time.—N. Y. World.

—In the ancient Athenian republic Clisthenes devised ostracism as a way of getting out of the way any public man whom the people feared or distrusted. If six thousand of the citizens voted for the ostracism of a man he was compelled to withdraw from the city within ten days and remain in banishment at first for ten years and afterward for five years. Even Aristides, Themistocles and Cimon were thus quietly sent into exile.

—When men sneer at the want of courage in women they seem to forget that a tender and delicate girl will silently, and without a sign, endure untold agonies in breaking in a new pair of boots two sizes too small for her, while a man will rip and snort as if he was shot if his back corn happens to be disturbed by a bit of careless leather.—*N. LOST AT SEA.

A British Ship Foundered Near Fire Island Lights.

Nine Men Supposed Lost—Terrifying Experience and Miraculous Escape of the Katahdin.

FIRE ISLAND, N. Y., January 11.—The British steamer Hylton Castle, Captain Calvin, from New York January 9, for Rouen, France, foundered fifteen miles south of Fire Island Light at ten o'clock this morning. One boat, in charge of the first mate with a crew of nine men, effected a landing five miles east of here. The second boat, with a crew of ten men, under command of the captain, left the steamer at the same time. When last seen all but three of the oars had been broken. One of the patrolmen of the life saving station made the following statement: "The second boat, in which were the men, left the steamer at the same time that the boat that had seven men in it. They had broken all their oars but three. I have heard nothing of their reaching land. As a moderate northwest wind was blowing at the time, and a smooth sea was running, they will probably reach the shore ten miles east of here, unless picked up by a passing vessel." This statement confirms the belief that the steamer sank, and that the crew put off in the surf boats in charge of one of the officers of the ship. Out of one of the boats nine men are supposed to have been lost.

HUNTER'S POINT, L. I., January 11.—The following telegram has just been received here: "One boat, with ten men from the steamer Hylton Castle, which foundered fifteen miles east by southeast of Fire Island light, with first mate, saved." The operator at Fire Island Light-house telegrapha: "I was watching for an incoming steamer when I discovered a small white boat about five miles east of here. It contained seven men. I watched it and saw the life saving crew go out and meet it. The life saving crew's boat contained eleven men. I watched and saw both boats reach the shore safely. I could not see the steamer or any boat at all ashore. Both boats landed five miles east of here. I know that both boats did not belong to the life-saving station, as I know all their boats, and am sure the white boat was a strange one. I am five miles from Captain Miller's station, and have no means of communicating with him. The other station is a mile up the beach."

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., January 11.—The steamer Katahdin, Captain Holman, of the Boston and Bangor Steamship Line, arrived here badly stove up, and with four feet of water in her hold. She left Rockland, Me., Friday evening for Boston, with thirty-five passengers on board. At 12:30 that night she encountered the advance guard of the storm. The sea at once became heavy, and the stiff north-easter soon grew into a gale. The waves began to roll mountain high, and the steamer pitched and rolled in the trough of the sea. She then sprang a leak, and began filling rapidly; everybody now prepared for the worst. The passengers, with the crew, went to work to lighten the vessel. The cargo was given to the waves. Finding it impossible to keep her in her course, Captain Holman headed her east by south till 11 A. M., Saturday, when she bore for this port.

STOOD NO NONSENSE.

A Butcher Who Couldn't See a Joke Has Some Dear Sport in an Editor's Sanctum.

BUCKSVILLE, PA., January 11.—The Village Item last week contained these two items, one following the other in the local notes: "The citizens of Marbleton are mourning the loss of twenty valuable dogs poisoned by some miscreant." "Butcher Segar, of Marbleton, announces that he has just made up a large batch of fine large sausages." The items were inserted with no intention of perpetrating a joke even by insinuating. Editor Rourke hadn't even noticed the peculiar combination that might be made with them. The first intimation that he had that his paper had created a sensation was when Butcher Segar came up to his office three steps at a time and bursting into the office, knocked Editor Rourke off the stool he was sitting on and then swept the waste paper around like flying snow flakes with his helpless body. The butcher was torn loose from the astounded and broken up editor by the compositor and the devil. The irate butcher was then led down the stairs. Editor Rourke repaired his damages as well as he could. Then he looked over the columns of his paper to find what he was indebted to for one enlarged head and a disfigured suit of clothes. He found out. He saw that some of the boys had interpreted the news from Marbleton for the butcher, who was a Dutchman who never stood any nonsense. That didn't stop Editor Rourke from going out and having Segar arrested all the same, and the butcher had to pay him $50 for his little pastime in the editor's sanctum.

Col. Wright's Body Recovered.

LOUISVILLE, January 11.—Not a minute has been lost by the firemen and volunteers in working in the ruins of the Trabue & Bnimforth building, which fell in Friday evening and buried in the ruins Colonel M. H. Wright and Jabez Bainforth. Water has been kept on the debris constantly, but the flames continued in spite of the work, while a large force of men have labored night and day to remove the fallen timbers. The streams kept on the ruin have piled up peaks of ice, and the scene presents the appearance of a great battered glacier, and yet the smoke from the burning cotton below rolls out from crevices here and there. The families of the men buried by the debris are almost distracted. Colonel Wright's aged mother has eaten and slept but little, and is almost driven insane by the terrible suspense. Mrs. Bainforth, who is very ill, has not yet been informed of her husband's tragic fate. The workmen who have been digging away for fifty hours in the cotton warehouse ruin on West Main street, turned up a human foot at 4:40 o'clock this afternoon. It proves to be that of Colonel M. H. Wright, the late President of the Louisville Cotton Exchange. Subsequent investigation showed that he had been sitting at his desk when the wall fell, and had been crushed right down in his chair and killed. When dug out of the ruins he was still sitting in the chair, with his head bent over until it almost touched his feet. His feet and left hand were burned to the bone, and his forehead was scorched and blackened, but his features were plainly recognizable.

Loss of Life by Freezing.

CHICAGO, January 11.—Reports from the West and Northwest indicate that there is, as yet, no abatement of the cold snap. Several cases of fatal freezing are reported. At Elgin, Ill., Irwin Underhill, on his way home from a party, lost his way and was found frozen stiff yesterday. His horse was stalled in a snow bank some distance from him. At Dundee Irving Baker was found frozen in a farm yard. At Burlington, Iowa, John Lang left a barber shop, late Saturday night, for home and was found dead Sunday morning, not a quarter of a mile from where he started. A dispatch from Denver says that two men were frozen to death near the Western Kansas line, and it is feared that the loss of life in the mountains was considerable.

Baby Burned to Death in Bed.

BALDWIN, WIS., January 11.—During the temporary absence of John Gunderson, his wife, after putting the youngest child to bed, left two others, one about five and the other four years of age, and went to the stable to milk the cow. The children overturned the lamp, exploding it, and the clothes of the younger child were set on fire. The elder one carried it out doors and extinguished the flames with snow. The mother was very badly burned in trying to rescue the baby, and would have perished in the flames had not the neighbors prevented her making the second attempt. The house, with contents, was entirely consumed. In the debris the charred body of the baby was found.

WHY SQUIRRELS COUGH.

An Indian Legend of the Magical Production of Food.

Another illustration in Indian legends of the magical production of food is the delightful explanation of the reason why squirrels cough. Mannabozho came one day to the lodge of the red-headed wood-pecker, and, being invited in, sat down. Now there was nothing for the guests to eat, so the bird flew on the lodge-pole (which was the pole of a tamarack-tree) and, after a few pecks with his beak, found a crevice out of which he pulled something, and lo! it was a fine raccoon. This feat he performed half a dozen times in succession, and then the squaws came in and prepared the feast. Next day the red-headed wood-pecker returned the visit, the Manabozho, who was not going to be beaten by a bird, had taken care to have a new lodge built round a tamarack-tree; so, apologizing just as the wood-pecker had done, for having nothing in the larder, he hopped up toward the pole, and clinging to it as he had seen the bird do, began rapping his nose against the wood. Unable to find any raccoons, he got so angry that he knocked his head too hard against the pole, and fell down on the floor stunned. And the woodpecker went off in a huff. A few days later Manabozho was standing at his door, wondering how he could get even with his neighbor, especially as it was the depth of winter and there was nothing but roots to eat, when he saw two men carrying a bear. He got into conversation with them, and, speaking of his own magical powers, was asked to give an exhibition of them. This he did at once by turning one of the two men into stone. "And now turn him back into a man," said the other. Oh!" said Manabozho, "I can not do that. I only know the first half of the trick." So the second hunter, unable to drag the bear all by himself, left it at Manabozho's door; whereupon that rascal at once invited all his friends to the great feast, and was prodigiously important and fussy at being able to ask them to come and eat good bear's meat at a time when every one was living on roots. But alas! as each one filled his mouth the bear's meat turned into ashes, and, one after the other, the guests began coughing as if they were going to choke. The more they ate the worse the coughing grew, and at last the host, in his indignation, turned them into squirrels, and that is why squirrels cough so much.—Exchange.

Advice to Stoop-Shouldered People.

A stooping figure is not only a familiar expression of weakness or old age, but it is, when caused by careless habits, a direct cause of contracted chest and defective breathing. Unless you rid yourself of this crook while at school you will probably go bent to your grave. There is one good way to cure it. Shoulder braces will not help. One needs not an artificial substitute, but some means to develop the muscles whose duty it is to hold the head and shoulders erect. I know of but one bull's eye shot. It is to carry a weight on the head. A sheepskin or other strong bag filled with twenty to thirty pounds of sand is good weight. When engaged in your morning studies, either before and after breakfast, put this bag of sand on your head, hold your head erect, draw your chin close to your neck, and walk slowly about the room, coming back, if you please, every minute or two to your book, or carrying the book as you walk. The muscles whose duty it is to hold the head and shoulders erect are hit, not with scattering shot, but with a rifle ball. The bones of the spine and the intervertrebal substance will soon accommodate themselves to the new attitude. One year of daily practice with the bag, half an hour morning and evening, will give you a noble carriage, without interfering with your studies.—Hall's Journal of Health.

The Latest Society Whim.

The latest craze which has struck the Washington belle is the carrying of canes. A few weeks ago a young leader in society returned from England, and the next day she surprised her friends by appearing on the street with a cane. It wasn't the ordinary dude cane, but a nice little stick with a shepherd's crook of hammered silver. Sometimes she swung it and at other times she struck the ground with a sharp rap. There is no question that this created a sensation, but there is a great deal of difference of opinion as to whether the craze will strike in or not. So far not more than half a dozen girls have mustered up courage enough to appear on the street with canes. The probabilities are that the craze will not extend to that point where it will seriously interfere with the ordinary everyday happiness of the modern dude.—Washington Letter.

—There was a curious combination of good and ill luck in the experience of the engineer of a tug which sunk in Hell Gate the other day. He managed to scramble on to one of the schooners in the tug's tow, and the schooner soon after drifted upon the rocks. Then he went aboard another tug, which was endeavoring to pull the schooner off, when the tug's boiler burst and threw him into the water again. Perhaps he was the Jonah of the occasion.—*N. Y. —A silver quarter of a dollar was found in the intestines of a four-pound trout which was being dressed for the table at Virginia City, Nev., a short time ago. It was covered with a black coating nearly an eighth of an inch thick, and had evidently been in the trout's stomach a long time. The coin was probably dropped by some fisherman, and the fish, seeing the glittering coin, darted at and swallowed it.

—Exercise is a good thing, but it is not indispensable. Leopold von Ranke, the great German historian, is past ninety, and he has spent three-quarters of a century in his library. During all this time he has devoted fifteen hours a day to study and writing, leaving the library only to go to the dining-room or his chamber. He's hale and hearty, and has literary work mapped out for years to come.

—A party of Indians were hunting in Humboldt County, California, when a severe storm came on, and an aged Indian named Bob became exhausted. As is the custom of Indians in such cases, Bob was left to take care of himself. He picked a clear spot near the trail, stuck a stick in the ground, hung his hat on it, and laid down and died.

TREE-CLIMBING FISH.

A Remarkable Branch of the Finny Tribe in India.

Of all land-frequenting fish, however, by far the most famous is the so-called climbing perch of India, which not only walks bodily out of the water, but even climbs trees by means of special spines near the head and tail, so arranged as to stick into the bark and enable it to wriggle its way up awkwardly, something after the same fashion as the "looping" of caterpillars. The tree-climber is a small, scaly fish, seldom more than seven inches long; but it has developed a special breathing apparatus to enable it to keep up the stock of oxygen on its terrestrial excursions, which may be regarded as to some extent the exact converse of the means employed by divers to supply themselves with air under the water. Just above the gills, which form of course, its natural hereditary breathing apparatus, the climbing perch has invented a new and wholly original water-chamber, containing within it a frilled bony organ, which enables it to extract oxygen from the stored-up water during the course of its aerial peregrinations. While on shore it picks up small insects, worms and grub, but it also has vegetarian tastes of its own, and does not despise fruits and berries. The Indian jugglers tame the climbing-perches and carry them about with them as a part of their stock in trade; their ability to live for a long time out of water makes them useful confederates in many small tricks which seem very wonderful to people accustomed to believe that fish die almost at once when taken out of their native element.—Grant Allen, in Popular Science Monthly.

—The manner in which steel is superseding the use of iron in various directions is further illustrated by the use, at present, of hardened and tempered steel wire upon cards for cotton and wool. The average life of a suit of card clothing upon cotton is stated to be about six years, and upon wool considerably less than that. The use of steel wire in place of iron has not been tested long enough to determine its comparative durability; but it is claimed to do better work, and to require less frequent grinding. On this account, it is said, textile manufacturers are disposed to incur the increased cost, amounting to from fifty to one hundred per cent. above that of the common wire.

—The two great points in heating a room are useful to be remembered: It is necessary to warm the walls and windows so that they may not abstract heat by radiation, and to provide for the entrance and disporsion of fresh air without the danger of draughts. Open fires are the best means of heating and ventilating combined which has yet been discovered.—Chicago Tribune.

TERRIFIC EXPLOSION.

Harper's Iron and Steel Works, Newport, Ky., in Ruins.

Miraculous Escape of the Employes from Death—Several Seriously Injured.

CINCINNATI, O., January 15.—About five o'clock this afternoon the engineer in the new mill at Harper's Iron and Steel Works, in Newport, Ky., startled the employes by rushing through the mill and shouting to them to "fly for their lives, as something was about to happen." Everything was dropped on the instant, and half the men had not quitted the place when there was a terrific explosion, which blew the building to atoms and shook the houses in the neighborhood for squares around. The utmost confusion prevailed, and it was some time before the cause of the accident could be ascertained. People in the neighborhood rushed to the scene, and those who had had time to recover from the shock immediately set to work to rescue any who may have been caught by the debris. It being very dark, their work, of course, was slow. A number of the timbers caught fire, and a telephone message was immediately sent to the engine-house summoning the department. The boys arrived on short notice and soon extinguished the flames. The boys then started in to look for the injured. Their attention was directed to the west side of the mill by the moans of a man. After a few minutes' work they found lying on the ground and held down by a large piece of timber, Mr. James Swift and son. They were extricated. The latter being only slightly bruised, was able to walk off. Mr. Swift was conveyed to his home on Elm street, when, upon an examination, it was found that his right leg was broken between knee and ankle and the left between the knee and hip. He also sustained several severe cuts about the head. Drs. F. A. Davis and J. O. Jenkins rendered surgical skill. Mr. Swift was the boss muck-mill roller. Mr. Chris Risch was also badly hurt about the neck and head. He was also taken to his home on Elm street. Two men by the name of Kearney were also severely injured, one of them having his arm broken just above the elbow. A number of others were slightly injured [illegible] struck with pieces of flying timbers. A man named Tim Shelly is missing, and it is thought he might possibly be under the debris. It being almost dark but little could be seen of the disaster. The new mill is entirely gone, and part of the annealing-house is also gone. The old mill was also badly injured by flying pieces of the boiler and timbers. The cylinder-head of the new engine was blown clear through the old mill and alighted on the bank of the Licking, on the Covington side. A large portion of the fly-wheel was thrown over in the old mill and wedged itself in the bar-mill. Three large smoke-stacks were also thrown down by flying pieces of boiler and timbers. The engineer, who gave the warning, states that shortly after 5 o'clock one of the large belts was thrown from the journal of his engine, and this threw the large band from the fly-wheel, which weighs thirty tons. As a matter of course the engine started off at lightning speed, and seeing that he could not stop it he gave the warning to the employes, some 150 in number. The fly-wheel by this time had attained such a terrific velocity that it broke to pieces. A portion of it struck the large boiler, causing it and an adjoining boiler to explode almost simultaneously. This was followed by a loud report and the escape of steam, and after the smoke had cleared away there was nothing left but a few posts standing up and a large pile of debris lying over near the old mill. The damage will amount to not less than $25,000, and probably more.

THE EXTREME PENALTY.

Paid by Two Slayers of their Fellow Man.

ST. LOUIS, MO., January 15.—Charles Wilson was hanged this morning at 7:45 o'clock for the murder of a river steamer mate some time ago. He was calm to the last. On the scaffold he addressed a few words to those present to witness the death, and died protesting his innocence, saying he had acted in self-defense.

BELLEVILLE, ILL., January 15.—Noah Berryman, colored, was hanged here today for the murder of his wife, Mamie, last spring for alleged infidelity. Noah had previously killed his uncle, ten years prior to this occurrence, hitting him over the head with a spade in a quarrel, but he was acquitted after protracted litigation, his father expending a great deal of money in the defense.

Pronounced a Canard.

CHICAGO, ILL., January 15.—George McCabe, who was reported as poisoning four wives and had married the fifth and made an attempt to poison her, but drank the draught himself, by his wife exchanging cups of coffee, visited the offices of the Associated Press to-day denying the story. He said he had not been in Dakota for three years, but had three sons living there, one of whom was named George, but was not married, and could not be the person described as dying, as he had recent letters from there. His three sons were living near Baltimore, Dakota, where they had a large farm. As for himself, he had not married again, as stated. He acknowledged having been on trial for the supposed poisoning of his two wives, one of whom had died in delirium tremens and one from heart disease. He had been honorably acquitted in both instances, and asserts that the prosecution in both cases attempted to extort money. He says he will prosecute for libel in this instance.

Bold Robbery of a Country Store.

WATERTOWN, WIS., January 15.—The country store of H. Moldenhauer & Son, six miles northeast of here, was entered Wednesday night by five disguised men, who, presenting cocked revolvers at the head of Henry R. Moldenhauer, living over the store, compelled him to open the safe, from which they obtained $300 in money. The burglars then robbed Mrs. Moldenhauer of her jewelry, and next stole Mr. Moldenhauer's team and rode off, leaving the victims locked up in their bedroom.

A Shame and a Disgrace.

SCRANTON, PA., January 15.—An old woman named Walsh was frozen to death in the miserable home in which she lived in this city Wednesday night. The windows of the wretched building had been smashed by boys, and the place was exposed to the fury of the elements. The thermometer registered fourteen degrees below zero.

The Business Failures.

NEW YORK, January 15.—The total number of business failures in the United States reported to "Bradstreet's" during the past week was 384, against 299 in the first week of 1886, 445 in the second week of 1885, 321 in 1884, and 317 in 1883.

Cost of Bushe's Fun.

DUBLIN, January 15.—Mr. Seymour Bushe, the young barrister of Munster whose elopement on November 2, with the wife of General Richard Brooke created so much excitement in the fashionable circles, has been mulcted in the sum of $5,000 in the suit brought against him.

Killing Every White Man They Meet.

SILVER CITY, N. M., January 15.—The Apaches have killed John Hudson, a prominent ranch owner, and his hired man, William Malone, in Eastern Arizona. The Indians are said to be on the way to Mexico and to be killing every white man they meet.

John Kelly Slowly Sinking.

NEW YORK, January 15.—John Kelly, the well-known politician, was very near to death the early part of this week, but now is a little better. He is a very sick man, however, and it is hardly possible that he can recover. He is slowly sinking from nervous prostration, and in not likely to live ten days.

Wanted to be a Cowboy.

LEWISTON, ME., January 15.—Charles Whitcomb, one of the two boys that robbed a lady of $1,100, fled West to become cowboys, and were arrested in Chicago, was brought to Lewiston and taken to Livermore last night. The Barker boy escaped from the officers in New York, and has not been found.

BURIED ALIVE.

Frightful Cave-In of a Mine, Causing the Suffocation of a Dozen Men.

NEW YORK, January 14.—An Alburtus (Pa.) special to the Herald gives an account of a terrible cave-in which occurred yesterday afternoon about 4:30 o'clock at Rittenhouse Gap, a small village near Red Lion, a station on the Catasqua & Fogelsville Road. It happened in the ore mine owned and operated by H. K. Hartzell, of this place, and buried quite a number of men. It is difficult at this writing to get a correct list of the men killed on account of the intense excitement which prevails, but it is thought that perhaps a dozen were entombed. At 7 o'clock last night the following bodies had been dug out at one of the slopes: James Shiffert, aged twenty-eight years; he leaves a wife and three children; Frank Eck, aged thirty-six; he leaves a wife and one child; George L. Miller, aged twenty-one years, single. The appearance of the dead bodies showed that the men had been suffocated. When found they were in an upright position, with tools in their hands. Large gangs of men have been put to work to rescue the others who are entombed in the slope, which is nearly 300 feet deep. The cause of the cave-in at this mine can not be accounted for, as it was one of the best in this ore region. The mine gave employment to a large number of men, but fortunately most of them left work at noon yesterday.

SICKENING STORY.

A Little Child Roasted to Death in an Oven.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., January 14.—A horrible story comes from Wallingford. The report says that a colored woman living near Pond Hill, wishing to call her husband, closed her baby in an oven to keep it warm, the fire being nearly out. While she was away her husband came home and unaware of the whereabouts of the child, built a hot fire. The woman noticed the smoke coming from the chimney and hurried home, but arrived too late, as the child was found literally roasted.

Poisoned Four Wives—the Fifth Beat Him.

LONDON, ONT., January 14.—Letters have been received from Dakota describing the recent death there of George McCabe, who was tried here a year ago on a charge of poisoning his wife at the Dewdrop Inn, London South. The circumstances of the case were very suspicious, poison being found in Mrs McCabe's stomach, but the prisoner was acquitted. He had previously escaped conviction on the charge of murdering another wife in Ingersoll, Ont., and it was alleged that other women in Woodstock, Ont., had fallen victims to his passion. It is now stated that after his acquittal here he went to Dakota and married again. One morning his wife detected him putting some foreign substance into her tea. Watching her opportunity she exchanged cups. McCabe drank the draught intended for his wife, and while in the agonies of death confessed to the attempt at murder, and also to the poisoning of his other four wives.

Back from the War.

MUNCIE, IND., January 14.—Several years ago Mrs. Walcott, wife of Charles Walcott, of this city, was the wife of a man named Rutherford, who went to the war. As he did not return she supposed him dead. Indeed, his comrades testified that he had been killed in battle. A few years after she became the wife of Mr. Walcott. But now it appears that Rutherford still lives, and friends of the family say that Mrs. Walcott recently received a letter from her long lost husband. The letter she believes to be genuine, and she now proposes to leave her present husband and go to the other. To this Mr. Walcott objects. Mrs. Walcott is the mother of two children by Walcott.

Scheme to Exterminate Apaches.

DEMING, N. M., January 14.—A gentleman who is connected with Territorial Governmental affairs is authority for the statement that the Territorial Government is actually negotiating with Colonel Baylor, of Texas, the noted Indian fighter, to raise a body of rangers to come over into New Mexico and exterminate the Apaches. Baylor has had great experience as an Indian fighter, and it is thought that with a couple of hundred picked rangers could capture the Apaches, or bring their scalps in long before the army officers succeeded in getting sight of them.

Pope Decrees a Year of Jubilee.

BALTIMORE, January 14.—Pope Leo XIII. has addressed a letter to all the Patriarchs, Primates, Archbishops, Bishops and other local ordinaries who have the favor and communion of the Apostolic See, a copy of which has just reached Baltimore, and will be published in to-morrow's issue of the Catholic Mirror. The Pope decrees that during the year 1886 a jubilee be held throughout the whole Church, like unto the two extraordinary jubilees held since his accession to the chair of Saint Peter, the last one being in 1879.

Earthquake in Central America.

NEW YORK, January 14.—Mail advices from Panama of the 5th instant, contain the following: At 2 o'clock on the morning of December 18, the Spanish city of Amatilan, a town of five thousand inhabitants, situated twenty-five miles south of Guatemala, was awakened by frequent shocks of earthquake, which continued all day until 5:32 p. m., when a very heavy shock was felt, and at 5:38 p. m., the heaviest shock came, throwing down many walls and houses already fissured by the earlier shocks.

A Prefect Assassinated.

PARIS, January 14.—The Prefect of the Department of Fura was assassinated in a railway carriage and his body thrown from the train while it was in motion. It is supposed that the motive for the murder was robbery.

Master Painters to Organize.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 14.—The master-painters of this city have issued a circular to the painters of the country with a view of organization for the purpose of mutual protection. The association will not dictate the prices but confine itself to boycotting manufacturers for alleged abuses in the trade, such as the adulteration of paints, the supression of the sale and manufacture of mixed paints, discount on glass, etc.

A Jilted Lover Suicides.

CORYDON, IND., January 14.—John E. Deutsch, a wealthy farmer four miles east of Corydon, committed suicide yesterday evening by taking poison. He had been jilted by a Louisville lady.

Requirements of the Customs Service.

WASHINGTON, January 14.—The number of employee required in the customs service the next fiscal year is estimated at 4,026, and the total expense of collection at $6,501,583. The persons employed during the year ended June 30, 1885, numbered 4,527, and the expense of collection was $6,918,221.

The Coldest on Record at Mobile.

MOBILE, ALA., January 14.—This has been the severest spell of weather ever experienced along this coast. It has continued, with very little moderation, since Friday morning. Monday was the coldest day ever recorded here. The weather is somewhat warmer to-day.

Cotopaxi Believed to be in Eruption.

GUAYAQUIL, January 14.—Serious volcanic disturbances have occurred within the last few days. There have been at different places showers of earth and ashes, accompanied by loud rumblings. The Cotopaxi volcano is supposed to be in eruption. The real state of the mountain is unknown, owing to the interruption of the Government telegraph. Slight shocks of earthquake have also been felt.

Pittsburgh's Building Will be of Granite.

WASHINGTON, January 14.—The Secretary of the Treasury has settled the long pending controversy in regard to the material to be used in the construction of the Government building at Pittsburgh, Pa., by instructing the Supervising Architect to award the contract to the lowest responsible bidder for furnishing granite.

SAW LIGHT AHEAD.

Harrowing Doubts as to the Fate of the Nanticoke Miners.

Circumstances Showing that the Imprisoned Man May Yet be Alive.

WILKESBARRE, PA., January 18.—The people of Nanticoke were greatly agitated Saturday evening by the report that one of the rescuing party working in the mine where the men are imprisoned had seen light ahead of him. "He saw light ahead," were the words that were passed around from mouth to mouth. All were anxious to find the man who had seen the light. It was ascertained that he was Dan. Hollister. John Davis was also positive that he saw light in one of the chambers ahead of him. He said that he was digging through the sand near the fourth center door when he espied the light about forty yards away. It was elevated to the highest pitch, which would confirm the theory formed at first, that the men were in a chamber high up out of danger's way. Davis thinks the light reflected was that of a miner's lamp. It was visible for about three minutes, and from this fact the conclusion was reached that the men who carried it had been down in the gangway, where they had gone, probably for some water, or perhaps meat from the body of a mule, and after they had been supplied returned to their chamber, where they have been living all these many days and nights. Davis says he is willing to stake his house and lot that the men, or at least some of them, are still alive. He says the air is good, and with plenty of water and mule flesh, even if they were in bad condition, the men could live comfortably. Davis and another rescuer rapped loud and long, but heard no response. It is thought that the men were too weak to respond. Additional men were put to work, and now it is hoped to reach the place where the light was seen by to-day noon. Should even one man be found alive it would be the most miraculous thing in the history of mine disasters, and yet it is possible that more than half may be still living.

A BURSTED BOILER.

Frightful Explosion on a Steam Tug—One Man Killed. Two Fatally Injured

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 18.—The steam tug Modoc exploded her boilers in the Allegheny River, near the Sixteenth street bridge, shortly before 8 o'clock this morning, instantly killing Pilot Joe Davies and seriously and perhaps fatally injuring Fireman Mathew Higgins and Captain Jeff. Evans. The balance of the crew escaped unhurt. The fireman had just fired up when the explosion occurred. The concussion was terrific, and the boat was rent asunder, fragments being scattered fully five hundred yards. Pilot Joe Davies was blown into the river, and his body has not yet been recovered. Firemen Higgins was blown on a raft. His injuries, it is thought, are fatal. Captain Evans was badly hurt, but will probably recover. The others were blown into the river, but were rescued uninjured. The cause of the explosion is not known. It is thought that the feed pipes were clogged with ice, and the boilers becoming dry, exploded. The boat was owned by Captain Evans, and was valued at $4,000. It was used for towing barges in the harbor.

UNDER THE ICE.

Swift Retribution Follows the Deed of an Incendiary.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., January 18.—The barns of Jacob Houck, a Glenville farmer, were set on fire and burned to the ground last night. The incendiary, who proved to be a farm hand whom Mr. Houck had discharged, was observed hastening from the scene of the fire, and, being pursued, attempted to cross the river on the ice. When nearly across he sank out of sight, and all efforts to find his body have been ineffective. It is supposed that he fell into an air hole and his body was swept down by the current.

IN TERRIBLE TORTURE.

A Young Woman Buried Alive at Woodstock, Ontario.

WOODSTOCK, ONT., January 18.—Recently a girl named Collins died here, as it was supposed, very suddenly. A day or two ago the body was exhumed, prior to its removal to another burial place, when the horrible discovery was made that the girl had been buried alive. Her shroud had been torn into shreds, her knees were drawn up to her chin, one of her arms was twisted under the head and her features bore evidence of dreadful torture.

Died at the Age of 125 Years.

NEW ORLEANS, January 18.—Marie Augustine died here Friday at the extraordinary age of 125 years. She was born in Africa, and was brought here when twenty years old, and was sold in the slave market. She passed five years in Iberville Perish and 100 years in this city. The name of her first owner is unknown, but she belonged in later years to Jules Vivals and to A. Herbert. She had seven children, the youngest and only surviving one, who lives at No. 416 Bourbon street, being eighty-six years old. For twenty years the old woman lived with this daughter, and until last Christmas she was in full possession of all her faculties, when she failed suddenly. Her body was a mere skeleton.

To Make Boycotting a Felony.

LONDON, January 18.—The Queen to-day sent her Private Secretary to Mr. Gladstone with a letter on the Irish situation. It is stated that the Government will at the earliest moment introduce a bill in Parliament making boycotting a felony, enlarging Magistrates' powers of summary jurisdiction, and otherwise strengthening the criminal law. The introduction of this measure is said to have been decided upon at the Cabinet council to-day.

Editor Stead Released.

LONDON, January 18.—Mr. Stead, editor of the Pall Mall Gazette, who in November was sentenced to three months imprisonment for his connection with the Eliza Armstrong abduction case, was released from prison to-day. Mr. Stead is well and will speak to-night at a meeting of his friends and sympathizers. He will then take a fortnight's holiday.

A Cave-in That Came at a Good Time.

ASHLAND, PA., January 18.—A cave-in occurred at the Tunnell colliery to-day, completely closing the fan-ways. As the miners had not entered the mine at the time no one was injured. It will take four months to repair the damage. Over 300 men are thrown out of employment.

—A New Haven medical examiner says that on an average he has ten cases a year of babies starved to death. He had one last week of a child dying suddenly. Investigation showed that it had been fed on a patent food, and the doctor says it died of starvation. It is the ignorance of the parents, he says, which is at the bottom of the trouble. That particular kind of ignorance seems to prevail rather more extensively among the well-to-do than the poorer classes.—Boston Herald.

—There is a patient in a Scotch infirmary suffering from a painful disease in which every person who uses a cane is interested. It is a sore of the hand, brought on by the pressure of a round-knobbed stick against the palm; in this case it has affected the muscles from the fingers to above the wrist. A speedy cure is not probable. The surgeons say that a stick with a handle, instead of a knob on which the palm must press, is the thing to carry.

—A pear that weighs 2½ pounds and measures 14¼ inches the short way round and 18¾ inches the long way has been picked in Shasta County, Cal.

HOLLY EPPS LYNCHED.

A Masked Mob Batter Down the Doors of the Vincennes Jail—The Murderer Dragged From Bed and Hanged to a Tree.

VINCENNES, IND., January 18.—Holly Epps, the foul murderer of farmer Dobson, has expiated his terrible crime at the hands of Judge Lynch, and his worthless black carcass hangs suspended in the Court-house yard at this hour (2 o'clock a. m.). At about 12:30 to-night a crowd of masked men, numbering from twenty to thirty, carrying sledge hammers and various other implements, were seen marching like silent spectres through the suburbs of the city down Sixth street toward the jail. The masks were nothing more than bandana handkerchiefs, but each face was so carefully covered that identification was impossible. They marched steadily and silently down Seminary street, then down Seventh, and reached the Court-house yard. Here they saw two policemen. The leader of the gang approached those official dignitaries of the peace and welfare of the community, and peremptorily ordered them to go home. The policemen disappeared as suddenly as if by magic. Stationing masked sentinels at each corner of the jail yard, the greater part of the gang entered the jail yard and walked stealthily up toward the portico of the Sheriff's residence. Not a sound could be heard. The lynchers stood back, while the leader knocked on the door. Sheriff Seddlemyer came to the door, but would not open it. After parleying with him for some time, one of the crowd struck the pine door with a large sledge hammer. In two or three hard hits the door was smashed to splinters and literally knocked off its hinges. Entering the hallway, the lynching party struck a light, rushed into the parlor, grabbed Sheriff Seddlemyer and pushed him in an adjoining room, slammed the door in his face, and gruffly ordered him to keep quiet and stay in his room at his own peril. The lynchers made for the huge iron doors and commenced their work of battering them down. This was the most difficult part of the whole performance, and fully half an hour elapsed before they succeded in loosening the locks enough to admit them. They had come prepared, and really gained an entrance before those outside anticipated. They entered the inclosure, soon got into Epps' cell, and grabbed the black fiend by his wooly head, and unceremoniously jerked him from his bed. The black wretch yelled and howled like a maniac at first sight of the strong men who had come to take his life, but a slap in the mouth silenced him, and as they dragged him into the gaslight in the hallway of the jail it seemed almost certain that he had turned white. They marched him out into the street, tied a rope around his neck, and jerked him along on the ice and snow, compelling him to walk on his frozen feet, until they reached the Court-house yard, a few yards off. Here they entered, and to the nearest tree they went and threw the rope over a strong limb, and jerked the murderer up with a "yo he," where he was suspended between earth and sky. Epps kicked and squirmed, and grabbed hold of the rope above him, but the lynchers knocked his hands away, and would not let him relieve himself. His groans were terrible to bear, and shocked the spectators beyond measure. At 1:15 a. m. Epps was pulled up, and for fully fifteen minutes he struggled for life, when death came to his relief. He was strangled, and as he hangs now in the Court-house yard he presents a frightful spectacle of the vengeance of Judge Lynch.

A Boy Shoots His Father for His Mother.

HENRIETTA, TEX., January 17.—William Taylor went home drunk and began to raise a disturbance. He grabbed his wife by the head and, seizing a pair of scissors, swore he was going to kill her. "Here, pap, that don't go," said his little 13-year-old son, as he pulled down a 32-caliber Ballard rifle and shot the old man, the bullet entering the left breast, glancing out of the right breast, making a pretty severe wound. In a scuffle over the gun it was discharged, striking Mr. Taylor's grown daughter on the leg, inflicting a flesh wound. The boy has been arrested.

A Centennarian Frozen to Death.

BARNESVILLE, GA., January 17.—Joseph O'Neil, the oldest citizen of this section, aged 107 years, was frozen to death under distressing circumstances. O'Neil was a negro, with over 200 descendants living around. With one of his surviving sons he lived near the city. When the blizzard came the old man was compelled to take up his quarters in an abandoned potato house, where he was found dead. As the facts became known great excitement was created among the negroes, who openly threatened summary vengeance upon the heartless son.

The Unruly Chilian Goes Home.

WASHINGTON, January 17.—Senor Don Manuel del Campo, Secretary of the Chilian Legation, who has figured rather notoriously in Washington for several months past owing to his unruly conduct, left the city last week for his home, in Valparaiso. His departure was known to but a few of his friends. He was not recalled by his Government, but his people, having head of his unbecoming actions, are said to have insisted upon his returning home.

Death of Miss Bayard.

WASHINGTON, January 17.—Miss Katherine Lee Bayard, oldest daughter of the Secretary of State, died suddenly yesterday afternoon, of supposed heart disease. The remains will be taken to Wilmington, Del., to-morrow afternoon, where her funeral will take place on Tuesday. Her remains will be interred in the old Swede Church yard there, where the father and mother of the Secretary and several of his children are buried.

Fatal Snowslide.

DENVER, COL., January 16.—The Tribune-Republican's Ouray (Col.) special says: Ruby Trust's cabin, on Mount Sneffle, was carried away this morning by a snow-slide, burying six men. A relief party was immediately formed and the victims soon recovered. Martin Pearson and Andy Peterson were found dead, and the other four were badly injured.

Two Young Ladies Robbed of Their Hair.

DETROIT, January 17.—The Tribune's East Saginaw special gives an account of a strange robbery that occurred at that place last night. Two daughters of Henry P. Foulger awoke to find that during their sleep some one had entered their room and cut off their long hair. Nothing else was taken.

Seat to be Contested.

WASHINGTON, January 17.—The seat in Congress held by General Weaver, of Iowa, will be contested by ex-Lieutenant Governor Campbell, on the ground of illegal voting which gave Weaver his majority of 67.

Nine Hours a Day for Bricklayers.

ST. LOUIS, January 11.—The National Bricklayers' and Masons' Association adjourned last night, to meet a year hence in Washington, D. C. The matter of eight hours a day for a day's work was the subject of long discussions during the sessions, and a compromise was finally effected by the acceptance of nine hours for a day's work, and this rule is to go into effect throughout the country on the 1st of next May.

Death of a Mexican Veteran.

LOUISVILLE, January 17.—Gen. Wm. Howard Irwin, a captain in the Mexican war, died here to-day after a lingering illness.

Moody at Work in Chicago.

CHICAGO, January 17.—D. L. Moody, the evangelist, preached to-day at the Chicago-avenue Church to very large audiences. Mr. Moody will conduct a series of meetings at this church, lasting throughout the week. Two services will be held each day—one for women in the afternoon and one for men in the evening. Admission can be had by tickets only, and the demand has already nearly exhausted the supply. From here the evangelist will go to Knoxville, Nashville and New Orleans.

War Upon the French Clergy.

PARIS, January 17.—The Monarchist papers denounce the Government's declaration regarding the clergy as an open war upon the clergy and church.

XLIXTH CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, January 14.—SENATE.—Mr. Hawley presided. Senator Beck spoke about his refusal to present petitions for the suspension of silver coinage. Mr. Teller presented a memorial of the Colorado Legislature for the free coinage of silver. By a resolution of Mr. Morgan, that portion of the President's message relating to the Congo Free State was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Mr. Morrill's resolution offered yesterday, calling for information about the number of unconfirmed Internal Revenue Collectors now drawing pay, was amended to include back years, and passed. Mr. Brown, of Georgia, continued the silver debate in favor of continued coinage. Mr. Maxey followed in the same line. The judicial salary bill was taken up and debated until 5 p. m., when the Senate adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE.—Mr. Dingley, from the Shipping Committee, reported a resolution directing that committee to inquire what, if any, legislation will promote the interests of the American marine employed in the fisheries, and to report by bill or otherwise. Adopted. A number of other unimportant resolutions were reported. A bill was passed providing that judgements of the Court of Claims shall bear three per cent. interest from the date of presentation for payment. The Presidential succession bill was taken up and debated. Mr. McKinley gave notice of a substitute he would offer. Friday night sessions were ordered for the consideration of pension bills.

WASHINGTON, January 15.—SENATE—Not in session.

HOUSE—A proposition to allow discharged employes one month's extra pay was defeated. The Presidential succession bill was taken up and discussed. At 3.30 p. m. Caldwell (Tenn.) demanded the previous question, which was ordered; 146 to 125. A vote was taken on McKinley's substitute resulting in its rejection by a party vote: 108 to 157. The bill was finally passed as it came from the Senate: yeas, 183; nays, 77. At 5.55 p. m. the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, January 18.—SENATE.—Mr. Sherman resumed the chair. A number of petitions were presented. Senator Cullom's report on inter-State commerce was submitted, together with a bill. Five thousand copies of the report were ordered printed. Mr. Ingalls offered a resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report what proportion of the $10,000,000 U. S. bonds recently called are held by National banks. It went over. Mr. Frye offered a resolution, which went over, declaring that the commission to adjust the fisheries question, which is recommended in the President's message, ought not to be provided for by Congress. Mr. Eustis then addressed the Senate on the silver question. A resolution of Senator Harris to admit Hon. J. C. Moody, of Dakota, to the floor during the session was objected to by Mr. Cockrell. Mr. Voorhees presented memorials for the admission of Montana as a State. The judicial salary bill was passed, giving U. S. District Court Judges $5,000 a year. The bill providing for the Presidential count was called up by Mr. Hoar. At 4.45 the Senate went into executive session, and at 5 o'clock adjourned without making confirmations.

HOUSE—Mr. Springer was in the chair. The Elections Committee was authorized to sit during the sessions. On the call of the States for the introduction of bills and resolutions, 590 bills were introduced, among which are the following: To provide for the inspection of live stock, hog products, and dressed meats. To provide for a uniform ballot box. Granting a pension to Mrs. Meiklehem, only surviving granddaughter of Thomas Jefferson. To repeal all internal revenue taxes on domestic tobacco. To reduce the fee for money orders for sums not exceeding $5. For the admission of Montana as a State. To extend the benefit of the pension laws to worthy applicants for pensions who served in the late war, and their widows or minor children, who are unable under existing law to furnish the evidence required to connect their disabilities with the service. To encourage the American marine employed in the fisheries. Conferring the rank of Colonel on Lieutenant A. W. Greely. To promote the efficiency of the artillery of the U. S. army. (It creates twelve additional captaincies in that service at a salary of $1,700 and $1,900 per annum, and reduces to fourteen the Lieutenants in a regiment) To provide for the termination and extinguishment of U. S. patents.

A Prophecy That Affects Russia.

[London Life.]

Society at St. Petersburg is just now much occupied with the revival of a very curious story. About three years ago there was a spiritualistic seance at the Officers' Club in that city, at which the spirit of a famous departed General was called up, and prophesied, among other things, that there would be a great war in 1886, in which Russia would take a leading part. As the ghost of the deceased warrior mentioned among the names of officers who would greatly distinguish themselves in the war those of some men who did not even figure in the army list, the affair was looked upon as a joke, and nothing more was thought of it. But, by a strange coincidence, amongst recent appointments to the rank of commissioned officers, the very names appear which the spirit had foretold, the bearers being young men of no family who have risen from the ranks. As there is no country in the world where superstition is carried to such an extent as in Russia, the incident has caused quite a sensation. It would be very strange if at the commencement of the year 1886 we should see Russia drawn into a war with Austria as a result of the struggle between Servia and Bulgaria.

Bulgarian Stolidity.

"It is altogether remarkable," writes a war correspondent, "how patiently the Bulgarians bear their hardships, and with what business-like devotion they execute orders which impose upon them the utmost personal sacrifice. Foreigners fresh to the country are amazed at the quiet way in which the Bulgarians take the news alike of reverses and victories. They were not cast down by the disastrous news from the frontier in the early days of the campaign, nor unduly elated when the tide of fortune turned in their favor. They are first-class soldiers, and this was never shown better than since the cessation of hostilities."

Barnum Captures "Alice."

Mr. Barnum has been for some time negotiating with the directors of the London Royal Zoological Gardens for the purchase of Alice, the late Jumbo's associate, or "wife," as the English people seemed to consider her, and he has finally succeeded. Alice was the constant companion of Jumbo for many years, and showed much distress when separated from her big spouse. She is exceptionally large, and is docile, affectionate and playful, and particularly attracted toward children. Her arrival is expected early in March in time for the opening of the Barnum and London shows.

Improving Drinking Water.

A new plan for improving the quality of drinking water is under consideration by the Water Board of Boston. It is proposed to build an open conduit, a mile or more in length, from the outlet of the water system, in which large rough bowlders are to be placed. The water, rushing swiftly over and between those rocks, will be so agitated, it is thought, as to do away with that impurity which depends upon partial stagnation.

—There is an air of decay about Pekin which extends even to its temples. The number of its population is not accurately known, but, according to a Chinese estimate, which is probably in excess, it is 1,300,000, of whom 900,000 reside in the Tartar, and 400,000 in the Chinese city. There is no direct foreign trade with Pekin, and the small population is made up of the members of the various legations, the maritime customers, the professors at the college and the missionary body.

His purchase was so small that, like many another mining investment, the purchaser was unable to find what he had paid for, even with the aid of a microscope.—Chicago Journal.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

Dark and heavy tobaccos are coming forward in larger quantities than for many years, and the quality is equally exceptional for inferiority. Burley tobaccos have had a steady and liberal demand, and competition among buyers is more active. The following table shows the price of each leading type of 1885 tobacco:

Proceedings of the Legislature.

FRANKFORT, January 9.—SENATE.—The thermometer marked 10° below zero this morning, which had a chilling effect on legislators in both houses, and but little was done in either. The Senate concurred in a House resolution relating to an inquiry made of the public printer, asking for a detailed statement of the amount of money received by him from the State for work done. Senator D. H. Smith has had leave to introduce a bill to appoint a Revenue Commissioner. Senator Burnett offered a joint resolution to-day proposing to elect a Librarian and Public Printer and Binder on Thursday, which was adopted. Mr. Thorn has presented a bill to repeal the law for the protection and propagation of food fishes.

HOUSE—There was barely a quorum present. Speaker Offutt's bill calling for a constitutional convention came up in the House and there is likely to be considerable discussion over it. Mr. Richardson introduced a bill to-day to aid in the assessment of property. It has fourteen sections. It provides that the County Court of each county shall, at its last session in the present year and every four years thereafter, appoint as Assessors two citizens from each Magisterial District, who shall each be paid two dollars per day for their services while employed. Their terms of office shall be four years. They are to convene on the second Monday in December at the voting places in their districts and examine transfers of all real and personal property that have been made and entered on record in the Clerk's office from their respective districts. They shall take a schedule of all this property, and adopt prices realized at the transfers as the valuation of that property, for the purpose of taxation. They shall also make an examination of the tax books, and correct any errors they may find from their respective districts. The enforcement of those duties is provided for by heavy fines for their omission. The bill was referred to the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

FRANKFORT, January 11—SENATE.—Nothing of importance whatever was done in the Senate to-day.

HOUSE.—Mr. Neale offered a resolution, directing that a committee be appointed to inquire into and report to the House what power the General Assembly has to change the present system of assessment of property by devolving that duty or power on two or more persons; or, in other words, to report whether the office of Assessor is a constitutional office in a sense that deprives the Assembly of the power to authorize more than one person in each county to assess property. Adopted. Mr. Gorin offered a joint resolution "that the Commissioners of the penitentiary and the Warden thereof be requested to report to this body whether or not the law in respect to providing and furnishing convicts upon their discharge or release from the penitentiary with a suit of new clothes is complied with, and how, and whether the same has been complied and how, during the lease of said convicts to Mason & Co." Lies over one day.

FRANKFORT, January 12.—The only thing done by the Legislature of any moment was the passage by the House of the Offutt bill to call a constitutional convention by a newly-devised method, avoiding the obstacles intentionally placed in the present Constitution by its makers.

FRANKFORT, January 13.—SENATE.—In the Senate a large number of bills of minor importance were introduced. The bill to stamp out pleuro-pneumonia was then taken up and discussed until adjournment without any result having been reached.

HOUSE.—Fifty-two bills were presented today. They were of a varied nature and not of general interest. The following, by Mr. Thorne, of Henry, is the most important: Whereas, The custom of buying and selling for future delivery, on what is known as margins in imaginary speculations in gold, railroad stocks, bonds, pork, grain, cotton and other articles of importance, has grown to be one of the most demoralizing evils of the country, thereby making defaulters and exiles of some of the best business men in the land, and under the guise of respectability in commercial circles, the youth of the country are being demoralized by this legalized method of gambling; therefore, be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, that it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to set up or establish any house to keep for himself or another any business place in which gold, stocks, bonds and other articles of commerce are offered for sale, or sold on the margin, known as a bucket-shop, in this State, under the penalty of $1,000, to be recovered by indictment in any court having proper jurisdiction in this State. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons in this State to sell or offer to sell any stock, bonds, produce, grain or other articles of commerce for future delivery upon the system known as "margin," without he has in his possession at the time the thing sold and it is within his power and he does deliver the article sold at the time of sale. That any person or persons who shall offer for sale for future delivery or sell any of the aforesaid articles of commerce, or trade on margin without an actual delivery at the time of sale within this State, shall upon indictment and conviction thereof be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $2,500 for each offense. That every contract, conveyance, or assessment for the consideration, in whole or in part, of money or other thing sold on margin, loaned, or advanced for the purpose of speculation in futures on margin to a person then actually engaged in selling on margins shall be void. That any speculator who shall lose money in any bucket-shop or marginal establishment, he or his creditors may have recovery and relief in chancery.

FRANKFORT, KY., January 14.—SENATE.—The Senate continued the discussion of the pleuro-pneumonia bill, without reaching a vote.

HOUSE.—House filibustered all day over a bill repealing an act for the better protection of food fish. It will finally be passed, if the present signs indicate anything. The only actual business in the House was as follows: Mr. William Read offered the following: "Resolved, by the House of Representatives, That the Committee on Propositions and Grievances are hereby requested and instructed to investigate and inquire into the expediency and propriety of requiring all railroads in this Commonwealth to erect suitable fencing along and on each side of their respective roads, in this Commonwealth, and to construct proper crossings and cattle-gaps, and that they report by bill, or otherwise, as early as possible." Mr. Dickerson offered the following amendment: "The committee shall investigate the matter of individuals who have been compensated for fences by the railroad companies." Propositions and Grievances. The resolution and amendment were referred to the Committee on Railroads.

FRANKFORT, January 15.—SENATE.—The Senate continued the pleuro-pneumonia discussion and finally referred the whole matter to the Committee on Public Health, with instructions to report the same back to the Senate next Tuesday. The Senate met in special session to-night to consider the Offutt constitutional convention bill. After considerable debate pro and con a vote was taken on an amendment offered by Senator Bowles, which gives Assessors the power of registration. The amendment was lost by a vote of 22 to 7. The original bill was put to a vote, and passed by 25 to 7.

HOUSE.—The House passed the bill repealing the act for the protection of food fishes in this Commonwealth, introduced the daily series of resolutions and adjourned.

Miscellaneous Items.

AT Louisville the jury in the case of Enoch Cook, charged with killing James Prewitt, sentenced the prisoner to two years in the penitentiary. Cook and Prewitt quarreled last July, and Prewitt was kicked and beaten to death.

JUDGE COOPER, in the Montgomery Circuit Court, has rendered a decision which nullifies the claim that local option legally prevailed there. The saloon men are, for the time being, winners, but the temperance party will appeal the cases.

STILL ALIVE.

Notwithstanding the Gloomy Prognostications of the Republicans the Democracy Has Not Ruined the Country.

There is hardly any good Republican, who voted for Blaine in 1884, who may not do something for his own political education by giving a portion of whatever time he sets apart for meditation at the beginning of the new year to the consideration of the fears about his country from which the experience of 1885 has delivered him. There were intelligent men—we know many of them ourselves personally—who thought one year ago that the election of a Democrat to the Presidency would produce some terrible financial disaster so great as to threaten social order. We can recall one wealthy and still active and prominent Republican who predicted with much solemnity in November, 1884, that in one year from that date workingmen would, in the bitterness of their suffering, be knocking down and robbing the well-to-do in the streets of this city, without interference from the police. We know of another who in a fit of mingled rage and despair offered to sell his securities at fifty cents on the dollar.

All through the country districts, particularly in New England, there rested on the souls of Republican men, and particularly on the souls of Republican women, the shadow of a great fear, with which the Republican orators and journalists had for many years filled the air. The old gentleman who predicted the great robberies and the gentleman who offered to sell his property at half price, had in their mind's eye a general closing of the factories brought about by some mysterious move of a Democratic Administration, the exact nature of which they had probably never thought out for themselves. The bulk of the party was in fact in that most melancholy of all situations in which the citizens of a free democratic country can find himself—a situation in which he sees at every election all that he holds dear put in imminent peril, in which the question is not which of two parties will best administer the Government, but whether the Government itself will last more than three months.

The result was that Republicans went to the polls and mounted the stump in the alarmed, if not desperate and reckless frame of mind, of men who feel that they are on the eve of a battle which will dispose of both life and fortune. A long succession of political contests conducted under such conditions would of course in the end have proved fatal to constitutional government. Men long tormented by such fears finally become ready for any refuge from them—even despotism itself. The deliverance of the country from this hideous nightmare during the past year is, we do not hesitate to say, a blessing only second in importance to the suppression of the rebellion, and hardly less necessary to the safety, honor and welfare of the Nation. For it all Americans, of all parties, ought at the opening of the new year to be profoundly thankful. It means at last real peace and real security.

Only one degree less valuable is the deliverance from the Southern bugbear, which also the past year has witnessed. Nothing but actual experiment would have sufficed to destroy the old tradition of the slavery period that the Southern people had interests different from or opposed to those of the North. There was in the Republican party a widespread belief that if they got into power, or if a President were elected by means of their vote, they would in some manner, take immense sums of money out of the Treasury—one estimate of the amount was $3,000,000,000—and divide it among themselves, partly as compensation for the emancipated slaves and partly as compensation for other damage sustained during the war. How they would get hold of this money, how they would persuade people to lend it to the United States, if it were not to be secured by taxation, and how they would manage to have the taxation borne by the North exclusively and not by the South, was never explained, and probably few people ever asked themselves. The phrase, "the Confederacy again in the saddle," was in fact considered a sufficient answer to all cynical demands for minute particulars.

Moreover although it was the pride and boast of the Republican party that the war had destroyed slavery, and although it was a cardinal article in the Republican creed that it was slavery which made the South hostile to the Union, nevertheless until last year the fact that slavery was really dead was never thoroughly brought home to the minds of the voters. Very much like the man who still feels pains in the leg he has lost by amputation, the party still felt the pangs of the old South in their bones, and nothing but a Democratic triumph would ever have relieved them. In the imagination of multitudes, the Yanceys, the Rhetts, the Brookses, and all the other fire-eaters were still brandishing their plantation whips, and preaching the degradation of labor, and threatening dissolution for the sake of the peculiar institution. Cleveland's election may be said to have banished all these phantoms from the Northern brain.—N. Y. Post.

A Foolish "Fling".

Never before in history, it may be safely said, did the conquered even in a civil war administer upon the rewards paid for the services of the conquerors. This unique spectacle is afforded by the presence of Secretary Lamar at the head of the Department of the Interior, and consequently the arbitrator of Union pensions. Never before in history did the conquered speak with enthusiasm of these rewards paid to the men who conquered him; or declare that they might well be greater, and that they were the most sacred obligations of the Nation. Never before in history was so frank and generous a sentiment distorted and mutilated by political opponents who never shed anything more terrible than ink in such a conquest.

This has been done by some of the Republican organs, one of which says of this defense of the pension system by an ex-Confederate, that "it glows with all the ardor of an enthusiast who would like to see it extended to the fellows who fought on the other side". There is not a line or a word or a hint in Secretary Lamar's report, suggesting that he wishes pensions extended to "the fellows who fought on the other side". He knows too well—if the Philadelphia Press, the author of these words, does not—that even if he did wish it the Constitution absolutely forbids it.—Detroit Free Press.

PATRIOTIC WISDOM.

President Cleveland's Correspondence with a Member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Elsewhere appears an interesting correspondence between the President and General Ross, an officer of the Grand Army and the publisher of the Maryland Veteran, a journal which zealously looks after the rights and needs of the old soldiers. General Ross believed that injustice had been done in the dropping of a member of the Grand Army in the course of retrenchment and lessening the force in the Baltimore Custom House. He, accordingly, very properly addressed the President on the matter. We wonder that Mr. Cleveland's predecessors were not similarly admonished by the heads of the Grand Army, for we notice in General Ross' second letter a complaint that "the statutes made and provided in our interests have been so long disregarded that our soldiers' homes are filled with competent, efficient and honorable men, who have been driven there because their physical disabilities are of a character that prevents them from battling with the world in business competition with those who were well housed and fed during four years of what was to us exposure and privations."

This could scarcely be the case if Mr. Cleveland's Republican predecessors had been careful to do what the laws required and what their party so continuously promised to do for the veterans of the Union. These will read with pleasure General Ross' statement that Mr. Cleveland has given "patient hearing to every petition sent him, and prompt action in many deserving cases".

"I have adopted the theory," Mr. Cleveland writes, "that the spirit of the law requires that the same preference should be applied to the retention of soldiers when a reduction is necessary as to their appointment." And he adds: "It is well that associations should exist such as you represent, organized for the purpose of protecting and enforcing the right thus guaranteed by law. The statute is based upon justice and a proper and generous appreciation of the services of those who risked their lives for the safety of their country in her time of need. The letter and spirit of its provisions should be fairly and in good faith observed."

But the soldiers will not complain when the President adds that fitness for duties must also be considered; for the law made for their protection and in their interest by a Republican Congress declares this in explicit words. It reads: "Persons honorably discharged from the Military or Naval Service by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointments to civil offices, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such offices."

Hence the President adds: "I do not suppose you claim that this preference should be carried so far as to retain those who are unworthy or inefficient. The law which you quote was not expected in its operation to impair the public service, but to secure the recognition in public employment, by a preference in selections, of such of the discharged soldiers and sailors mentioned in the statute as could and would furnish faithful and efficient work." That, it seems to us, every honorable veteran will agree to.—N. Y. Herald.

FULFILLED HIS PROMISE.

President Cleveland's Official Conduct Viewed in the Light of His Letter of Acceptance.

If the policy indicated in the letter should be followed out for the ensuing four years the people's moral vision would be so cleared, the political atmosphere so purified, that Blaineism would stand forth in all its deformity, and, like other vices, to be shunned would need but to be seen. The other read in the clear and uncompromising utterances an intentional and conclusive repudiation of the cardinal tenet of its Democracy. "To the victors belong the spoils" was met by Mr. Cleveland with the deliberate and emphatic declaration that "efficiency, fitness and devotion to public duty" were his conditions, not alone of appointment to, but of "continuance in public places."

How well he has fulfilled the promise of his letter the following facts and figures will help to show: Including foreign ministers, consuls, Judges, heads of bureaus and principal subordinates in the departments, collectors of customs and revenue marshals, important postmasters, Indian agents and other officials within the appointment of the President and requiring confirmation by the Senate, there are about four thousand offices to be filled. It is within bounds to say that had the election in New York State been reversed by a few hundred votes nine-tenths of these places would at the present moment be filled by Mr. Blaine's adherents substituted for Mr. Arthur's or Mr. Garfield's appointees. President Cleveland has removed just six hundred and forty-three of the incumbents under the former Administration. There are nearly fifty thousand fourth-class postmasterships, filled, as a rule, on purely partisan grounds and for the purpose of putting in place "those who are in political accord with the appointing power", as Mr. Cleveland mildly phrased it in his letter. Of these only seven thousand have been removed.

These are the figures, and eloquent as they are of themselves there are some facts whose mere recital add emphasis to them. It is a fact that Mr. Cleveland has not hesitated to admit that some of his relatively few appointments have been bad; but it is also a fact that he has done what could be to remedy such mistakes even to the extent of summary removal. It is a fact that he has disarmed an adverse Senate by his frankness and honesty of purpose and action. The threats with which we were regaled of refusal to confirm have vanished into thin air. It is a fact that a Democratic President has not only allowed Republicans to remain in office, but that he has refused tendered resignations, and even reappointed a Republican on the sole grounds of "fitness, efficiency and devotion to public duty".

It is by these facts and figures that the progress of Civil-Service reform is to be measured. Its warmest friends could not have expected as much as has been accomplished within the last eight months. They have cause for rejoicing that there yet remains so long a period of President Cleveland's term of office.—Chicago News.

We are authorized to announce JNO. S. GAUNT, of Carroll county, as a candidate for Commonwealth's Attorney in this, 11th Judicial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

We are authorized to announce R. J. FOSTER as a candidate for reelection to the office of County Superintendent, subject to the primary election, first Saturday in April 1886.

We are authorized to announce M. C. NORMAN, of Union, as a candidate for County Judge, subject to the primary election, Saturday April 3, 1886.

We are authorized to announce EDWIN H. BAKER as a candidate for County Judge, subject to the Primary election, Saturday, April 3, 1886.

W. L. Riddell is a candidate for reelection to the office of Circuit Clerk, subject to the action of the primary election, April 3d 1886.

THERE are 48 lawyers and 43 farmers in the Kentucky Legislature.

IF the race for county judge is filled as it now presents itself, the party has two of its best men to choose between.

The Legislature has done considerable resolving, and should each resolution develop into a bill, the session will necessarily be prolonged unto the dog days.

A. S. Powell, a prominent young man, of Roberison county, Tennessee, living near the Kentucky line, sued Miss Maggie Flowers, a Logan county belle, for breech of a marriage promise.

SAM JONES, the southern evangelist, is preaching to large congregations in Cincinnati. That city has material enough in it to furnish a regiment of Sam Jones employment the next twelve months.

AT the official request of Governor Knott, Commissioner Coleman, of the Agricultural Bureau, has ordered the pleuro-pneumonia quarantine continued in Kentucky, pending action by the Legislature to prevent the spread of the disease.

JUDGE COOPER, in the Montgomery Circuit Court, has rendered a decision which nulifies the claim that local option legally prevailed there. The saloon men are, for the time being, winners, but the temperance party will appeal the case.

THE Hon. Wm. C. P. Breckinridge is the first man who, in more than twenty years, has been made a member of the Ways and Means Committee the first term of his service in Congress. Col. Breckinridge occupies Mr. Blackburn's place in the committee.

THE Ohio House of Representatives "fired out" the Democratic delegation, one excepted, from Hamilton county, and seated the Republicans who claimed their seats. There is nothing known in the affairs of this country which is as corrupt as Ohio politics.

SOME weeks ago we thought that ere this time the slayer of young Moyer would have been apprehended; but it seems that the undisputable clew which the Indiana detectives claimed to have has yielded no fruit. The $200 reward offered by the Governor has not been equal to the task of unveiling the mystery.

THERE is a bill before Congress to prohibit the carriage by the mails of newspapers publishing a lottery advertisement or dealing in lottery schemes. If the bill become a law, it will be a heavy blow to those papers which depend on lottery schemes to keep up their circulation, but a would-be promoter of good morals ought not object to the law.

IN this issue Edwin H. Baker is announced as a candidate for the office of county judge, subject to the action of the primary election, April 3d, 1886. Mr. Baker is now serving his first term as justice of the peace in this district, and he has filled the office to the entire satisfaction of his constituents. He has been a life-long Democrat, and if elected, will fill the office of county judge with credit to himself.

At a meeting of the Democratic Executive Committee of Boone county, held in the Court-house in Burlington, Ky., on Monday, December 7th, 1885, it was ordered.

That a Democratic primary election be held in the several voting precincts in Boone county, on the first Saturday in April 1886, between the hours of 8 o'clock a. m., and 7 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating, Democratic candidates for Circuit Clerk, County Judge, County Clerk, County Attorney, Assessor, Jailer, County Superintendent, Surveyor and Coroner.

That the qualification of voters shall be the same as those specified in the call of the district committee, which is as follows: "That no one shall be eligible to vote at said election except those who are and will be entitled to a vote at the August election 1886, according to the laws of the State, and who are identified with the Democratic party, and who if voting at the November election, 1884, voted for the Democratic Electors for President and Vice-President."

That the Democratic voters of the county may have the privilege in voting for the county offices alone, to to express a first and second choice when there are more than two candidates for one office, so that before the board to count the votes the hindmost candidate shall be dropped and those votes cast for said hindmost candidate expressing a second choice, said second choice shall be counted as first choice for the candidate so named.

That the clerks of the several voting precincts together with the chairman of the Democratic County Committee shall constitute a Board to compare poll-books and count the vote, and shall, upon ascertaining who has received a majority of the votes cast for the respective offices, declare said candidate the regular Democratic nominee for said office. Said Board shall meet at the court-house in Burlington, at 1 o'clock the following Monday, April 5, 1886.

That the clerks appointed in the several precincts, prepare the poll-books to include both district and county candidates, and at the close of the polls, shall duly certify seal and deliver to the chairman of the Executive Committee of the county, on the day named in sec. 4.

That a list of the officers of the election shall be published in the Boone County RECORDER the first week of said paper's publication after the first Monday in March, 1886, and said officers shall consist of two judges and a clerk, and in case of anyone failing to serve who has been selected any good Democrat present may be selected to fill the vacancy.

Some Good Bills.

MR. STRUS, of Bullitt county, has introduced into the Legislature three bills which, if passed, would do much to relieve the financial embarrassments of the State, and which, at the same time, would improve our county government.

In the first bill, he proposes to compel the counties sending prisoners to jails in other counties to pay the cost of this transfer, which is now a charge on the State. In this connection it is said that the removal of one batch of prisoners cost the State $800.

Clearly this expense should be borne by the counties. If any county will not build a jail in which to confine its criminals, that county and not the State should pay for their removal to safekeeping. Moreover, if these expenses are paid by county taxation, the citizens of that county will be more watchful and vigilant, and unnecessary expense will not be incurred so frequently. The saving to the State will be, it is said, $30,000 annually, and when it is a charge on the counties it will be found possible to reduce the sum one-half.

Another gross abuse developed in recent years has been the purchase of books in which the county records are kept, but for which the State pays. In many counties extravagant orders have been given, and books which will not be used in ten years have been delivered and paid for by the State. A county officer would not so easily fall a victim to the blandishments of the bewildering drummer if he knew his account would be scrutinized by his immediate constituents, groaning under a heavy load of local taxation. Now he can ask what difference it makes how many books he buys, when the expense is to be divided among 100 counties. He fails to state at the same time that it is also to be multiplied by 100 counties.

One of the surprising evidences of the degeneracy of Kentuckians is furnished in the rapid increase of idiots. These pauper idiots are supported by the State. They are put in charge of some family, and a generous allowance made by county officers and paid by the State. Caring for pauper idiots has grown to be a very profitable business, especially in the poorer counties. Hundreds entitled to no aid whatever from the public treasury are quartered on the State. It is an abuse generally admitted, but winked at. Not only does it not increase local taxation, but it is another chance for draining the central treasury for local profit. The bill will relieve the State of an annual expense of $110,000.

Each one of these bills can be sustained on its own merits, but in each is recognized the wisdom of localizing the power of government and the burden of taxation. We have year by year increased the number of counties, multiplying offices and swelling appropriations, only because the expense of the counties are to a large extent paid by the State. The result has in every way worked to the harm of the public. The way to limit these abuses is to return to the Democratic principals of local self-government. Let each county take care of county matters. Localize responsibilities, and, as far as possible localize the expense of the government of the State. If we want to restore order, let the penalty for disorder rest alone on the community which tolerates disorder. If extravagance is encouraged in any county, do not tax the thrifty and vigilant ones to meet these extravaganeles. If the people wish to organize a new county, let them know they themselves must pay for the luxury.

It will be found by a closer investigation of the condition of the State the most of the abuses which are now making themselves felt are traceable to the neglect of that principle of the Democratic party, which is antagonistic to centralization. Responsible, individual and financial, must be fixed, and it must be recognized. Thus alone can the evils of bad legislation be made quickly apparent and the remedies be promptly applied.—Courier-Journal.

STATE NEWS.

Dogs are killing sheep in Bourbon county by the dozen.

H. T. Noel, of Boyle county, sold to J. H. Engleman a Holstein-Friesian heifer for $250.

Joseph Hendrick, of Fleming co., shipped 120 head of mules to his father at Natchez, Miss.

Dan Bowden, of Paris, sold at York, Pa., about 20 mules at prices ranging from $140 to $160.

M. S. Baughman bought of Joe Rollins, of Marion, a 30 months old jack for $1,200—Stanford Journal.

Martin Howard, a Paris farmer, found nine of his best cattle frozen to death under a snow drift on his farm.

It is apprehended that what few quails were left in this county have been frozen to death the past few days.—Capital.

Dr. L. Herr, of Forest Park Farm, Lexington, sold two mares by Mambrino Patchen, to an Eastern party for $1,000 each.

The fathers of Congressman Taulbee and ex-Congressman Phil Thompson are both members of the Kentucky legislature.

Every precinct in this county has the local option law, but it will be a cold day when this city goes prohibition.—Henderson News.

The Walnut street Baptist church of Louisville, the largest and wealthiest in the State, has increased the salary of its pastor to $4,000.

J. A. Farra, of Fayette county, sold in Louisville a crop of sixteen hogsheads of new burley tobacco at an average of 9 cents per pound.

The Lebanon Standard says Messrs Lancaster & O'Bryan sold to Messrs. Manttingly & Simms 50 head of mules, from two to four years old, at $115.

Fayette farmers report the small grain much injured by the late cold snap, and predict a repetition of last year's failure. Woodford farmers do not think the wheat hurt.

Green Morris Tuesday purchased from F. B. Harper, of Nantura stock farm, 2 two-year-olds—Con Cregan, a full brother to Drake Carter, and Ermine, full sister to Bersan. The price paid was $10,000.

Hon. D. L. Thornton, member of the House from Woodford, and one of the ablest lawyers of that body, not seeing his way clear to accepting free passes has returned those sent him by the polite companies.—Yeoman.

A bill has been introduced into the Kentucky Legislature making gambling a felony, punishable by confinement in the penitentiary from one up to three years. Tennessee, Missouri and other States have a similar law.

Geo. W. Henry, of Chicago, bought of L. J. Cox, 258 acres of land lying on the Peak's Mill pike, 3 miles from Frankfort, at $40 per acre. Mr. Henry will establish a stock farm upon it, and go into the breeding of Hereford cattle, in which he is largely engaged in Illinois.

The Courier says that Vanceburg is now in the midst of the greatest revival it has ever known. The church became too small to hold the people and the court-house was engaged, but the christians are still crowded, and the cry is for more room and the opera-house.

A flock of sheep belonging to Jas. D. Clay had to be cut apart on Sunday morning. They had crowded together during the storm and the snow melting for a while and the freezing fastened the entire flock together. A sharp corn knife was used to sever the animals from one another.—Winchester Sun.

The Kentucky House of Representatives was compelled to adjourn Saturday on account of the severe cold in their chamber. Perhaps when the Constitutional Convention drafted the clause confining the Legislative session to sixty days, it did so in deference to the limit of human endurance.—Capital, January 12,

In Edmonson county the liquor question is bothering the candidates for county judge. Lawson, the present incumbent, when he went into office, refused to grant licenses to sell liquor, and is now a candidate to succeed himself, while A. A. Sturgeon and Judge Hazelip are candidates also. It is thought that politics will be merged into the question of "license or no license."

The Owensboro Messenger says: The present tobacco crop is almost universally pronounced the worst ever delivered in Owensboro. Daviess county tobacco is usually bright, but nearly all thus far seen is quite dark and mixed with green. There seems no demand in England for any kind of tobacco, and prices will range lower this season. Farmers who have sold have probably realized the best prices that will be paid. The average has been about five cents.

No more curious fact has occurred in connection with the cold spell than the following, which is told by an Owensboro citizen, and which is true beyond a peradventure. Said the citizen in question: "I found a hen-egg Sunday morning sticking to the side of a small grapevine, about an inch in diameter, at a height of five or six feet from the ground." The hen had doubtless laid the egg while roosting on the vine, and it had frozen to the vine immediately on touching it.—Inquirer.

A mass meeting of the citizens of Hardin county, to consider what to do with the surplus money in the treasury, was held recently in Elizabethtown, and passed a resolution in full requesting their Representative to pass an act to submit to the people of Hardin county at the August election the question whether or not they will set aside $30,000 of the surplus fund for a permanent school fund and the balance to pay off the claims of the county to the amount of $10,000.—Pioneer.

We have probably just passed through one of the coldest spells of weather we have had for a number of years. The thermometer registered last Tuesday morning, in many places as low as 28 degrees below zero. Stock of all kinds that was exposed to the weather has suffered greatly, while fowls have fallen from their roosts frozen to death. Dead birds have been found in abundance in the fields and woods. Give us the warmest weather every time before this kind.—Spencer Courier.

SENATOR Albert S. Berry, as chairman of the Committee on Education, will prove a whole-hearted friend to the common schools. He has been so zealous in this matter that he has favored compulsory education, and several years ago made a number of strong speeches giving advanced ideas upon that subject. As it is, he will sustain and do all he can to perfect the present system.—Yeoman.

IN regard to a bill to make gambling a felony in Kentucky, the Senator, from Larue, in an interview with a Louisville Post reporter, said. "My bill is not yet ready to give you its body, but it will embody every species of gambling, including keno, faro, roulette, poker, etc., and will provide for the punishment of everybody that engages in gambling by confinement in the penitentiary. It is a sweeper, and I am in favor of wiping the earth with all manner of gambling. I can assure you that I am backed by the very best people in the State, and I am safe in saying that I believe that my measure will pass by a handsome vote."

COMMISSIONER'S SALE.

Boone Circuit Court, Ky.

Elizabeth Utz, &c., Plffs.
vs | Notice of sale in equity
Z E Rice, &c. Defts.

By virtue of a Judgment and order of sale of the Boone Circuit Court, rendered at the Oct. Term thereof, 1885, in the above cause, the undersigned will, on Monday, the 1st day of Feb'y, 1886, at 1 o'clock p. m., or thereabout (being County Court day), proceed to offer for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, on a credit of 6, 12 & 18 months, equal installments at the Court-house door, in the town of Burlington, the property mentioned in the Judgment to wit:

A tract of land on Sand Run Creek in this county, containing by survey, 262¼ acres, and bounded by the lands of Julia Loder, John Cave, Ben Clore and others. Said tract is divided into two lots by a line crossing it s 5¾ w and about 200 or 300 yds. west of the house. The lot fronting on Sand Run Creek contains 115¼ acres, and the lot on which the house and barns are located contains 149½ acres. These lots will be offered separately, after which the entire tract will be offered in a body, and the bid or bids making the most money will be accepted.

The purchasers will be required to give bonds with approved security, for the payment of the purchase money, to have the force and effect of a judgment, bearing legal interest from the day of sale. Bidders will be prepared to comply promptly with these terms. Bonds payable to the undersigned.

THE
COMBINATION FENCE

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

So far $7 is the best price for which tobacco has been selling in this county.

We are under many obligations to Abram Clore, of Hebron, for favors extended.

All of ye old bachelors who need old button holes rejuvenated, call on Thos. O. Cowen.

Pot plants were nipped in rooms where fires were kept during the late cold wave.

Miss Nettie Gardner did not teach school last week, on account of the very severe weather.

Capt. Mote Christy, who went to New Orleans last fall, has returned to Petersburg, his former home.

W. S. Acra's watch dog handed in his chips on the last night of the visit of the recent cold snap—froze.

The cold wave broke into George Blythe's cellar and played havoc with his apples, potatoes, milk, &c.

Josiah H. Walton's little boy fell out of a loft the other day, and received severe injuries about the head.

Jas. M. Thompson, of the Bellevue neighborhood, estimates his last year's crop of tobacco at 60,000 pounds.

The Grant-Gaines and the Sheriff bond suits were continued by the Superior Court last week for oral argument.

Another cold wave is advertised to exhibit here this week, so don't suffer your coal and wood piles to become exhausted.

G. T. Gaines, Mayor of Flickertown, made a record of eleven consecutive turkey dinners, commencing during the holidays.

Piper's music box has not been guessed off yet. Music does not seem to have charms for the guesser, when a guess costs twenty-five cents.

John J. Berkshire and W. L. Rouse visited Henry Tucker, of the Union district, Monday, and purchased some of his fine bronzed turkeys.

W. J. Rice had two geese that got snowed under week before last, and were finally discovered by some school children who liberated them.

Some of the Aurora shootists attended the shooting match at Woolper Store, Boone county, Ky., last week. If they bagged any game we failed to see it.—Independent.

Friday morning there was a perfect chorus of fox horns sounding in this section, rallying the fleet-footed canines. Horns of every conceivable intonation were to be heard.

Perry Stephens returned last Saturday from his business trip to Iowa. Perry is very much pleased with the people and their enterprise and sighs to be one of their number.

Esquire Oscar Gaines started for the lower end of the county Monday to commence his duties as deputy assessor. He will assess Walton, Verona, Beaver and Hamilton districts.

Rev. Fullilove filled his first regular appointment at the Baptist church last Sunday, preaching in the morning and evening. After the morning services Jo C. Revill united with the church by letter.

The protracted meeting in progress at the Methodist church at the time of our last issue closed Sunday night. Rev. Froe is a forcible speaker and made a good impression on our people.—London Leader.

Some of the farmers were contemplating commencing plowing at an early day, before the frigid zone slipped down this way, but when it happened they concluded they would wait a few days for further developments.

The Furnish & Piper saw mill out on the Petersburg pike has a big lot of sawing on hand ready to dispatch so soon as the weather will admit of that kind of work. We hope the boys' purchase will prove a good investment for them.

Remember that Geo. Huschart & Co. of Lawrenceburg, Indiana, can always give satisfaction both as to price and style of work, so when you want to buy a tombstone or a monument go to their yard or call on John Beall, of Hebron, Ky., their agent.

Billy Rice put in the counter for the bank last week, and it is a fine piece of work, setting off the room in good style. When the room is repainted it will present quite an inviting appearance, and look like it was arranged for the business intended to be conducted in it.

A meeting of the bank directors has been called for to-day, at which time a president will be elected and the bank regularly launched in business. The people will find it a great convenience, and it is hoped that they will give it all the encouragement in their command.

Mr. S. A. Palmer's little daughter, Bessie, aged 4½ years, can play the following pieces on the organ: "What shall I do to be saved?" "Jesus, Lover of my Soul," and one or two others. She plays them well, and if she accidently strikes the wrong key, she detects it as quickly as an old performer.

On the third Saturday night in next month Rev. Fullilove will, in the Baptist church at this place, deliver a lecture on the Pyramids of Egypt. The admission free; but the audience will be given an opportunity to contribute $6 for the purpose of providing a new Bible for the church.

When Messrs. Alfred Cason and Jno. J. Berkshire were asked, last Saturday, about the condition of the fruit, they agreed that it is too early to determine, but Mr. Cason does not think the apples are injured to date. These two gentlemen are close observers of fruit, and what they and Mr. M. S. Rice, say in regard thereto, can be set down as what may be depended upon.

J. J. Lillard has not been able to find all his sheep since the flock was raided by the dogs. He thinks about five of them were so frightened that they ran clear out of the neighborhood. When he commenced organizing his flock, for his first purchase he paid $15 a head, buying them at Morgan Rice's sale when he sold out where John W. Gaines now lives.

Our readers will observe that "Voter" and "Old Fogy" have undertaken the laudable task of informing the people of the county what qualifications are necessary for a good county judge. At present they have not agreed as to what should be the standard, and more than likely another cold wave or two will visit these diggings before they do have the matter settled.

Last Thursday Sheriff Clutterbuck made one of the biggest day's rides on record. We won't say how far he did ride for fear of weakening your faith in our veracity. We will say this, however; To complete his day's jaunt he didn't have time to eat dinner. Now, when he refuses to stop to eat dinner, you can wager your bottom dollar that he wants to go "a for ways" that day.

Suicides are becoming quite common throughout the country. The mania struck Harry Blythe's valuable hunting dog last week, and it hit upon a novel plan to put it in execution and at the same time to cause Mr. James Hogan to be the agent, while he was wielding his ax in cutting ice, the dog thrust its head immediately under the ax, and thus was its death accomplished, its head being split open.

In a letter from Henley Smith dated Sanford, Florida, January 10th, 1886, he writes: "A cold wave struck us yesterday. The thermometer went down to 21 last night—ice froze an inch thick. Water pipes all frozen up solid this morning. Millions of dollars worth of oranges frozen on the trees. I don't think it will hurt the trees as it was very dry, and the trees were in a good condition to stand the cold. Banannas and pine apples all killed. All well, business good."

Uncle Milt Hamilton, of Fayette county, formerly of Boone and Kenton one of the early pioneers of Kentucky, who was present at the organization of the State government at Danville in 1792 and took an active part on that memorable occasion, and who has been in attendance at the organization of every legislature from that day, put in his appearance when that body convened at Frankfort last Wednesday, hale and hearty, nimble and saucy as ever. We are told by a friend who felt his warm and friendly grip and heard his ringing, heart-felt laughter that he bids fair to live at least another century. So mote it be say we.—Owen Democrat.

The next meeting of the County Teachers' Association will take place at Limaburg, Saturday, January 23rd, 1886. The following is the programme:

Recitations, W. E Clutterbuck and E. L. Riley.

Civil Government, Ezra Keller and B. F. Thornton.

Humorous side of Teachers' school life, Virginia Southgate.

Graduations from District schools, E. M. Clutterbuck and J. M. Riggs, Orthography, Miss Lizzie Conner and Miss Cassie Foulke.

Essay on Pestalozzi, J. C. Mack.

The secretary would like to have the address of each member of the association. All are respectfully invited to attend.

VIRGINIA SOUTHGATE,
Walton, Ky.

Daniel Webster, a farm hand, met with a violent death on Saturday morning near Lawrenceburg Junction. He was in the employ of Edward Hayes, and left Mr. Hayes' farm in company with Bill Carter, with the intention of visiting this city. The pair were walking along the track of the Big Four Road. At the approach of a Western train the two men separated, stepping on opposite sides of the track to let it pass. When the engine was within a few feet of them, Webster's hat blew off and landed on the opposite side of the track. The fellow instantly sprung after the worthless head-gear without heeding the first running engine, but he had scarcely reached the middle of the track when the locomotive struck him and hurled him thirty feet away. The dead and mangled body was brough to this city, and an inquest was held by the Coroner. No blame is attached to the railroad authorities. Webster was a single man and originally came from Florence, Kentucky. Lawrenceburg Register.

The County Judge Question.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

In last week's paper we noticed quite a lengthy article in which the author attempts to define the duties and qualifications of a county judge. Many good things are to be found in the article, but, after all, it is only an appeal for the election of a lawyer as county judge.

We agree with "Voter" that "the greatest object to be accomplished by the judge is to arrive at an enlightened view of the right in all his duties and then enforce it fairly," but we hold that this can be accomplished by some who are not lawyers. It is too often the case that a judge has the ability to distinguish between right and wrong but has not the moral courage to withstand the rewards he anticipates as results of his actions though he knows they are not sanctioned by justice. But a lawyer judge can be guilty of this fault as well as any body else.

It is a very rare occurrence that the best talent in a county, outside of the legal fraternity, finds its way to the office of county judge. Those of our citizens who would make good judges are, as a general thing, too modest to ask for the position; if they do, they go down in defeat from wily politicians.

"Voter" is inclined to estimate the qualifications of everybody, except lawyers, using the past county judges, excepting attorneys, as his standard. This is not a correct way of arriving at the ability of many worthy gentlemen of the county.

Suppose a judge is not a lawyer. Has not the county a salaried attorney, whose duty it is to advise with the county judge, and enlighten him on all matters wherein the county is interested? A county judge having good, practical sense, with a legal adjunct in the shape of a county attorney, can certainly handle the business of Boone county. It is true he must be possessed of administrative ability, but, being versed in law does not provide this ability. In taking Sheriff bonds and other bonds in which the county is interested, is the county's attorneys duty to see that they are properly executed, as much as it is the judge's duty to pass upon the sufficiency of the sureties. If it is not, we would like to know what services the people can expect of him.

"Voter" thinks that because a judge is not versed in law that his court often becomes a mob. This is not because of a lack of legal knowledge, but simply for the want of spunk enough on the part of the judge to teach the riotously disposed attorneys that he is the court and that they are bound to respect him. It does not take a lawyer to enforce decorum in a court room. Lawyers, like children at school, soon learn when they can run things to suit themselves, and the judge who takes the requisite dignity to the bench with him, never experiences any of the trouble above complained of, and we are not prepared to admit that a legal knowledge, only, begets dignity. In some instances enumerated by "Voter" we admit that a lawyer would have an advantage of the otherwise well informed county judge, but these instances are not so numerous as to thoroughly disqualify everybody except lawyers, for that office.

Although "Voter" disclaims being for the lawyer alone, the whole tenor of his article points to the lawyer as the only person in whose hands the office of county judge can be ledged with any kind of credit to the county. This notion of "Voter" is certainly erroneous, and will not stand the close scrutiny of the people who elect county judges.

What qualifications a county judge shall have are left to the sovereign people to determine, and "Voter" should remember that Vox Populi Vox Dei.

A. S. Rachal is at home for a week's vacation from Danville, Indiana.

Miss Laura Norman left last Thursday for a visit of several months to friends in Midway, South Carolina.

Miss Callie Talliaferro, who has been detained at home by illness, returns to Nicholasville seminary next Monday.

Miss Sarah Bannister is at Elliston station, where she was called by the illness of her sister, Mrs. W. E. Bannister.

It was so cold last week no body did anything worthy of note, except to freeze their ears and put up ice. All the ice-houses filled.

Mr. H. C. Baker and sister, Mrs. Ira Percival, of Walton, were last week to see their sister, Miss Laura Baker, who has been very sick for several weeks.

GUNPOWDER.

No weather yet in which to do spring farm work.

Noah Tanner has been on the sick list for the last week.

Farmers are complaining of losing some of their old sheep.

Fox horns can be heard at any time, and the boys likes to hear them.

The past week has been a good time for the farmers to feed their shock fodder. The stock would eat it.

The people of Pleasant Valley neighborhood would like to see Mr. Ed Baker, of Burlington, announce himself a condidate for county judge in this paper.

A very large crowd assembled at the Gunpowder Grange Hall last Saturday night, and everybody enjoyed themselves very much, and especially James Crisler.

The report that I am a candidate for jailer has, by some means, been started, and I take this means of contradicting it. I want no office, much less being a candidate. CY RIDDELL.

On The Wing.

My Dear Recorder,

Would you like to go West, through me as a proxy? Well, then, here we go, and begin our journey on Tuesday, the 5th, inst., leaving Cincinnati over the Pan Handle via Logansport, Indiana, thence to Chicago. Now RECORDER, which is the short for William and Frank, as I leave you at home with a good bye, I'll drop the we and us and travel as I, and so when at Logansport, having business at Kentland, Ind., I flew off on this tangent for a day. The crops were generally good, the timber poor, the best of it being about like our home thicket undergrowth.

2:30 a. m., of the 6th found me en route for the great Chicago, where I arrived at 7 a. m. This travel likewise showed fine crops, but timber of the poorest type and yet a general thrift claimed audience all the way.

My stay in Chicago was only for a few hours, and yet the business thrift and push every where asserting themselves, told that Chicago's reputation as a great business metropolis is well founded and maintained. Her courthouse and Board of Trade buildings, each costing two and a half million, are imposing piles of marble and granite. And then to realize how Chicago has triumphed over her flames and ashes and prostration of a few years ago to her present imposing state of structure and commerce! Verily her business not less than her buildings, is six stories high. "Go thou sluggard and learn of her" for the inspiration is contagious. You see, boys, cows kick at Chicago milk-maids as well as at Burlington milk-men. The only difference being that the Chicagos kine kick before day, and are therefore milked by lantern and wind, while the Burlington milk manufacturers, by sunlight, and the time of these kicks prove the "get up" of the one town and the "get down" of the other. In short and in plain a cow kicked over the lantern that became the torch to Chicago's great fire. This cow was engaged while I was in Chicago in having an extention made to her horns, to keep up her age-records, and received no Kentucky visitors or else I should have bought her and a tent and then have personally advertised her as the great Chicago Incendiary and myself have become the Vanderbilt of Boone before my return. Behold my generosity! Thus I suggest to Chicago, how some never-let-go-in-the-world-kind-of-a-man may imortalizes himself and herself (the cow,

Say, thou too short-horn brindle,
Would this be or approximate swindle,
Oh no, bawls she, but did I ever dream
My business being milk and cream,
That a kick would immortalize self,
And make for managers uncounted pelf

Pardon this digression, "But a little nonsense now and then" you know is not without relish.

Noon found me enroute on the C. M. & St. Paul for Cedar Rapids, Lynn Co., Iowa. Through this run broad prairies and cultivated fields of grain and meadow were only limited by the horizon. The stations were all towns of respectability, ranging from five hundred souls to thousands, and Chicago's mother thrift is no stranger nor lack to these towns, city children of the prairie, whose laughter is thrift and whose cry is business, and whose hours of rest are business advancements.

The engines whistle warns me I am approaching Marion, the county seat of Lynn county, an aimed for point, and I step down from astride the ironhorse and bid my readers good morning until the next RECORDER.

'HOME COMFORT RANGES'

30,000 In Use.

Who would be free must themselves "strike the first blow," and when a "woman says she will, she will." Henceforth the desertion of the cook need not be the signal for house hold wheels to stop, for with a "Home Comfort" Wrought Iron Range in the kitchen, the mistress can do the cooking without danger to health or temper.

☞ Remember, the Home Comfort Ranges are the only Wrought Iron Ranges that have Malleable Iron Top Plates and Malleable Iron Fire Linings. And all other Wrought Iron Ranges you see advertised are Cast Iron Tops and Fire Linings.

LITTLE ✠ PARAGRAPHS

Expressing the Sentiments of our Customers.

I gladly add my testimonial to the perfectness in construction and its adaptability to the wants of the public. PETER JETT, Mt. Olivet, Ky.

We could scarcely over-estimate its advantages. The fact that a 20-pound roast of beef and a delicate cake can be baked successfully at the same time is sufficient evidence of its merits. To testify to this is a pleasure duty appreciated by Robt. OVERBEY, Ellisville.

Having purchased a Home Comfort Range of J. D. Gates, we take pleasure in recommending it to our friends of Bath county as the best thing of the kind we ever used. It heats up very quickly, with a small quantity of fuel, and does better baking and cooking than any cast iron range or stove we have ever used. J. VARNSDALE.

We have used it a sufficient length of time to know that we could get nothing better, E. KENTON, Mt. Olivet.

Having had long experience in the use of many kinds of stoves, but for quick work and economy of fuel it takes the lead. A. HILDRETH, Blue Licks.

It is the most excellent article I have ever purchased in its line, and it is most happily named Home Comfort.
WM. MCCLANAHAN, Ellisville.

I can safely say for perfect baking, cooking and economy of fuel it excels all others. JAS. HENRY, Nicholas Co.

I seldom recommend an article for others' use, but in this case will say I consider it superior to anything of the kind ever manufactured.
WM. HALL, Sardis.

It is a very satisfactory piece of house furniture. Strong, well made, and does its work with certainty and dispatch.
H. B. SAMPSON, Blue Lick.

No one can appreciate its great advantages without using it. Had we known its merits we would have bought one long ago; and discarded the old one.
J. DOOLY, Carlyle.

You can not say too much in parise of it. I have the best biscuit and the best meals in the world baked on it. I would not part with it for any reasonable amount of money.
W. N. SMITH, Nicholas County.

Dear Sirs: You can write anything you choose in recommending your beautiful and perfect operating Home Comfort Ranges, and sign our names.
J. W. RALLS, J. H. BOWEN,
JAS. DOOLEY, J. H. CAYWOOD,
WALTER POTTS, N. P. RALLS.

The "Home Comfort" Range is all right in every respect and I do not see how we could get along without it as it does better work and takes so much less fuel than our old cast iron stove.
J. A. MCCORD, Fleming County.

I indorse all that has, or can be said in favor of the "Home Comfort" Range
S C. STOCKDALE, Fleming Co., Ky.

The above statement in behalf of the "Home Comfort" Range suits me, and I claim enough can not be said in their favor. I am using one and could ask for nothing better of the kind.
J. E. MCCARTY, Fleming Co. Ky.

THE EDITOR.

On an ermined stool he sits to think,
While the world hurries on below,
Then flashes of wisdom flow out in ink,
Till the attic is all aglow.
And the things he writes
In his dreamy flights
The nations rush frantic to know.

Never a bill has he to annoy—
Not a care for gold or for gain,
The ducats he can not even count,
As they drop round his desk like rain.
Bright gleams from his soul
Fill each pigeon hole,
And happiness walks in his train.

He knoweth all things and more than that—
From a pen to a parachute—
And should his thoughts for a time run flat,
There's a basketful at his feet,
While from under spheres
Sweet music he hears
That never was born of catgut.

Imps at his call come to do his will,
All ready to die for his sake,
And poets ten thousand, eager still
His life a paradise to make
O, I tell you, boys,
An editor's joys
Are transcendant, and no mistake.

No one to grumble—no one to say
"We don't want your sheet any more,"
His only woes are checks for his pay
Ere he cashes the ones before.
His study at home,
From floor to the dome,
Is padded with them o'er and o'er.

He sits on his tripod one short hour,
Then see him sweep down to the street,
Where a carriage waits, lest sun or shower
Should touch his head or wet his feet.
Heaven won't be new
To that great man's view.
Would you like such fortune to meet?

THE MOUNTAIN RIDE.

A Wild Lover Saved From Death in Spite of Himself.

The country schools of Shasta County open for their six or eight months' annual session pretty well on in the fall; but it was late, even for them, when John Rawlins, school teacher, called on the County Superintendent to make inquiries about a place. Yes, there was one school in need of a teacher—but it was a pretty hard position.

"I have had some experience," said Rawlins, "and somehow I manage to get along with schools that are called hard. In fact, I rather like the fun of them. I guess you needn't be afraid to send me there."

The district was far east in the pine region, the Superintendent said. It was in hot water most of the time. Teachers seldom staid over a month, and never had the support of more than half the people. The trouble had begun in political differences between the leading trustees, Michenay and Kester, and it furnished sensational pabulum for the eastern half of the county. Yet if only a treaty of peace could be negotiated between the opposing factions, there need be no trouble with the school—it was a pleasant one in every other respect.

Rawlins was disposed to try the experiment. He hired a pinto mustang, rode out of the picturesque mountain town, and through a narrow canon, whose stones were now in furrows by years of staging and teaming.

Broad and clear the Sacramento River swayed from bluff to bluff, and the captain of the ferry boat was named Flora Wilson. A handsome, dark-eyed girl she was, modestly affable and chatty as she turned the steering wheel. She had a bit of crochet work to take up as soon as the boat was set at the right angle against the current, and a rustic chair to do it in, hemmed about by flowers.

When darkness came, Rawlins was riding across a broken, rolling plain of red gravel, thickly set with scrub-oak, pine and thorny bushes. Dogs began to bark; it was Michenay's clearing. He slowly skirted it, making a wide detour, and reaching the branch road half a mile distant, for he was bound to Kester's first. More than two miles it was, and the bridle paths were hard to follow. At last he rode up to a rail fence, and a faint light gleamed from a cabin beyond.

"Hallo the house," he shouted, in pioneer phrase.

"Hullo yourself," came back in stentorian tones.

"How far is it to Milburn?"

"Twenty good miles, stranger."

"Can I stay here all night? Able to pay my own way."

"All right, stranger. Hitch the hoss in the shed, an' come in."

The Missourian pioneer of the Pacific coast is a much-criticised individual, but unless you irretrievably offend some of his numerous prejudices, he is as garrulous and mild-mannered a mortal as this planet holds. It did not take long for Rawlins to get on comfortable terms with the Kesters; a few bits of Shasta news, and a hope that the mines would soon begin operation, and so make times more lively, were quite sufficient. Pretty soon a little school talk began, engineered by the wily Rawlins.

"Here is a bright lad," he said. "I hope he has a good school to attend."

Kester flung himself out of his chair, and rose to his full height of six feet four.

"Mister, we orter, that's a fact. But we've had infernal poor schools. I hain't sent the children for 'most a term. School hed orter begin now, but there's a cross-tongued, black Republican Kanuck down on the crick, an' he an' I cain't pull together nohow. Besides old Mish'nay," continued Kester, "I hate the sight of that fool nevew of his."

The oldest daughter, seventeen or eighteen, who had been sitting so far back in the shadows that Rawlins had only seen the dimly outlined figure, rose silently, went to the door and slipped out into the darkness. She was a very pretty girl, fair and sweet-faced.

After the smaller children had gone to bed, Kester grew more confidential. Michenay had "hired the last fool of a teacher," but he should not hire the next one, "nor have anything to say about it." No shadow of suspicion that Rawlins belonged to the pedagogic order of creatures crossed the Missourian mind.

The next morning the young man sat on a rawhide-bottomed chair, tipping it back against the bole of a giant white oak; ate grapes that one of the tow-headed youngsters brought in his straw hat and opened fire on Kester as he mended his broken wagon-tongue.

"Now, let us talk business," he said. "I am a school-teacher, and willing to take your school, but it must be on my terms."

"You don't say so! Well, what sort of proposition hev' ye?"

"This: I will teach a week for nothing; then, if I do not like the school or the trustees, I shall leave. If I stay, you must pay me what you did the last teacher—no more, no less."

Kester at once acceded to these terms. "But ye cain't persuade old Michenay," he said as Rawlins mounted his horse. "We're powerful anxious ter hav ye, but he'll make trouble so soon's he knows I've hired ye."

Rawlins crossed the creek near Kester's, rode a mile east, turned south, crossed another stream and reached Michenay's from quite a different direction. The grizzled old man was dry-plowing, to sow his wheat before the rains, and the clouds of dust followed his creaking gang plow. Rawlins drew rein, talked crops and county politics, and was invited to dinner. The old man sat like a patriarch at the head of a family of nine children, of whom two were girls.

After dinner they sat on the porch, smoked the pipe of mutual good will and discussed Canada—"ze bes' country on ze globe,"—while a barefoot girl swung on the well curb, and two or three more on the porch rail, to listen to and watch the stranger.

"And so your cattle ranges go five miles beyond that peak?" said Rawlins. "There is enough for all your children, and you must manage to give them good educations."

"Ah, kind sir," cried Michenay, "it ees not posseebla, not now! Ze school is forever a despair." He pointed excitedly toward Kester's ranch. "Zare ees a man zat knows not'ing at all. A Democrat, a secessioner. I vote not with him. I send not my children with his."

Knitting his dark brows, the old man drove his heavy staff into the soil, uprooting one of his daughter's gilly flowers; and even as the earth flew, there was a rattle and scurry in the nearest clump of pines on the hill. Out of the forest, a hundred yards distant, sprang a great yellow horse and a blue-shirted rider. They came down upon the house like a tornado—the fierce, ugly, splendid-eyed, broad-chested mighty-limbed creature struggling with his bit and striving to throw his master, a swarthy youth of twenty. Just at the frail gate, which a touch from shoulder or hoof would have shattered, the stormy onset ended—the heavy Chileno bit did its work; passionate onward motion changed in absolutely one second to a gigantic effort to check their momentum; the unshod hoofs furrowed the red gravel; and stormy action was arrested in statuesque pose. The young man lifted his hat, and whirling his horse, disappeared in a dust-cloud.

"Mine brother's son Antoine," said Michenay. "He ees a good boy, but he has a temper; and it ees like ze evil spirit he rides. See! he did stop zat horse, Roland, in thirty feet from a gallop."

Rawlins resumed the interrupted conversation, and within one hour had engaged the school from Michenay, who advised him "not to go near zat ignoramus Kester." Then the new teacher made a frank avowal. Kester's consent had already been obtained.

Michenay was angry; but the thought of getting a week's free teaching appealed to his ideas of political economy, and he agreed to let Rawlins have his way; so one of his boys rode over the district that afternoon to inform every one that the trustees had hired a teacher.

In spring, toward the close of the term, Rawlins got up an old-fashioned spelling-match, a novelty in the country. It took the public fancy, and people rode or drove from farm-houses and pioneer cabins miles away when the evening came.

The dark-eyed young lady of the ferry-boat came under escort of Antoine Michenay, who did not leave her side the entire evening. He was jauntily dressed, and in high spirits; the girl seemed troubled and ill at ease as the evening wore on.

Mary Kester was expected to carry off the spelling honors, as a matter of course; but, much to every one's surprise, and her father's intense disgust, she missed one of the first words, and Adele Michenay won an unwonted victory.

After the entertainment was over, the girls went outside in the clear moonlight, and laughed and chatted, while the boys carried the benches back into the school-room, and arranged them as usual. Wagon after wagon was driven away, and soon the last of the merry group had left the door. Mr. Rawlins straightened the desks, rubbed off the blackboard, blew out the candles, locked the school-house and started for Michenay's, along the wood-path, haunted with an indescribable exhilarating fragrance, a mingling of sweet and spicy odors from blossoms, leaves, stems, from pines overhead and grass blades close to the joyous earth.

At the foot of the hill the path widened into a grassy opening. Over it the full moon hung, making it so light that one could see the brown specks on the drooping bells of the carnelian-colored wild lilies the girls had for many days watched and guarded. Besides the lily stems, all in a pitiful little heap, with her head on a mossy log, was Mary Kester, crying as if her heart would break.

Now Mary was the most modest and generous girl in the world, and no lost spelling-school honors would have made her cry that way.

It was impossible to leave the girl alone at night, crying in the forest a mile from home. Rawlins went up close to her, and spoke kindly, leaning over to take her hand. "Come, Mary, you must not stay here. I will walk home with you."

She started when he spoke, but almost at once controlled her sobs, rose without a word and took his arm. They turned back across the clearing. In a few moments she said apologetically: "I thought every one went round by the road, teacher; I thought no one crossed this way."

They were walking from the moonlit circle into the forest again, as Mary said this; but before Rawlins could reply they heard voices in the path before them—Antoine's and Flora Wilson's.

The girlish form on Rawlins' arm trembled perceptibly; a little hand urged him still further back in the shadow. But they could not escape, for the steep bank of a dry barranca curved behind them.

"You shall listen to me," Antoine was saying excitedly.

"I will not listen any more," Flora cried. "Ye have hed your answer already," she went on, a touch of her Scotch father's borderland burr coming into her voice. She took her hand from his arm and faced him angrily. "Ye've treated Mary ill, and ye know it; but t'was no doing of mine. I never wanted ye."

Antoine broke into a passionate and incoherent appeal.

"Take me home. O, take me home. I won't hear any more," cried the perplexed and angry girl.

Antoine threw himself down in an abandonment of grief on a log. Flora, both indignant and troubled, stood beside him.

"This is hard on us both," she said presently, more kindly. I'll be friends with you still, but you must take me home now, and give this all up."

He sprang wildly to his feet. "No! No!" he shouted. "Curse your soft words. I shall die because of you."

Lifting both hands to his mouth he gave a loud whistle, three times repeated. The far-off neigh of a horse answered him. Antoine whistled again, stamped his feet and cried loudly: "Roland! here! Roland!" Another wild neigh sounded nearer, but still on the farther bank of the deep and rapid river; then a splash, the sound of swimming, the rattle of stones, the snap and dull swish of branches thrust aside, and into the clearing ran the great yellow stallion. Antoine seized him by the mane and turned to Flora.

"Go home," he said. "I shall ride to my death to-night. You don't know the mountain boys yet. I ought to take you along."

He caught her by the wrist roughly, but before she could scream his manner changed, and he kissed her hand with a sudden hereditary French courtliness. He leaped upon Roland's dripping back. Mary screamed, but neither Antoine nor Flora heard her voice, for Roland sprang forward like a huge stone from a mediæval catapult, crashed through the chapparal down the slope, and into the river again. They heard him breasting the steep beyond, snorting as he ran through frightened bands of sheep and droves of cattle, while more terrific still, Antoine raised his voice in a half insane shout: "Good-bye, love."

A few seconds later there came a yet louder shout, then a sudden crash, as the manada of horses in the farther pasture ran shrieking against the rail fence, tore it to pieces and fled, still shrieking with terror, stampeded over the hillsides, while Antoine rode his unbridled whirlwind on into the deeper forest.

Flora stood terrified beside the trampled mountain lilies over which Roland had passed. The school-teacher bent over and whispered to Mary: "Will you do just what I ask?"

"Yes."

"Then sit on this flat rock; lean your head against my overcoat. Don't move till I come back."

He stepped out into the clearing, much to Flora's surprise.

"Miss Wilson, do you know the way to Michenay's?"

"No, I don't; I wish I did." She tried to speak defiantly, but it was easy to see he was in trouble. "Mr. Rawlins, what do you know about what has happened here?" she asked abruptly.

"I know all about Antoine, and I am going to see that you get home safely." She turned without a word and walked beside him.

Soon they reached the old stables and barns of Michenay. He ran in and bridled a horse, backed him out of the stall and into the shafts. Flora knew all such toggery and fastened at least half the straps.

"Now, Mr. Rawlins," she said, "I am going to drive myself home; you must not rouse the Michenays. It is only eight miles, and I know all the cross-roads."

He hesitated, thinking of the dilemma. The road was dangerous, and the moon very low. There might be drunken cattle-herders riding home after a spree.

"It is not safe, Miss Wilson."

"Don't talk to me," she cried. "I'd rather walk home than disturb any one in the house.

Suddenly the way out revealed itself to him. Mart Michenay was the brightest and pluckiest of fourteen-year-old-boys. He could keep a secret and he loved his teacher devotedly.

"Wait," he said to Flora. "Drive up to yonder oak, and wait there till I come back." He sprang over the fence, ran to the rear of the house and lifted Mart's window, down on the first floor, in a lean-to addition of split oak shakes.

"Martin! Martin!"

"Who is it!"

"Mr. Rawlins. Pull on your clothes, take a blanket and come out here quick. Don't make a noise."

The boy was at his side in a minute. They jumped the fence again and ran to the buggy.

"Now, Martin, jump in and drive Flora Wilson home. Get back in bed before morning, and don't whisper a word of this to any one."

"You can trust me, Mr. Rawlins."

Rawlins shook the boy's hand, lifted his hat to Flora and ran back, down the hollow, splashing across the brook, straight up the path. He heard their wheels rattle once, and then no more. Mary was sitting where Rawlins had left her, crying softly to herself. She had been scarcely fifteen minutes alone.

They walked on at once, and he told her of Flora's departure, praised Martin, made the most cheerful remarks he could think of, happy if he had the slightest assent from his companion. But presently she broke out: "What will become of him?"

"He is a splendid rider, Mary—none better in the region—and his horse will carry him safely all night, unless—" The teacher stopped, aghast at his own stupidity.

"Unless what, sir?" said the trembling girl.

"It is not likely to happen. They might roll down a hillside, but then that might not hurt them much; and Roland is so sure-footed. I think we may hope for the best."

"Oh, sir," she whispered, "I am so glad you think so. I've always liked Antoine," she said as simply as a child. "We played together long ago. He saved my life down at the creek one day. It's natural I should like Antoine."

"Of course it is; and don't you think he, too, remembers his childhood?"

"But perhaps not the same way."

"Perhaps not," said the schoolmaster musingly. "Mary," he went on abruptly, "you are seventeen; I am thirty in years, and more than that in experience. I tell you that you can live without Antoine. Think that I know nothing about it, if you like—but don't fail to keep at the head of your classes, and do everything just as you did before."

Mary only began to cry softly again, and he felt compunctionsly that this was rather stern preaching for the little maiden sobbing at his side. He put his hand gently on hers as it lay on his arm. "I'm just as sorry as I can be, Mary. You'll try to be a brave girl, won't you?"

"Yes, sir," she answered.

"Now, let us talk of something else." And he talked to her cheerfully till they reached the Kester cabin.

He went directly home to Michenay's. No use looking for Antoine until morning. At daybreak the anxious teacher went to Martin's room and called him. Only an hour's sleep the boy had had, yet he came out ready and smiling, a boy of a million for an emergency.

"Martin, did you ever know Roland to run away with Antoine?"

"Yes, indeed, sir, but Antoine brings him down."

"Suppose he was foolish enough, just for bravado, to jump on Roland unsaddled and unbridled?"

"Gracious, Mr. Rawlins, Roland 'ud run to the top of Mount Lassen before he stopped."

"You come down to the stables, Martin."

In ten minutes they had caught and saddled the two best colts in the home manada; in ten minutes more had swam the river and were galloping across the pasture beyond; in a third ten minutes had found the trail—as who, indeed, could help? It was like a blaze through a forest. Here Roland slipped and staggered; there, he plowed through the ground, flinging black mud far and wide; this giant fallen pine he leaped; yonder he swayed in sudden fright. Martin asked no questions, but he fully comprehended the emergency, and brought all his woodcraft into play.

Ah! here Roland left the grassy lowlands, and took the hillside paths. He twisted like a snake about the pines. There he ran between two tree trunks, and hardly a foot to spare on either side; that is the mark of Antoine's boot heel. Yonder bough would have killed him had he not been lying on his face, clasping Roland's mane.

"Martin, Martin, it gets worse! cried Rawlins. "Straight for the Big Slide, the horse has turned. Ride faster, Martin, faster! We can follow his trail at a gallop."

Here the cliff begins, a hundred feet down, and Roland's hoof-marks are hardly three feet from the edge. Ah, he shied back and ran off, but Antoine brings him up again. Here they approached the cliff once more, at a higher point, and brave Roland has reared, whirled, and again escaped.

Martin's face grew suddenly pallid. "Mr. Rawlins," he cried, "Antoine did that o' purpose. He tried to make Roland jump off!"

"How do you know?"

"He put a handkerchief in his mouth, back there a piece, an' pulled him round. See how steady he went?"

It was true. Antoine had gained partial control of Roland, and twice had forced him to the precipice, only carried back a hundred yards by the resolute horse. The third time he faces death; he brings Roland, perhaps blindfolded, up to the verge where, a quarter of a mile below, the jagged rocks lie. Great heavens! The edge fairly crumbles under his feet, but the grand creature fought his way backward inch by inch. Yes! he had broken the improvised rein, and bounded off for the lowlands with long, irregular strides. Yet Roland did not know what fear was. You could ride him against a wall of fire, or into the jaws of death. But on this occasion he somehow had no confidence in Antoine; he could not yield absolute obedience.

"Hurrah, Martin!" cried Rawlins. "Roland will save Antoine in spite of himself."

They rode down the hill in a tearing gallop, giving the horses the rein, and shouting to urge them faster. At last, in a belt of sage-brush barrens, the trail was lost for an hour. When it was picked up again, it led through a thorny tangle of chaparal. Maddened with pain, Roland had hurled himself forward as if he were charging a battery, and had rent and crushed a path into the open pastures beyond. Fluttering fragments of Antoine's garments, and drops of blood on the rocks, showed what a passage it had been. The rescuers followed fast on the track; such a wild journey could not last forever.

Soon they passed a brush-fenced wheat field; then heard the lowing of cattle among the hills beyond. They were approaching some house. A rod further the trail whirled about the clump of oaks into a foot path and past a giant boulder; from beyond, with sudden distinctness, came the sound of falling water; the ravines, long tending toward each other, met, and disappeared in a quartz-walled valley. The end had come here. Rawlins and Martin urged their horses on; but they suddenly reared and snorted wildly.

"Antoine! Antoine!" both man and boy cried in a breath.

Feeble as a baby's wail, out of the depths of the ravine, came a human cry, piercing the ripple of waters with it agonized appeal.

They left their horses, uncoiled their lariats and went down among the rocks. Roland's feet had slipped on the smooth edge; he had crashed through a sycamore top, and there he lay, more than a hundred feet down, stark and dead.

"Antoine, Antoine, where are you?"

"I see," cried Martin, and they soon reached him.

Brushed off by the tree top, yet falling throught it to the lower ledge, Antoine, though in piteous plight, was not mortally hurt; his leg was broken, and almost countless flesh-wounds and bruises added to his misery. One could not help contrasting this hollow-eyed, nearly naked, sorely wounded man, lying in the sun-glare, half way down a wild ravine, with the jaunty, foppish Antoine of the spelling school of a dozen hours before.

And there, as he lay, he looked straight down on dead Roland, eighty feet below; for hours he had heard, he had told them, breaking down into sobs, the brave creature's dying moans; had called, and heard the horse whinny back his fond and last recognition. The gray dawn broke overhead as Roland died; then the sun rose, and, though Antoine crawled out of its fiercest rays, the heat was terrible.

They lifted him to an easier position, making pillows of their coats, and gave him a drink.

"Martin," said the school-master, "climb the hill and get our bearings: we must have help here, and soon."

He only waited till the boy was gone to turn upon Antoine. He had no scruple about sparing him for the sake of his condition, for he knew his man. The hot-headed Canadian would scarcely have listened in less extremity.

"Antoine," he began, "this is the worst business I ever heard of. Do you know what you have done?"

"Broken myself all into bits and pieces."

"That is nothing; you will soon get well. But you have forfeited one girl's respect and friendship, have trifled with another girl's heart, have played the fool and the madman. Worst of all, you have murdered the horse that loved and trusted you, your beautiful Roland, who three times last night saved you from suicide, and would have carried you safely to the end, had it been in the power of flesh and blood. Don't you think Roland should be up here, and you there, on the blood-stained quartz?"

Antoine broke out furiously, "It's no one's business—"

"Antoine," said the school-master, "If I had not known of these things, and had not followed your tracks, you would perish here, in unspeakable agonies of thirst and pain. And your unshrived skeleton would bleach white on these rocks. Do you wish I had not come?"

"I thought I would rather die than give her up," muttered the young fellow.

"Because you did not love her. When a man really loves a woman, he wooes her with patience and courage, more by deeds than by words; it would be utterly impossible for him to frighten her, threaten suicide, dash off into the darkness and leave her alone in the forest. You never really loved Flora. You have never loved any one but yourself. Love is self-forgetfulness."

Antoine lay a moment in silence; then, surrendering with the completeness of his temperament, he looked up with his dark and beautiful eyes full of penitence, just as Martin came down the hill shouting: "They're coming, and we'll have him up in a hurry."

"Who are coming?" asked Rawlins.

"Kester and his hired men. That's Kester's dairy ranch, three miles from his farm. It's seven miles back to father's, an' we've rode nigh twelve miles, counting the turns. I met Kester," he went on as he came to the school-master's side; "he comes over here every Saturday—and I told him Roland ate loco-weed, got mache, spang crazy, sir, and run off with Antoine."

It was a brilliant explanation; no one in all that mountain land will doubt it. But looking at the death scene below, at the gathering vultures slow wheeling above their prey, remembering Roland's faithfulness to the end, this last requirement, this staining his royal memory to shield his "mache" master, smote Rawlins' heart with pity and sorrow.

"And what did Kester say, Martin?"

The boy laughed. "He said Roland was the best horse on Churn Creek, but Antoine wasn't no favorite of his."

Antoine's face flushed red. "Take me home," he cried. "I won't go to Kester's."

"You must, my dear fellow; it is the only way," said Rawlins. "Every minute is precious. You have lain here since daybreak. Now, Martin, ride for a surgeon."

Down the hill they ran a few minutes later, six healthy, big-hearted men, Kester foremost. When he saw Antoine, the tears sprang to his eyes and his voice trembled.

"It's blame rough. Never mind the hard things I've said of ye, Antoine. Jest look at that horse! Antoine, ye did hev an orful ride. Now, boys, chop off them tree-tops, an' whack up a litter, an' run for some blankets; an' you, Ad, skip out on the teacher's hoss an' bring Mary an' the ol' woman to the dairy ranch. Darn it, hurry up! work livelier! Who ever saw so cussed lazy a crowd!" And Kester pushed one of the men aside, seized a hatchet and began hewing a path through the bushes.

It took a long time to bring Antoine to the top of the ravine, and then he had to be carried across the fields with great gentleness, for the pain of his hurts was increasing. Before the party reached the rude cabin door Mrs. Kester and Mary had arrived on horseback—for every one rides in the mountains.

Mary, quiet and serious-eyed, was deftly helping everywhere, bringing cool water from the spring, smoothing the pillows, moving noiselessly about, the model of a nurse. A look of bewilderment yet rested in her eyes at the strangeness of this sudden call, but the tone in which she spoke to Antoine was serene, sympathetic, judicious. She had come there to nurse, not Antoine Michenay—not the man she loved—but a wounded and suffering fellow-mortal. The girlishness was gone; she was a woman, and able to keep her secrets.

Rawlins left Shasta at the end of that term of school. Changes came in his own personal affairs, and he never saw again its green valleys, its rushing rivers, its snowy peaks, its genial pioneers in camp and cabin; but he wrote to his old pupils, and had letters from them; and after half a dozen years, in one of these letters occurred the following paragraph:

"We have a little church now, and it was dedicated yesterday by ministers from Milburn and Shasta. It is built in the small clearing, near where that splendid lot of mountain lilies used to grow. Some of the girls filled a pitcher with them and set it on the pulpit, and the minister spoke about them in his sermon. But after the sermon what do you think happened? Antoine Michenay walked over and gave his arm to Mary Kester; then they went right up the isle and stood before the minister, and were married. There were no bridesmaids, but it looked as pretty as a picture. We all like Antoine better than we used to; he has been nicer and nicer ever since he was hurt so, and crippled so long; and everybody knows Mary Kester is the best and prettiest girl east of the Sacramento. Antoine is building a house and planting an orchard in the big field across the river from the old Michenay place."—Charles Howard Shinn, in Overland Monthly.

CHINESE REMEDIES.

Some of the Daintly Drugs Prescribed by Celestial Physicians.

The materia medica of the Chinese profession is something stupendous. The Pan-Tso, their standard work, is in thirty-eight volumes. It presents 11,896 formulæ, into the make-up of which over 1,900 substances enter. While there is almost no end to Chinese drugs, there are some substances which are favorites in the practice. Among these are claws and bones of the tiger and other wild animals, the cuttle-fish, dragons' teeth, fossils, the hide, horn and bones of the elephant and rhinoceros, the scorpion, snake skins, soot, and so on.

A favorite remedy is known as "the tincture of five poisons," made by steeping scorpions, snakes and other venomous creatures in samshu. This is given for fever, rheumatism and catarrh. In some parts of China it is considered the very highest degree of philanthropy for the rich to place this tincture at their doors, to be used without cost by the poor. Gunpowder, termed the "fine drug," is used as a vermifuge. A sensible remedy, which is of comparatively recent introduction among more enlightened people, is the gizzard of the common fowl, prescribed for dyspepsia. But the great cure-all with the Chinese is ginseng root. The resemblance which the roots often bear to the human form, either as the result of natural growth or skillful trimming, is given as the reason for the Chinese faith in the universal efficacy of this drug. Large and choice specimens of the root are carefully preserved in embroidered coverings and inclosed in cases of varying sizes, the whole being locked in brass-bound chests. An extraordinarily fine specimen is worth five hundred dollars. The hunting of these roots is pursued with all the ardor of gold-seeking.

The Chinese have little use for surgery. They resort to cupping and leeching and lancing on a small scale, and that is about as far as they go. Morbid growths are removed with what is known as "the five tigers specific," a composition of sulphate of iron, alum, nitrate of potash, metallic mercury and verditer. In only one respect is their surgery heroic. They will shove a needle into the body anywhere about as far as it will go.—Dr. G. W. Woods, U. S. N., in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

SIRENS OF BUSINESS.

Where the Weaker Sex is Winning Its Way Grandly.

The man who contributes to a charity or buys a bill of goods from a drummer has a vague notion that he has done a service for the solicitor. But the female canvasser never permits him to harbor any such idea about her. He is given to understand that he has done only what he should have done long ago, and it was highly improper for him to wait till she reminded him of it. That is the reason every one feels himself humble and abashed when a female canvasser booms up in the horizon and feels humbler and more abashed when she leaves.

There are two kinds of female canvassers—the old and the young varieties. Their methods are diametrically opposite. The one says everything she can; the other as little as she can. The former is a born exhorter, and was created for the purpose of running a scheme for absorbing the ears of a congregation. But as she found all the departments in those branches of industry filled up she took to canvassing to keep in practice. She can get in more vocal work in a given space than any male agitator of the organ of speech extant. The young variety of canvasser does not run the campaign that way. Her strong points are her eyes. Once her tongue has set forth her business it suspends and her eyes begin to issue dividends. Thereafter all operations are carried on from that quarter. She finds this the most effective way. A whole park of artillery would not hold its own as an instrument of destruction against the eyes of a well-organized canvasser. If she is coldly received she throws a little warmth and feeling into her glances. If she is rebuffed the eyes fill. If she is turned away she suffuses them with a look of pleading that would reduce adamant at a hundred paces. She begs with them, prays with them, urges with them and exhorts with them. and as there is no force known to science that will overcome this mute insistence, humanity has to yield and the reluctant purse strings have to loosen.—N. Y. Herald.

—Breakfast Cakes: One cup of Indian meal, one teaspoonful of salt, and one tablespoonful of sugar. Scald the meal, then add two tablespoonfuls of milk or water, one egg and one tablespoonful of flour. Stir it well. Butter your griddle. Put on large spoonfuls of the batter and fry a light brown.—The Household.

—To keep apples, says an old fruit merchant: "Let a barrel of winter apples freeze solid. Don't touch it, but let it stand just where it is and thaw out thoroughly, but gradually. Cover the apples so that they will be kept quite dark. Thus treated your barrel of apples will remain frozen solid for months, and the fruit, after thawing out gradually, will be plump, solid and sweet.—N. Y. Post.

—Leaves have no inconsiderable value as a fertilizer, and should not be burned, but composted or used as bedding. Their chief value lies, however, in their mechanical action when worked into stiff, tenacious clay soils. They render them porous, so that water can pass more readily through them, and when decayed lighten the soil and make it warmer and more easily worked.—N. Y. Examiner.

—The Art Amateur gives directions for making linen work smooth and even when it is finished. "Dampen it all over at the back with a sponge, and then stretch it tightly and evenly, face downward, on a board, or pin it out on a nailed carpet with a clean cloth underneath it. When the work, as well as the linen, is quite dry, it may be taken up, and if the edges show the pin-marks they can be smoothed with the fingers. When linen work is washed it must be treated in the same way."

HOME LIFE.

Cheerfulness the Great Requisite For the Preservation of Home Joys.

"There are souls in the world," says Faber, "who have the gift of finding joy everywhere, and of leaving it behind them when they go. Joy gushes from under their fingers like jets of light. Their influence is an inevitable gladdening of the heart. It seems as if a shadow of God's own gift had passed upon them. They give light without meaning to shine."

Such bright hearts have a great work to do for God and humanity. In the dark hours of the Nation's history it is such as these whose cheerful exhortations keep together the "forlorn hopes" of patriotism. In seasons of financial depression it is really wonderful to see how the great public searches for the men who with apparently sincere hearts can utter words of hope, and how, when found, it leans upon them, and willingly follows their example. In our private experiences, too, how much do we all owe to the cheer of sympathetic friends! Such cheerful souls are in demand everywhere; but in no place is the inspiration of their presence needed more than in the home.

Cheerfulness, it has been well said, is largely a matter of temperament. It depends, also, to a great extent upon good digestion and a good pulse, but it may also be a matter of philosophy. It is something which is capable of cultivation.

We have all seen a child who has had a fall rise to its feet, uncertain whether to laugh or cry. For a second its emotions are on the brink of indecision, and may fall one way or the other. But the mother is there, and helps it to decide by breaking into a laugh herself. The child concludes to treat the affair as a joke, and laughs heartily over the grotesqueness of the situation.

It is often so with children of a larger growth. There are many situations in life when it seems to be uncertain whether it is best to laugh or to cry over a misfortune. It is worth while, in such uncertainties, to cultivate the habit of looking on the cheerful side. We are not permitted by the law of charity to laugh at the misfortunes of others (if we can help it), but there is no law against laughing at our own. An indifferent frivolity is one thing; but the habit of discovering the humorous elements in our unpleasant experiences in life may serve to oil the wheels of life and prevent too much friction.

Let us be cheerful at home. Whatever murky disheartenment men have had to plod through during the day, a burst of light and cheer, a kind of domestic dayspring, should break upon them the moment they enter the charmed circle of home. "An outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace" is a theological definition which might be readily transferred to almost any of the prettinesses, the æstheticisms, of the household in which so many take delight. Beauty of color and form and sound, of taste and wealth, is only valuable in so far as it typifies the glad cheer which should characterize our homes.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

AN INTELLIGENT GOOSE.

A Gander Which Was Not as Stupid as the Rest of Its Family.

The Talker finds in a recent book on "The Intelligence of Animals" a story which goes to show that the goose is not always such a silly and stupid creature as some would have us believe. Years ago in a little village of Germany, an aged blind woman might have been seen on her way to church every Sunday, led by a gander which walked calmly in front of its mistress, holding her gown in his beak. As soon as the old woman was seated in her pew, the gander retired to the churchyard to feed upon the grass, and when the service was ended he conducted his mistress to her home. One day the pastor called to pay his old parishioner a visit, but found she had gone out; on his expressing some surprise to her daughter that she would trust her mother to go out alone, she replied: "Oh, sir, we have nothing to fear; my mother is not alone, the gander is with her."—Christian at Work.

A BUSINESS WOMAN.

Mrs. M. E. DeGeer, the Founder of Kansas Towns and Newspapers.

Mrs. M. E. DeGeer called to-day with her daughter, Mrs. Kate B. Russell, her successor in the publication of the Western Times, at Scott City. Mrs. D. and her two daughters came from Chicago to Scott County, Ks., fifteen months ago and pre-empted land thirty-five miles from Garden City, and after building their own claim-houses brought in a large colonization of wealthy and influential men and women. In the early spring she started the first paper in the county, built the first hotel and opened the first law office. The result of this woman's labors, assisted by her daughters, is that a beautiful young city now stands where her claim-house stood a year ago of 300 inhabitants, with dozens coming in each day and the whole country nearly settled. Mrs. DeGeer, to meet the demand of her many friends in the East, has now placed her paper in the hands of one daughter, Mrs. Russell, and her land and real estate business in the hands of another daughter, Mrs. Eastman, and has opened a new land and law office in Syracuse, on the Santa Fe Railroad, south of Greely County, bordering on Colorado, where she has organized a town company for the purpose of establishing towns in that county. As in Scott County, she built the first house in Greely County, and incorporated a town company, with a staff of officers, to use her own words, "with money and brains." Messrs. Rice, Hunter, Decker and Core, of Hutchinson; Childs & Parsons, of Arkansas City; Hon. H. M. Wheeler and herself. They have a hotel with other buildings in their new town, Greely City, with a rich county of good land.—Topeka Daily Commonwealth.

CAPTURED BY INDIANS.

Strange Adventures of a Philadelphian in the Black Hills.

"This is a very strange story of mine," said a queer old man to a reporter yesterday. His garments were filthy, and he was old and feeble and wretched looking. "My name is Sebastian Beck, and in 1875, during the Black Hills mine excitement I left Philadelphia with a party of men and their wives and children to go in search of gold. I have just come back. We worked veins in Wyoming and Dakota, and had amassed $10,895 worth of gold-nuggets, and were just starting a colony when one day three thousand Indians swooped down on us, took our gold, and blindfolded and strapped us on ponies. Then the Chief, 'Black Moon,' went one way with the women and children, whom we never saw afterward, and Sitting Bull took us men into Montana. For ten years we were kept with the Indians, and almost became Indians ourselves. In their battles with the whites we were compelled to take part, and were dressed like warriors, with paint, feathers, bows and arrows and tomahawks. I was present at the massacre of General Custer, and had on my paint and feathers, and did my share of the whooping and fighting.

"I was made Chief of a band of Indians, and according to the rules of the tribe, had to marry a squaw. Some time ago while fishing, I sighted one of the officers of Fort Walsh, and, calling him, told him my story. He helped me escape from the Indians, and when I reached the fort I could hardly make them believe I wasn't an Indian. Ever since my escape I have been working my way East."—Philadelphia Times.

The Booming South.

Every mail brings new evidences of the birth and re-awakening of Southern industries. The magical success of the iron mines of Alabama has been one great incentive to activity. Ten years ago these mines could have been bought for $50,000; to-day they are held at as many millions. One of the most recent enterprises projected is a railroad from Knoxville to Nashville. This road will open some of the richest coal fields in the country, will penetrate primeval forests of walnut, ash, beech, chestnut and oak, and will give value to a large grazing territory and to one of the best tobacco-growing regions in the South. To-day the Southern Appalachian range is the richest untouched treasure house in the country. Its hills hide most of the materials that minister to man's well-being, including even petroleum and natural gas.—N. Y. Star.

—M. Ballaud asserts that flour kept in sacks for two or three years is unwholesome, because alkaloids are formed in consequence of the acidity of the old flour during the transformation of gluten under the influence of the natural ferment of wheat. When such flour is treated with ether and the product evaporated on a sand bath, there is found a fatty matter which has an acid reaction, exhales a disagreeable odor and has an acrid taste. If a little hot water is added and the mixture permitted to stand over the sand bath a short time and then allowed to cool, the alkaloids may easily be recognized on the glass slides on employing the usual tests. The reactions may be obtained with flour even but a year to a year and a half old, but they are very marked with flour which had lain two or three years after having been milled.

—The Hindoos say that chess was the invention of an astronomer who flourished several thousand years ago, and who was possessed of supernatural knowledge and acuteness. The Greeks claim that it was the invention of Palmedos to beguile the tedium of the siege of Troy. The Arab legend is that it was devised for the instruction of a young despot by his tutor, a learned Brahmin, to teach the youth how a King was dependent on his subjects for safety.

—According to General Morin, the eminent expert, the proper temperature in well ventilated places is as follows: Nurseries, asylums and schools, 69 degrees; workshops, barracks and prisons, 59; hospitals, 61 to 64; theaters and lecture-rooms, 66 to 69. In dwellings in this country it has been the custom to keep the temperature at 65 to 70 degrees.

—An exposure to light during twenty-five years has produced remarkable changes in the colors of beetles in an English museum. Fiery red has turned to bright green, pale yellow to brown, blue to black, and green to purple.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

CONSUMPTION.

Important to the Public as well as the Medical Profession.

Hall's Journal of Health, referring to Consumption, makes the following important statement:

"Consumption usually begins with a slight, dry cough in the morning, then on going to bed, getting more and more frequent, with more and more phlegm, increasing debility, thinness of flesh, shortness of breath, and quickness of pulse," and it may be added that in desperate cases, and, in fact, in all cases of Consumption, or troubles of the throat and lungs, immediate relief may be obtained and a permanent cure affected by the use of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, a medicine known for more than thirty-five years as an unfailing remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis and all pulmonary and pectoral diseases. That the worst cases of Consumption have been cured by the use of Hall's Balsam has been attested to by the thousands who have used it, or have been cognizant of its wonderful remedial efficacy. BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME XI. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 27, 1886. NUMBER 12.

EMPTY GRAVES.

Decatur, Georgia, in a Furious Fever of Excitement.

Body-Snatchers' Work—Several Coffins Exhumed, but the Silent Occupants Were Gone.

DECATUR, GA., January 22.—This community is greatly excited over the repeated desecration of its grave-yard by body-snatchers and the discovery of the complicity of the sexton in the crime. Decatur has a handsome cemetery, located in the edge of the town. The inclosure is large, and many of the lots are well cared for. There the bodies of the dead have been laid to rest for three or fourscore years. A part of the cemetery is set aside as "God's acre," and there the poor are laid away. Up to a week ago no one dreamed that the bodies in the cemetery had been disturbed, but last week Joe Smith, the sexton of the cemetery, directed suspicion on himself, and was watched that night. With George Vaughn, the negro janitor of the Atlanta Medical College, he was detected in the act of robbing the grave of Israel Sanford. Vaughn gave bond, while Smith was lodged in jail. The body was never recovered. Smith is still in jail. About two weeks ago Simon Read, a colored man aged seventy-five years, died. He was buried in "God's Acre." When it was found that the body of Sanford was missing a great many people began to wonder if old man Read's had gone the same way. Public opinion ran high, and pressure was brought on the Mayor and Council for an investigation. Yesterday Mayor Kirkpatrick, Councilman Austin, Marshal Chivers and several other gentlemen went to the graves, accompanied by a force of negro men to open them and see if there was anything missing. The first grave examined was that of Simon Read. The negroes with shovels set upon the grave and were soon at the coffin. It was empty, save a pair of breeches and one or two minor pieces of wearing apparel. The body of the old man had been taken away, and was then, no doubt, being well cured in some dean's vats. The negroes who were shoveling dirt grew very much excited and did not need to be urged to greater exertion. As soon as it was clearly seen that Read's body was gone, they were put to work on two other graves that were very near together. Both graves of colored people and when the coffins were reached it was found that one body was gone. The men were then put to work on the grave of a white lady whose death occurred some weeks ago. When the planks over the coffin were reached Mayor Kirkpatrick said: "It is no use to go further in this grave. I saw this lady buried and I know those planks have not been disturbed." The coffin was therefore not disturbed. There were no other suspected graves that the Mayor felt authorized to open, and the work was abandoned at that point. There are other graves in the cemetery that are thought to be empty, but so far there have been no other investigations, as the relatives of the dead people object to the graves being opened. It is not improbable, however, that there will be still more graves opened. The general impression is that there has been a good deal of grave-robbing in the vicinity of Atlanta. Of late several robberies have been detected, and it is believed that about these parts many a mound rises above an empty coffin.

A Rumpus in the Ohio Senate.

COLUMBUS, O., January 22.—In the Senate to-day President Kennedy held a point regarding a resolution to take up the Hamilton County contest cases and consider them in open session. An appeal was taken fr[illegible] the decision and sustained. The Chairman then rose to a question of privilege, and pointedly defined his authority and duties as presiding officer, which, he said, would be observed according to law and precedent, regardless of rules adopted by the majority to abridge his constitutional rights. On the question of the adoption of a minority report by the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the Hamilton County contests, the Chair held that the four Hamilton County members could not vote, they being interested parties. Then there was a row. The Democrats refused to vote on any question, and the Chair declared the report adopted by the seventeen Republican votes as that would be a majority under the ruling. In the midst of great excitement, a recess until to-morrow morning was declared. President pro tem O'Neill took the chair, and the Democrats, organizing another Senate, reversed a part of the proceedings. The Democrats adjourned to 4 p. m. Monday. The conflict of authority may possibly lead to serious trouble.

Seacoast Fortifications Recommended.

WASHINGTON, January 23.—The Secretary of War to-day submitted the report of the Fortifications Board. It is a long document, and describes fully the necessity and advantages of better coast defenses. It estimated that it will require about $126,000,000 to establish a good system of defenses. A recommendation is made that an appropriation of $21,000,000 be made at the present session of Congress to secure the necessary plant for beginning the construction of such heavy ordnance as will be required. The board also suggests the establishment of two Government foundries, and recommends the construction of torpedo boats for harbor protection.

Chinese Danites.

ST. LOUIS, January 22.—In the Chinese murder trial yesterday it was found that the defendant belonged to a secret society which had its "Danites" to punish with death any member who betrayed the secrets of the organization. These assassins were called "The Order of the Golden Hatchet." A Chinese witness yesterday refused to give any information about the Society, alleging that he would be assassinated inside of a month. Several members of the Order are in every city, whose duty it is to obey the orders of the Society in the matter of putting objectional Chinamen out of the way.

A Mendacious Merchant.

OTTAWA, ONT., January 22.—A merchant of Calgarry, named Ferlnud, who has traded among the Indians of the Northwest, but who has a grievance against the Dominion Government, is said to have set afloat all the sensational stories about the threatened uprising. Sir John MacDonald who arrived here yesterday, says that there is not the slightest indication of trouble, and that all the agents of his department report the Indians on all reserves quiet and perfectly satisfied.

Fifty-eight Cavalry Horses Burned.

FT. CUSTER, MONT., January 22.—The cavalry stable with fifty-eight horses were burned at the post here to-day.

Indian Affairs.

WASHINGTON, January 22.—The annual conference of the Board of Indian Commissioners and the representative of the various missionary societies, Indian Associations, etc., was held here yesterday. A resolution was adopted declaring in favor of standing by the treaty rights of the Indians, and elevating them before dissolving their tribal relations and dividing their lands in severalty. A resolution against the bill of Congressman Townshend, of Illinois, to organize the Indian Territory into a Territory of the United States was unanimously adopted.

Epidemic of Diphtheria.

READING, PA., January 22.—Malignant diphtheria prevails in the northern portion of this county to an alarming extent. Between twenty-five and thirty deaths have occurred within a short time within a radius of five miles. The disease has now broken out in the eastern portion of Richmond Township, and numerous deaths are reported every day.

Fatal Coasting Accident.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 21.—William Barry, James Broderick and Wm Carsen, ranging in age from sixteen to eighteen years, were coasting on Webster avenue last evening, when they collided with a heavy wagon. Barry and Brodarick received fatal injuries and Carsen was painfully cut and bruised.

THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

Victoria Opens the British Parliament in Person.

LONDON, January 21.—The Queen alighted at the Peers' entrance to the House of Lords at 1:30, where she was met by Lord Halsbury, the Lord High Chancellor, and escorted within the Chamber. Her Majesty was at once escorted to the Throne, and when she was seated Lord Halsbury, the Lord High Chancellor, immediately began the reading of the address. The Queen's speech opens with a reference to her relation with the other great powers, which she said was friendly. She was pleased to state that the Afghan boundary question was settled.

"The Roumelian rising shows that the people of that country desire a political change. My object in the negotiations which have been carried on in this connection was to bring them under Prince Alexander of Bulgaria, without impairing the Sultan's rights.

"The long-continued acts of hostility of King Theebaw necessitated war against Burmah. The gallantry of the forces under General Pendergast rapidly reduced the country, which, to insure peace, has been incorporated into the empire.

"The agreement made with Spain secures to England all the commercial rights granted to Germany in the Carolines.

"I have seen with deep sorrow a renewal of the attempt to excite the Irish against the Union. I am resolutely opposed to the disturbance thereof, and I am convinced that I have the support of my parliament and people. The social and material conditions of Ireland engages my attention. Although there has been no marked increase in crime, legal processes in many places have been resisted, and organized intimidation continues. My Irish subjects must be protected in their legal rights and individual liberty by every effort. If the existing law be inadequate to cope with growing evils, I look with confidence to your willingness to invest the Government with all necessary powers.

"Bills will be introduced to create councils in the counties of Great Britain, who will undertake the local business now transacted by the Courts of Quarter Sessions.

"A measure for reform in the county government of Ireland will also be presented.

"You will also be presented with bills facilitating the sale of glebe lands, removing the difficulties hindering the cheap transfer of land; mitigating the distress of the poor in the Western highlands of Scotland, and extending the power of the Railway Commission.

"I trust that beneficial results will flow from the Royal Commission on Education."

The address closes with an expression of hope for the prompt and effectual dispatch of the important business before Parliament, and commands the Parliament to the keeping and guidance of Almighty God.

Miners Crushed to Death.

MAHONY CITY, PA., January 21.—Jacob Branshire, Nicholas Caunute, miners, and two laborers were working in the gangway of Ellangowan Colliery yesterday when a terrible crash was heard in all parts of the mine. The miners, about 200 or more, thought an explosion had occurred, and all hurried to the gangway, from whence the noise came, when it was discovered that about ten tons of rock and coal had fallen, completely burying alive Branshire and Caunute, but only partially covering the two laborers, who had extricated themselves when assistance arrived. They were not fatally injured, but were terribly cut and bruised. The work of rescuing the other two was then begun, and an hour subsequently the bodies were found. Death must have been instantaneous, as almost every bone was broken.

Big Beef-Slaughtering Schemes.

KANSAS CITY, MO., January 21.—The Times to-morrow will say that the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company, in connection with its projected lines into the Indian Territory and Texas, will establish stock-yards at Argentine, adjoining the city, with capacity for thirty or thirty-six thousand head of cattle, and also erect large packing-houses. Work will be commenced as soon as the season permits. The paper also states that an Eastern firm owning eighteen butcher-shops in New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore have purchased ground for a large packing-house, from which to supply their Eastern markets with dressed beef.

None Escaped Injury.

ST. JOSEPH, MO., January 21.—A disastrous wreck occurred last night on the Des Moines & St. Joseph branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy system, about four miles west of Albany. The passenger train bound for St. Joseph encountered a broken rail, when the whole train, except the engine, was thrown from the track and down an embankment fifteen feet, demolishing the cars. There were fifteen passengers on the train and none escaped injury. An old man named Millar, of Palmyra, Iowa, was instantly killed, his neck being broken and skull crushed.

The Nanticoke Imprisoned Miners.

WILKESBARRE, PA., January 21.—It being still believed by the relatives of the entombed men at the Nanticoke mines that some of them may possibly be alive, it has been decided to sink a six-inch bore hole over the spot where the men, if alive, or supposed to be, so that relief can be given them. It will take about twenty days to sink the hole. The experienced miners believe that the men have been dead for some time, but the hole will be sunk to satisfy the relatives of the buried men.

Distressing Double Drowning.

DAWSON, PA., January 21.—A sad skating accident, resulting in the drowning of two persons, occurred near here last night. A party of young folks were enjoying themselves on the Youghiogheny River ice, when a young lady named Fisher fell into an air hole. Her escort, James Marshall, rushed to her rescue, but the ice broke, letting him into the water also, and before succor could reach them the current swept them under the ice and they were both drowned. The bodies have not been recovered.

Spanish Revolutionists in France.

MADRID, January 21.—It is rumored that a revolutionary expedition against Spain is being prepared in France, and that it will depart from Marseilles.

Called Bonds Owned by National Banks.

WASHINGTON, January 21.—The Secretary of the Treasury to-day transmitted to the Senate his reply to the resolution of Senator Ingalls, in which he informs the Senate that of the bonds included in the $10,000,000 call $5,095,850 worth are owned by national banks and deposited with the United States Treasury to secure their circulation.

Mother and Two Children Cremated.

BOONEVILLE, MO., January 21.—At 7:30 o'clock this morning a frame tenement house, occupied chiefly by colored people, was destroyed by fire. Anna Reed, colored, and her two children, were unable to escaped from the burning building, and they were all burned to death.

Chinese Starving.

VICTORIA, B. C., January 21.—The distress among the Chinese is appalling. Many are begging, but most are stealing and house-breaking. The Mayor has informed Chinese merchants that they must contribute to the support of their starving countrymen. Soup kitchens are talked of.

Horrible Death of a Child.

ZANESVILLE, O., January 21.—A little daughter of Henry Darner, of Perry Township, was burned to death last evening. Her clothes caught fire while she was standing in front of the fire to get warm, and before the flames could be extinguished the child was burned into a crisp.

Buried in the Ruins.

TERRE HAUTE, IND., January 21.—At 9:50 o'clock this morning a terrific boiler explosion occurred at the distillery of Fairbanks. Dunning, Frank McNellie and Geo. Otterman were killed. Their bodies have been recovered from under a heap of debris frightfully mangled. Charles Wilkar, Michael Ryan, Riley Evington, Frank Bryant and Joe Parsons are among the injured. The entire engine-house is torn down. Damage not estimated. Cause of the explosion is not known.

A Big Strike Ended.

PITTSBURGH, January 21.—The strike at the Edgar Thompson steel works is ended and work will be resumed at once.

A MARRIAGE JOKE.

Two Frolicsome Young Men, Disguised as Indians,

Are United by a 'Squire, Who Afterwards Sues Them for Damages.

LUMBERTON, N. C., Jan. 25.—A lawsuit just entered here brings to light an extraordinary marriage performed early last week in a neighboring township. 'Squire James Bishop was called on some time since by John Trant, a Croaton Indian, who solicited his services to marry him to an Indian girl. The 'Squire stipulated to perform the ceremony Monday evening about dark. While in a group of young men a few days later he mentioned the interview, and said it was the first time in his experience of twenty-one years that he had been called on to perform the marriage ceremony for Indians. Just after dark Monday night two young men, one of them dressed as a woman, came to the 'Squire and asked to be married, saying they were the Indians. The 'Squire came out with a lamp in hand and the wind extinguished it. One of the party then said: "We are in a hurry; don't matter about the light; marry us in the dark." The 'Squire at first demurred, but the man said: "I'll pay you five dollars, we are in a big hurry." 'Squire Bishop then performed the ceremony briefly. When it was over he asked for the license and fee, whereupon the young man laughed, and after telling him how he had been sold ran off. The next day he demanded five dollars, which they refused to pay. The third day he was ill of pneumonia, and had a narrow escape. He is still confined to his bed. Yesterday he instituted suit against Davis Furneyhough and Richard Roach for $1,000 damages. He alleges that he caught pneumonia by standing out in the cold to perform the bogus ceremony, and alleges also that as he did perform the ceremony he is entitled to the $5 fee, out of which he has been swindled. Later the parties asked him to withdraw the suit upon payment of the $5. This he declined to do.

A FATED FAMILY.

Seven Mysterious Deaths Within Twenty Months in One Household.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Jan. 25.—The death of George M. Palmer, Jr., twenty-two years old, of No. 143 Otter street, was reported to the Coroner yesterday. This is the seventh death which has occurred in the family under peculiar circumstances in twenty months. Geo. M. Palmer, Sr., is a broker who has lived for more than twenty years at the corner of Otter and Sophia streets. About May 1, 1884, one of his children died after a brief and mysterious illness. Since then the deaths of his five other children and his wife have occurred in rapid succession, in the same mysterious manner. The sixth death occurred about the last of November, and was that of a daughter. A thorough investigation was made by the Coroner without result. The post-mortem examination showed that death had resulted from Bright's disease of the kidneys. Dr. Starck, the family physician, had diagnosed the case, which had the symptoms, like those preceding, of lead poisoning. An analysis of the water showed the presence of lead, but not in sufficient quantities to produce the symptoms or cause death. On occasion of the sixth death, Dr. Taylor made an investigation and reported to the Board of Health. He said that the house was healthy, that there was no lead in the water and that he could not account for the deaths. Dr. Starck is convinced that the cases were all of chronic lead poisoning, and that large quantities of lead must have been taken into the system in some manner. Palmer's business, as a broker, has been greatly injured by the deaths. Many neighbors think there will soon be developed a terrible case of wholesale murder by poison.

Couldn't Give Her Up.

CANTON, O., Jan. 25.—Several weeks ago the daughter of Michael Flaherty, a young woman of marriageable age, declared her intention to get married. Although the father did not directly object, the thought of having his only daughter leave his little household preyed upon his mind. The marriage occurred yesterday morning. When the couple left Flaherty's house for church he was in his usual health, but when they returned an hour later he was found lying at the point of death, and expired a few moments after their arrival of heart disease. His death is directly due to the shock given the old gentleman by his daughter's marriage.

The Mexican Pension Bill as Amended.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The House Committee on Pensions to-day added an amendment to the Mexican pension bill introduced in the House by Mr. Woolford, and directed the report of the bill to the House. As agreed upon in the committee the bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension rolls, at the rate of $8 per month, the names of all surviving officers, soldiers and sailors who served in the Mexican war for any period during the years 1845, 1846, 1847 and 1848, or their surviving widows. No soldier whose political disabilities have not been removed shall be entitled to the benefits of the act.

Miners Overwhelmed and Killed.

GUNNISON, COL., Jan. 25.—In a snow slide that carried away a cabin yesterday at the Excelsior Mine, in Poverty Gulch, near Crested Butte, three miners named Wm. Alexander, John St. John and Mr. Gose were killed. The bodies were recovered to-day. A second slide carried away a cabin in Crystal Basin, occupied by Robert Corey and Henry Collins. Both were killed. Slides are occurring daily. Great anxiety is felt for other miners' camps not yet heard from.

The Chinese Must Surely Go.

PORTLAND, OREGON, Jan. 25.—A dispatch from Tacoma, W. T., says that the jury in the trial of fifteen prominent citizens and officials of Seattle, indicted under the so-called ku klux act, have rendered a verdict of not guilty. The town is wild with enthusiasm, and the feeling that the Chinese must go is now stronger than ever.

Hard Winter.

EDINBURGH, Jan. 25.—All reports agree that this is the hardest winter Scotland has experienced in twenty years. The snow is two feet deep. Sheep are perishing, and wild birds are flocking to the towns and villages to obtain food. The railway companies find it very difficult to keep trains moving.

—A small whitefish, seemingly a new variety of the ichthyological species, is visiting Oregon rivers in large numbers, the annual run commencing with the first fall rains and continuing two or three months. It resembles the smelt in its pearl-like whiteness, but there the resemblance ends, as it has well defined scales, and a single specimen sometimes weighs a pound or more. As far as can be ascertained it has never been found excepting in the waters of the Willamette and its tributaries, and only within four or five years.—Chicago Times.

—The death of Dr. F. [illegible] Prideaux has called forth many expressions of regret in England. She was one of the most distinguished of the women graduates in London University. In her examination in 1882 she held the first honors in anatomy and took the gold medal in scholarship. In 1884 she was accorded honors in each subject. Her death was due to diphtheria, contracted while at her post of house-surgeon in the Paddington Hospital for children.

—A pear that weighs 2½ pounds and measures 14½ inches the short way round and 18½ inches the long way has been picked in Shasta County, Cal.

A POOR-HOUSE BURNED,

And Five of the Unfortunate Inmates Perish in the Flames.

JACKSON, MICH., January 24.—The County Poor-house was almost entirely destroyed by fire at 1 o'clock this morning. There were forty inmates, and all escaped but five, who perished in the flames. The remains of the victims were brought to the city to-day. The dead are as follows: Dolly Mertin, aged 60, insane, an inmate for twelve years; Kate Avery, aged 70, insane, an inmate for ten years; Jane Atkins, aged 70 insane, an inmate for ten years; Zena Boynton, aged 92, deaf; Charles Elliot, aged 73, blind. The building is situated in a lonely spot about four miles from the city. It was recently built at a cost of $12,000. The fire, the origin of which is unknown, broke out in the inmates' kitchen, and the whole interior was destroyed. The thermometer at the time registered 10 degrees below zero. All the inmates lost their clothing, rushing out into the snow in a naked condition. Thirty of the paupers were brought to the city and housed. Some of these will die from the effects of the exposure they were subjected to. John Doherty, the hired man, brought three of the lunatics down the fire-escape in his arms, thus saving their lives. An imbecile boy, nineteen years of age, was found in bed and was rescued by means of the fire-escape. There were only two men, besides the inmates, about the place when the fire broke out and they rescued the inmates before other help arrived. Wm. Mills, one of the inmates, was the man who first issued Sanders' Spelling Book. At one time he was worth a quarter of a million dollars.

A MOST BRUTAL MURDER.

An Old Lady Wantonly Killed by a Negro Near Henderson, Ky.—The Murderer Lynched.

HENDERSON, January 24.—A cruel murder was committed before daylight this morning three miles below this place. Calvin Simpson, a Union County negro, broke into the house of an old white lady named Mrs. Graves. She and two daughters fled from the house, followed by Simpson. The old lady was overtaken and killed with a club. The girls escaped unhurt to a neighbor's house. Simpson then went to Miles Browns's house, a near neighbor, drove him out, and took possession. Simpson fortified himself in the house, which was guarded until officers arrived and battered down the door and arrested Simpson, who was brought here and put in jail. He feigns insanity, and is quite violent. There is talk of lynching, but all is quiet to-night.

EVANSVILLE, IND., January 25.—A special to the Journal from Henderson at 2 this morning states that a mob took Calvin Simpson, the mulatto murderer of Mrs. Graves, from the jail at half past 1 o'clock, and hung him to a tree half a mile from town, after which they riddled the body with bullets. The mob told him to say his prayers, which he did. They then asked him what he killed Mrs. Graves for. He replied that the Lord asked him to do so. They then said: "Up you go to the Lord," and strung him up. They then retired and left him hanging. There have been so many murders in that section of country that the people are resolved to stop the business.

SEVEN RAVING MANIACS.

A Whole Family Rendered Crazy by Being Shamefully Swindled.

ST. LOUIS, January 24.—Seven brothers, all raving maniacs, en route for the Jacksonville, Ill., asylum, passed through this city yesterday. The Commissioner in charge of the lunatics states that prior to the war a wealthy farmer by the name of Anson Arnold settled in Hickory County, Mo., with a large family. The acquirement of money seemed to be their highest aim in life, and the whole family of seven sons and five daughters deprived themselves of the necessities of life in order to gain it. About three years ago a stranger visited their home, and after convincing them that they could in a short time largely increase their wealth, induced them to invest their all in what proved to be a mythical silver mine in Nevada. After months of anxiety they learned that they had been imposed upon, and all seven of the brothers, upon the receipt of the news, immediately became afflicted with a violent form of insanity, which is the cause of their present trip to Jacksonville.

TWO CONFIDENCE MEN

Who Imposed on Evangelist Steve Holcomb and His Louisville Congregation.

LOUISVILLE, January 24.—R. D. McKelvey, aged 25, son of David McKelvey, Mayor of Allegheny City, Pa., was arrested to-night at the instance of the evangelist, Steve Holcomb, who charged him with obtaining money under false pretenses. McKelvey and his partner, Robert Brooks, were converts at Holcomb's Gospel Mission, and soon became earnest exhorters at the meetings. McKelvey borrowed money from Holcomb, saying he wished to go into the peddling business. Yesterday he eloped with Miss Lizzie Elliott, a member of Holcomb's congregation, who clerks in a shoe store. An investigation, showing that McKelvey and Brooks were sharps who have served terms in the penitentiary, and who have been working confidence games in other cities, led to the arrest.

Eleven Dead Bodies Recovered.

WHEELING, W. VA., January 24.—Since yesterday eleven more bodies have been recovered from the Newburg mines. The bodies were found in various positions, some with arms extended as if about to pursue their usual work, others with arms and limbs contracted as if in awful agony. All were terribly burned and blackened, and their distorted features told of their terrible sufferings, but none were so mutilated as the three that were recovered yesterday. One man was found face down with his head on his arm as if he had escaped the violence of the explosion, and assumed that position in hope of finding sufficient air to prolong life until rescued, but this theory is contradicted by practical miners, who think the men were all killed by the explosion.

His Mother's Dream Comes Sadly True.

WYANDOTTE, KAS., January 24.—A young man named J. S. Conner, from Stelia, Neb., arrived here yesterday to take a position as telegraph operator at the Missouri Pacific Depot. He was found dead in his bed at Ryan's Hotel this morning. He had blown out the gas and suffocated. A letter was found in his pocket from his mother, saying that she had dreamed he was dead.

Both Apparently Bent on War.

LONDON, January 25.—Turkey is making the greatest naval preparations, fearing action by Greece.

ATHENS, January 24.—The army will soon be ordered to cross the frontier.

Burned to Death in a Fit.

HAWKINSVILLE, GA., January 24.—A neighbor who called in to see Mrs. Johnson, wife of Dr. Johnson, found her lying on the floor dead, her head resting on a bed of ashes in the fire-place, her nose and hair burned off, eyes burned out, and clothing burned off. It is supposed she fell in the fire in a fit.

Good, Fat Cattle for Chicago.

SHOSHONE, IDAHO, January 24.—Eighteen car-loads of Idaho cattle, fattened on clover hay, were loaded to-day at Caldwell for the Chicago market. This is the first train load of winter-fed cattle shipped this season over the Oregon Short Line. The running time was made thirty miles an hour.

Fatal Accident to a Sleighing Party.

ELMIRA, N. Y., January 23.—Three couples of prominent young people from Havana were sleigh-riding this afternoon, near Millport, a liveryman named Manning driving the team. The horses ran away throwing the entire load with great violence down an embankment. Miss Clara Ellis, daughter of Prof. Ellis, of Cook Academy, was thrown against a telegraph-pole and instantly killed, and all suffered severely from the fall.

Safe-Blowers Who Got $1,500.

EVANSVILLE, IND., January 24.—A safe at the town of Cairo, Henderson County, was blown open this morning and $1,500 in money, besides notes and checks, was stolen.

XLIXTH CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, January 21.—SENATE.—Bills introduced: To enable the people of the Territory of Dakota to form a Constitutional and State Government; to prevent the demonetization of American coin by certain persons in the United States. Laid on the table for the present, by request. The Senate proceeded to the consideration of bills on the calendar. The first bill in order was one to divide part of the Sioux reservation in Dakota into a separate reservation, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder. The bill, after debate, finally went over, and the bill to provide for the counting of the Electoral vote was taken up, and Mr Sherman took the floor and addressed the Senate. Mr Sherman then offered an amendment striking from the bill the clause allowing either house to exclude a vote, and providing that in case of disagreement between the houses the question in dispute should be submitted in a joint convention of both houses, which joint convention shall immediately, without debate, upon the roll-call of the respective houses, vote upon the question or questions upon which there has been such disagreement, and the decision of the majority of the members of the joint convention shall be deemed final and conclusive, and the votes shall be counted accordingly, and be announced by the President of the Senate; that while the two houses shall be in meeting, as provided in this act, the President of the Senate shall have power to preserve order, and no debate shall be allowed, and no question shall be put by the presiding officer except to either house, or a motion to withdraw, and upon questions which the two houses have disagreed, as aforesaid. Mr. Edmunds replied at some length, and concluded by saying that he could see neither the wisdom nor the constitutional propriety of Mr. Sherman's proposition. Mr. Evarts was disposed to regard the amendment proposed by Mr. Sherman with favor, as offering an opportunity to the Senate to overcome the majority of the House by the vote of the united body. The Senate adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE.—No bills of any importance being reported under the call of committees the House resumed in the morning hour the consideration of the bill to increase the pensions of soldiers' widows. Mr Warner (Ohio) offered an amendment providing that this act shall apply only to widows who were married before its passage. Mr. Townsend (Ill.) offered an amendment as a substitute for Mr. Warner's amendment, providing that when an invalid pensioner shall die, his widow or minor children shall be entitled to an original pension, without being required to prove that the death of the pensioner was due to his military or naval service —amendment rejected by a vote of 108 to 115, and Mr. Warner's by a vote of 105 to 126. On motion of Mr. Snowden (Pa.) an amendment was adopted making it a misdemeanor for any person to receive any money for the prosecution of any claims arising under this act. Mr. Browne (Ind.) then offered his amendment, repealing the limitation on the arrears of pension act. Mr. Rogers (Ark.) raised the point that the amendment was not in order, and contained the substance of a bill pending before the House. A long discussion of the point followed, and in order to enable the matter to be looked into still further the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, January 22.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—Mr. Herbert (Ala.), from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back the Boutelle resolution calling on the Secretary of the Navy for information relative to the alleged erasures of certain inscriptions and the dismissal of Union soldiers at the Norfolk Navy-yard, with an amendment extending the inquiry to dismissals made at the Navy-yard and light-house district, at Norfolk during the terms of the immediate predecessors of the present Secretary of the Navy. Several sharp debates were had, and two or three amendments voted down by a strictly party vote. An amendment by the Committee on Naval Affairs was then adopted and the house took a recess. The House, at its evening session, passed sixteen pension and three disability bills, and adjourned until Monday.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—SENATE.—A number of communications were received from the Executive Departments. Senator Walthall, of Mississippi, was sworn in. Senator Hoar's subsidized railroad extension bill was reported. A joint resolution of the House went over to permit a correction of words misspelled by the House engrossing clerks. A bill providing for a free bridge across the Potomac was reported and passed. The passage of the electoral count bill was urged by Mr. Morgan, of Alabama, in a speech, after which the Senate went into executive session, but at 4:10 p. m. adjourned.

HOUSE.—In the House, the call of States for the introduction of bills was ordered for to-morrow, and at 12.15 p. m. the House adjourned on the announcement of the death of Congressman Rankin, of Wisconsin.

A New Incandescent Lamp.

Mr. Max Muthel has patented in Germany an incandescent lamp which possesses the advantage of requiring no vacuum in the globe. He has, it is reported, very ingeniously overcome one danger that experiments of this kind have heretofore presented, and that is the fusion of the incandescent wire. The wire used by him consists in a mixture of bodies that are conductors and non-conductors of electricity. He takes magnesia, silicate of magnesia, etc., and porcelain clay, and forms a thread of them, which he heats to incandescence and saturates with a solution of platino-iridium salts, and afterward raises several times to incandescence, in order to reduce the absorbed salts to a metallic state. Instead of the foregoing mixture, filaments of clay may be taken and saturated with a solution of metallic salt, which is then reduced to a metallic state through incandescence and the use of oil of lavender or some other organic substance, or through an electric current. With wires thus prepared, fusion is absolutely overcome, the presence of the non-conducting substances preventing the metallic parts from melting. Mr. Muthel supposes that the electric spark jumps, so to speak, from one particle to another, and in this way causes a heating of the other substances, which, brought to incandescence, emit a more intense light.

Colds Caught at Funerals.

[Philadelphia Bulletin.]

At the recent funeral of the late Theodore Bergner, of this city, there was introduced an innovation that should at once become an established custom. All the gentlemen in attendance at the final services at the grave were requested to keep on their hats, thus relieving them of the necessity of following an old and purposeless practice of standing bareheaded in the cold air. The observance of this fogy usage has been the cause of many fatal colds, and now that the initiative has been taken against it, it will no doubt soon be generally ignored.

The Longest Range Gun.

It is difficult to state the result of the large number and variety of experiments which have been made with guns in recent years. The 100-lb. Parrott gun, rifled, is set down to carry its ball effectively 6,910 yards, a distance of close upon four miles.

—The entire pearl fisheries of Mexico from the mouth of the Colorado River to the boundary of Central America, are now controlled by a single company.

—A school-teacher in the suburbs of Boston recently punished a pupil for telling an untruth by putting Cayenne pepper on his tongue. In the course of about two weeks he died of diphtheria. The friends of the boy naturally claimed it to be a result of the punishment. An investigation satisfied the school committee that it was nothing but a coincidence, but they passed a vote disapproving of this mode of punishment.—Boston Herald.

—Cremation is evidently making headway. If ridicule could have killed this method of disposing of the dead, it would have succumbed to the cartoon printed some years ago, depicting a small boy with a tin can in his hand standing at the open door of a crematory and asking of the proprietor: "Please, sir, is dad done yet?"—Boston Herald.

—A convulsion of nature has lately caused several hundred feet square of ground near Electric Mountain, in National Park, Montana, to be thrown about in a remarkable way. Portions of it have been upheaved, while in other places great openings of an unknown depth appear.—Denver Tribune.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

A noticable feature has been the steady appreciation in the prices of old crop of Burleys responding to a good general manufacturing demand. In the old tobaccos, as well as the new, current preferences have been running to medium and better grades, and those categories have ruled stronger than the grades below, though the very lowest grade of Burley trash has attracted demand enough to advance it somewhat. We quote 1885 tobaccos as follows for full weights and sound packages:

Proceedings of the Legislature.

FRANKFORT, January 16.—SENATE.—The Senate to-day passed a bill amending the charter of the Citizens' Gas Light Company, of Louisville. The Senate at last adopted the joint rules agreed to by the House at an early day, and then adjourned.

HOUSE—A score of new local bills was introduced and a few passed. Mr. Watson offered a bill providing that on and after the first day of March, 1886, it shall not be lawful for any druggist, or other dealer in drugs or medicines, to sell any sulphate or other preparation of morphine in any bottle, vial, envelope, or other package, unless the same shall be wrapped in a scarlet paper or envelope, and all bottles so used have a scarlet label. Referred. Mr. Neal offered a bill to make the penalty for murder hanging instead of discretionary with judge and jury, as at present. Mr. Shecklett offered a bill to license the carrying of concealed deadly weapons.

FRANKFORT, KY., January 18.—The attendance in each house was small, and sessions very short. In the proceedings there was not a single feature of general interest save the following: Under the head of unfinished business, the House took up Mr. Spalding's bill to prohibit the sale of liquors within one-half mile of country churches, which was reported favorably last Friday. By the consent of Mr. Spalding it was recommitted to the Committee on Judiciary. Under the same head a bill of interest to workingmen was called up. The law makes a man's wages to the extent of fifty dollars exempt from execution, excepting for claims for food and raiment. The bill placed fuel in the same category. Notwithstanding the committee report in its favor, it was lost.

FRANKFORT, January 19.—SENATE—The Senate passed the pleuro-pneumonia bill with some unimportant changes, by a vote of 21 to 10. Briefly stated, the bill authorizes the State to hire a veterinarian to examine all cattle supposed to be infected with pleuro-pneumonia and have them instantly killed if it be shown that they are infected. Those persons who bring into the State cattle infected with pleuro-pneumonia, or any who sell or drive upon the public highway cattle so infected, are to be punished with heavy fines and imprisonment. The pay of the veterinary surgeon is fixed at $5 per day.

HOUSE.—The Committee on Criminal Law reported on the bill, setting forth a number of questions to be asked in the selection of jurors to try criminal and penal cases as follows: "Are you related by blood or marriage to the defendant or defendants or the person alleged to have been injured by the offense charged? Have you been convicted of a felony in or out of this Commonwealth? Have you formed or expressed an opinion from the statements of a party or witness, or reading or hearing read the minutes of the examining board, or a copy of the same? Have you physical or mental defects such as render you unfit to discharge the duty of a juror? Do or did you stand in the relation of guardian and ward, or master and servant to the defendant or the party alleged to have been injured by the offense charged? Have you such conscientious convictions that you would not on the law and testimony return a verdict of guilty when the offense is punishable with death? Are you an attorney-at-law, practicing physician or member of any religious denomination or court officer? Have you any such bias or prejudice in the case as would prevent you giving the defendant a fair and impartial trial?" The bill reducing the number of grand jurors from sixteen to twelve was also favorably reported.

FRANKFORT, January 20.—SENATE.—The Senate heard eulogies on the late Senator A. B. Clark.

HOUSE.—The House discussed the proposed rules. Bills were introduced to tax circuses and other traveling shows, to prohibit the sale of deadly weapons, to move the capital from Frankfort to Lexington and to authorize the Directors of the Penitentiary to appoint the Warden.

FRANKFORT, January 21.—SENATE.—The Senate passed a bill providing for night schools in cities of twenty thousand inhabitants or over, to which pupils not more than forty years old may be admitted. Senator Berry pressed the measure to its passage. Mrs. Virginia Hanson was re-elected State Librarian.

HOUSE.—The House did nothing of importance.

FRANKFORT, January 22.—SENATE.—The only bill of general interest which was considered was that prohibiting the playing of base ball on Sunday in this Commonwealth. Amendments exempting from its provisions the counties of Jefferson, Campbell, Henderson and Union were adopted, and the bill was passed.

HOUSE.—The House devoted the day to a bill regulating the number of jurors in felony trials. The object was to give the Commonwealth the same number of challenges as the defense had. Various amendments were offered and rejected, after which the bill was lost. It has been before the House for three days, and but for the handicap of an adverse report from the committee, would probably have passed. There was nothing else of importance before the House.

Miscellaneous Items.

MRS. VIRGINIA HANSON has been unanimously re-elected State Librarian by the General Assembly, a compliment both handsome and deserved.

PAT DOWNEY, a wealthy farmer living near Frankfort, was found dead in the road the other morning, about a hundred yards from his house. He had been to town the evening before and drank heavily of liquor and did not start home till late. When found all his clothes were removed, and it is supposed that in his intoxicated condition he imagined he was going to bed.

DEPUTY United States Marshal F. B. Riley arrived in Louisville on the 22d, bringing the first intimation of a bloody tragedy that occurred near the little back woods town of Manchester on the night of the 17th inst. George Gray and Dan Gray, brothers, went with Theo Beuge and Dinks Stivers to a house in that neighborhood kept by Kate Harney, a loose and handsome woman. Kate proved to be a bone of contention before a great while, and the four men, who were armed, began to shoot. In the end, George Gray, Dinks Stivers and Theo. Beuge were killed, and Dan Gray left lying at the point of death, with several bullets in him. The woman, who was the only one present, ran out of the house as soon as the shooting began, and there is not a single eye-witness to the affair except Dan Gray, who will probably die. The three men who were killed were found by the neighbors lying all around the room. They were each shot several times.

A SIX-MONTHS-OLD son of Lucy Reynolds, a prisoner at the Louisville Workhouse, died the other morning suddenly. Coroner Miller held an inquest, and found that the cause of death was poison, contracted from the mother's system by reason of her excessive use of opium.

THE K. C. R. R. is bound in the sum of $20,000, with good and sufficient security, to comply with the terms of the ordinance granting it the right of way through Covington to the river, and the route will soon be made public, notwithstanding several statements to the contrary.

A NEW and perhaps fatal plague, hardly surpassed by that of the flux of last year, has struck in the vicinity of Peach Orchard.

THE Kenton and Campbell County Pharmaceutical Association held a meeting the other day and decided to cut the rates on patent medicines to agree with the same rates as in Cincinnati.

MRS. ANNE STRAUB, mother of Judge Straub, died in Kenton County, aged seventy-nine years. Her husband, Isaac Straub, died in 1875.

FOUR bright and beautiful children of Charles Ritter and wife, Hopkinsville, have died with diphtheria within ten days. The youngest was two and the oldest five years. The latter succumbed on the 19th. The mother is distracted with grief, and it is feared will lose her mind.

THE "ECONOMY" RECORD.

What the Democratic Party Has Done in This Line for Ten Years Past—Its Present Duty.

The State Administration of Governor Tilden in 1875 first turned the tide of public sentiment in favor of Democratic rule.

In 1873 an expiring Congress on its last day, with a Senate having only seventeen Democrats out of seventy-four members and a House containing one hundred and five Democrats out of two hundred and forty-three members, had passed the Salary-Grab bill, which boldly took nine hundred and seventy-two thousand dollars out of the Treasury and divided it among the Senators and Representatives for two years' increase of back pay, or from March 4, 1871, up to the date of the passage of the bill. While several Democrats had been weak enough to vote for the iniquitous bill, the responsibility was clearly with the Republican majority.

In 1874 Governor Tilden was elected on a platform demanding economy and honesty in public expenditures, and he at once commenced the work of cutting down expenses and cutting off rascals.

In 1876 the Democratic National platform declared: "Reform is necessary in the scale of public expenses," showing that in ten years of Republican rule taxation had risen from sixty million dollars to four hundred and fifty million dollars, or from five dollars per head to more than eighteen dollars per head, and said: "We demand a rigorous frugality in every department and from every officer of the Government." Mr. Tilden was elected by the people on this platform, although cheated out of the office by politicians.

In 1880 the Democratic National Convention based the claim of its candidates to the support of the people mainly on the ground of "the honesty and thrift of a Democratic Congress," which had reduced the public expenditure $40,000,000 a year.

Samuel J. Randall was Speaker of the Forty-fourth Congress for a part of the term and of the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses up to March 3, 1881.

In 1880 Hancock was only defeated by the unscrupulous use of money by the Republicans and by scarcely concealed corruption of the ballot-box in Indiana, New York and Ohio. The "golden stream from Stephenson's bank" and the "crisp new two-dollar bills" will not soon be forgotten.

As Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the Forty-eighth Congress, Mr. Randall kept up the reputation of the Democracy as the advocate of honest expenditures and economical appropriations and paved the way for the election of a Democratic President last year.

Speaker Carlisle has now before him a grave and heavy responsibility. On economy in appropriations and honesty in expenditures the Democratic party has been restored to power and to the confidence of the people. While the appropriation bills were under Mr. Randall's supervision there was no danger of retrogression. But Speaker Carlisle, through the scattering of these bills, has now to find eight Randalls for Chairmen of Committees instead of one—eight Representatives instead of one who will exercise over the appropriations the same watchfulness, economy and firmness displayed by the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the last Congress.

No doubt Mr. Carlisle will seek to put the committees which will now have to report important and heavy appropriation bills in addition to their other duties into honest and capable hands. No doubt, the chairman of all the committees among which the appropriations are to be scattered, will seek to do good and honest work. The question is, will they be able to do such work effectively without possessing that knowledge of the whole mass of appropriations asked and of the amount to be appropriated which a single committee could command?

If the policy of crippling the Appropriations Committee's power, which has been wisely and beneficially used, should destroy the Democratic record for strict economy, it will be disastrous to its authors.—N. Y. World.

CONGRESSMAN BELMONT.

Why the Friends of the "Plumed Knight" Are Fiery Mad at the "Young Polo Player" from New York.

With signal fatuity the followers of James G. Blaine expose their sores by making an outcry against Perry Belmont's receiving the chairmanship of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. They will never forgive him for having made a spectacle of Mr. Blaine when he appeared as a witness before the Committee on Foreign Affairs in 1882. It is easy for Mr. Reed, of Maine, to say that Belmont achieved prominence only "when a great man like Blaine condescended to wipe his boots upon him," but the fact remains that Belmont came out of the encounter with honor, while Blaine's reputation received no tarnish only because it was already so darkly spotted. Throughout his examination in that investigation Mr. Blaine played the part of a bully and braggart, and continually sought to evade incriminating himself by insulting his examiners. Instead of answering pertinent questions he delivered tirades against the impertinence and boyhood of Mr. Belmont. But the young member of Congress stuck to his points with a dogged persistence that provoked Mr. Blaine to a pitiable rage. One thing Mr. Belmont could not ascertain, and that was what became of some of the records of the State Department relating to the Chili-Peru affair, which had disappeared. They have never turned up, and until they do Mr. Blaine must rest under the suspicion of having spirited them away with the same purpose as induced him to appropriate the Mulligan letters. That investigation, in which Mr. Blaine was held upon the gridiron of cross-examination by the "young polo player," disclosed the fact that as Secretary of State he had sought to take advantage of the war between Chili and Peru to further the settlement of a baseless private claim. To this end he dismissed a faithful minister and appointed one after his own heart who took with him two sets of instructions. For more than six months "the most pressing service" of American diplomacy in South America was prostituted to the benefit of a private claim; and the ultimatum of the United States represented to be that by no treaty of peace should there be a cession of territory to Chili by Peru, in disregard of the rights of Mr. Landreau, an alleged American citizen.

Throughout the investigation Mr. Belmont showed a familiarity with the subject and a grasp of the principles in foreign relations remarkable in so young a man. He has had two years' experience since on the committee of which he has been appointed Chairman, and in all his acts has proved himself a far more active and intelligent man than its ex-Chairman—ex-Governor Curtin. This, to be sure, is not very high praise, for superiority over the war Governor of Pennsylvania does not infer high qualifications for such a post. But in certain quarters Belmont will never be forgiven for baiting the bull of Maine until he flourished his tail in the air and bellowed like a calf. —Chicago News.

DEMOCRATIC MINORITY.

The Duty of Vigorously Upholding President Cleveland's Nominations—Devotion to Party Principle with the Popular Encouragement.

Next in importance to the approaching discussion of the silver question will be the debates which we are told the Republican Senators will direct against President Cleveland's nominations.

The fact that the White House is now inhabited by a Democrat has made no change in the feelings of those gentlemen as to their responsibilities under the Constitution. They must still advise the President upon certain questions just as though he were a pure-blooded Republican, and give their consent to his proceedings as they think fit.

But what is expected to make a peculiar stir among the Republicans while debating the new candidates for office, and to produce an energetic and solemn exhibition of eloquence, will be their conclusion that they are the special keepers of the Civil-Service law and the appointed promoters of its spirit and extension. It was invented and sustained by their party, and they must look after its interests; and the way to do this will be to keep the Republicans in and prevent the representatives of the Democrats from taking their places.

It will devolve upon the Democratic Senators, in the event of such an attempt, to resist it with the greatest vigor and indignation. Besides sustaining the action of the President by following this course, they will be battling for one of the most fundamental principles of Democracy. This is that the people have the right, through their proper representatives, to choose their own agents of Government, and that the expressed wishes of a popular majority must be fully and faithfully observed. It was the intention of the Democratic majority in 1884 to take the control of the Government from the Republicans into their own hands; and this desire must be respected now and furthered by every justifiable exertion possible on the part of the Democratic Representatives. The fact that Mr. Cleveland regards himself as in some way the chosen Magistrate of the whole people, and in consequence as not holding precisely the same relations to the Democracy as Democrats elected by narrower constituencies, should not lessen a whit the intensity of that party's Senators in their devotion to its principles, or weaken their determination to stand immovably for their party's rights against the assaults of its enemies. They must fight for the Democracy and against the humbug pretensions of the Republicans at every opportunity that is afforded.

In such a contest they will have the people at their back.—N. Y. Sun.

Free and Equal.

General Logan's new bill for the appointment of a commission to investigate and report on the "mental, industrial and physical progress made by the colored race since 1865," is a measure which should be suppressed. It is an outgrowth of the idea that the negro is in some sense a ward of the Nation, and indicates on the part of its author an indisposition to recognize the fact that the negro is a citizen as free and independent as any white man, and responsible to no one but himself for the use that he makes of the privileges conferred upon him. If the negroes are American citizens, there is no reason why they should be made the subject of a special inquiry. The mere proposition to place them even inferentially in the same category as the Indians or the cattle of the plains indicates an unwillingness on the part of some people to recognize the fact that they are free, and that with every advantage that anybody has they are able to take care of themselves. On their own part the negroes should resent this discrimination as tending to perpetuate the race prejudice and sink their citizenship in the question of their color.

Politicians who have been borne into power on the shoulders of the negro doubtless find it difficult to let him alone, but the time has come when all such meddling as that contemplated by the Logan bill should be most emphatically resisted.—Chicago Herald.

DEMOCRATIC ITEMS.

—The Republican journals which are so indignant at the refusal of the Supreme Court of Ohio to go behind the returns should moderate their rage. The year 1876 furnished an eminent precedent for such action.—N. Y. World.

—Civil Service Examiner—If a profit of two millions of dollars can be realized from thirty years in Congress at a salary of $5,000, how much can be made as acting Vice-President in three years at a salary of $8,000? Applicant —I am sorry, sir, but I have never studied political economy.—N. Y. Sun.

—We read in the papers that in some localities where Democratic postmasters have been appointed Republicans refuse to patronize the office, mailing their letters on the cars and at other places in order to cut down the revenue of the office and thus reduce the salary of the Democratic official. People who will do that are not entitled to postal facilities, and, if it could be done, the Postmaster-General would be justified in depriving them of any chance to either send or receive mail. —Chicago Mail.

—Governor Hill's view of Civil-Service reform is that of a practical man, not of the closet theorist. He declares the selection of public servants on the ground of merit to be the safeguard of popular rights; but he also points out that this does not conflict with the principal, indispensable in a popular Government that heads of departments and others charged with the execution of administrative policies should be men in accord with the Chief Executive or administrative officer intrusted for the time being with the execution of the popular will expressed through the ballot box. The Civil-Service statute, as he views it, applies solely to official places calling "mainly for clerical ability" or other expert qualifications which competitive examinations may determine.—*N. Y. THE RECORDER

RIDDELL & HALL, Publishers.

BURLINGTON, : : KENTUCKY

THE EDITOR.

On an ermined stool he sits to think,
While the world hurries on below,
Then flashes of wisdom flow out in ink,
Till the attic is all aglow.
And the things he writes
In his dreamy flights
The nations rush frantic to know.

Never a hill has he to surmount—
Not a care for gold or for gain,
The ducats he can not even count
As they drop round his desk like rain.
Bright gleams from his soul
Fill each pigeon hole,
And happiness walks in his train.

He knoweth all things and more than that—
From a pen to a parachute—
And should his thoughts in writing run flat,
There's a basketful at his feet,
While from under spheres
Sweet music he hears,
That never was born of catgut.

Imps at his call come to do his will,
All ready to die for his sake,
And poets ten thousand, eager still
His life a paradise to make.
O, I tell you, boys,
An editor's joys
Are transcendant, and no mistake.

No one to grumble—no one to say
"We don't want your sheet any more,"
His only woes are checks for his pay
Ere he cashes the ones before.
His study at home,
From floor to the dome,
Is padded with them o'er and o'er.

He sits on his tripod one short hour,
Then see him sweep down to the street,
Where a carriage waits, lest sun or shower
Should touch his head or wet his feet.
Heaven won't be new
To that great man's view.
Would you like such fortune to meet?

THE MOUNTAIN RIDE.

A Wild Lover Saved From Death in Spite of Himself.

The country schools of Shasta County open for their six or eight months' annual session pretty well on in the fall; but it was late, even for them, when John Rawlins, school teacher, called on the County Superintendent to make inquiries about a place. Yes, there was one school in need of a teacher—but it was a pretty hard position.

"I have had some experience," said Rawlins, "and somehow I manage to get along with schools that are called hard. In fact, I rather like the fun of them. I guess you needn't be afraid to send me there."

The district was far east in the pine region, the Superintendent said. It was in hot water most of the time. Teachers seldom staid over a month, and never had the support of more than half the people. The trouble had begun in political differences between the leading trustees, Michenay and Kester, and it furnished sensational pabulum for the eastern half of the county. Yet if only a treaty of peace could be negotiated between the opposing factions, there need be no trouble with the school—it was a pleasant one in every other respect.

Rawlins was disposed to try the experiment. He hired a pinto mustang, rode out of the picturesque mountain town, and through a narrow canon, whose stones were now in furrows by years of staging and teaming.

Broad and clear the Sacramento River swayed from bluff to bluff, and the captain of the ferry boat was named Flora Wilson. A handsome, dark-eyed girl she was, modestly affable and chatty as she turned the steering wheel. She had a bit of crochet work to take up as soon as the boat was set at the right angle against the current, and a rustic chair to do it in, hemmed about by flowers.

When darkness came, Rawlins was riding across a broken, rolling plain of red gravel, thickly set with scrub-oak, pine and thorny bushes. Dogs began to bark; it was Michenay's clearing. He slowly skirted it, making a wide detour, and reaching the branch road half a mile distant, for he was bound to Kester's first. More than two miles it was, and the bridle paths were hard to follow. At last he rode up to a rail fence, and a faint light gleamed from a cabin beyond.

"Hallo the house," he shouted, in pioneer phrase.

"Hullo yourself," came back in stentorian tones.

"How far is it to Milburn?"

"Twenty good miles, stranger."

"Can I stay here all night? Able to pay my own way."

"All right, stranger. Hitch the hoss in the shed, an' come in."

The Missourian pioneer of the Pacific coast is a much-criticised individual, but unless you irretrievably offend some of his numerous prejudices, he is as garrulous and mild-mannered a mortal as this planet holds. It did not take long for Rawlins to get on comfortable terms with the Kesters; a few bits of Shasta news, and a hope that the mines would soon begin operation, and so make times more lively, were quite sufficient. Pretty soon a little school talk began, engineered by the wily Rawlins.

"Here is a bright lad," he said. "I hope he has a good school to attend."

Kester flung himself out of his chair, and rose to his full height of six feet four.

"Mister, we orter, that's a fact. But we've had infernal poor schools. I hain't sent the children for 'most a term. School hed orter begin now, but there's a cross-tongued, black Republican Kanuck down on the crick, an' he an' I cain't pull together nohow. Besides old Mish'nay," continued Kester, "I hate the sight of that fool nevaw of his."

The oldest daughter, seventeen or eighteen, who had been sitting so far back in the shadows that Rawlins had only seen the dimly outlined figure, rose silently, went to the door and slipped out into the darkness. She was a very pretty girl, fair and sweet-faced.

After the smaller children had gone to bed, Kester grew more confidential. Michenay had "hired the last fool of a teacher," but he should not hire the next one, "nor have anything to say about it." No shadow of suspicion that Rawlins belonged to the pedagogic order of creatures crossed the Missourian mind.

The next morning the young man sat on a rawhide-bottomed chair, tipping it back against the bole of a giant white oak; ate grapes that one of the tow-headed youngsters brought in his straw hat and opened fire on Kester as he mended his broken wagon-tongue.

"Now, let us talk business," he said. "I am a school-teacher, and willing to take your school, but it must be on my terms."

"You don't say so! Well, what sort of proposition hev' ye?"

"This: I will teach a week for nothing; then, if I do not like the school or the trustees, I shall leave. If I stay, you must pay me what you did the last teacher—no more, no less."

Kester at once acceded to these terms. "But ye cain't persuade old Michenay," he said as Rawlins mounted his horse. "We're powerful anxious ter hav ye, but he'll make trouble so soon's he knows I've hired ye."

Rawlins crossed the creek near Kester's, rode a mile east, turned south, crossed another stream and reached Michenay's from quite a different direction. The grizzled old man was dry-plowing, to sow his wheat before the rains, and the clouds of dust followed his creaking gang plow. Rawlins drew rein, talked crops and county politics, and was invited to dinner. The old man sat like a patriarch at the head of a family of nine children, of whom two were girls.

After dinner they sat on the porch, smoked the pipe of mutual good will and discussed Canada—"ze bes' country on ze globe,"—while a barefoot girl swung on the well curb, and two or three more on the porch rail, to listen to and watch the stranger.

"And so your cattle ranges go five miles beyond that peak?" said Rawlins. "There is enough for all your children, and you must manage to give them good educations."

"Ah, kind sir," cried Michenay, "it ees not posseeble, not now! Ze school is forever a despair." He pointed excitedly toward Kester's ranch. "Zare ees a man zat knows not'ing at all. A Democrat, a secesshioner. I vote not with him. I send not my children with his."

Knitting his dark brows, the old man drove his heavy staff into the soil, uprooting one of his daughter's gilly flowers; and even as the earth flew, there was a rattle and scurry in the nearest clump of pines on the hill. Out of the forest, a hundred yards distant, sprang a great yellow horse and a blue-shirted rider. They came down upon the house like a tornado—the fierce, ugly, splendid-eyed, broad-chested mighty-limbed creature struggling with his bit and striving to throw his master, a swarthy youth of twenty. Just at the frail gate, which a touch from shoulder or hoof would have shattered, the stormy onset ended—the heavy Chileno bit did its work; passionate onward motion changed in absolutely one second to a gigantic effort to check their momentum; the arched hoofs furrowed the red gravel; and stormy action was arrested in statuesque pose. The young man lifted his hat, and whirling his horse, disappeared in a dust-cloud.

"Mine brother's son Antoine," said Michenay. "He ees a good boy, but he has a temper; and it ees like as evil spirit he rides. See! he did stop zat horse, Roland, in thirty feet from a gallop."

Rawlins resumed the interrupted conversation, and within one hour had engaged the school from Michenay, who advised him "not to go near zat ignoramus Kester." Then the new teacher made a frank avowal. Kester's consent had already been obtained.

Michenay was angry; but the thought of getting a week's free teaching appealed to his ideas of political economy, and he agreed to let Rawlins have his way; so one of his boys rode over the district that afternoon to inform every one that the trustees had hired a teacher.

In spring, toward the close of the term, Rawlins got up an old-fashioned spelling-match, a novelty in the country. It took the public fancy, and people rode or drove from farm-houses and pioneer cabins miles away when the evening came.

The dark-eyed young lady of the ferry-boat came under escort of Antoine Michenay, who did not leave her side the entire evening. He was jauntily dressed, and in high spirits; the girl seemed troubled and ill at ease as the evening wore on.

Mary Kester was expected to carry off the spelling honors, as a matter of course; but, much to every one's surprise, and her father's intense disgust, she missed one of the first words, and Adele Michenay won an unwonted victory.

After the entertainment was over, the girls went outside in the clear moonlight, and laughed and chatted, while the boys carried the benches back into the school-room, and arranged them as usual. Wagon after wagon was driven away, and soon the last of the merry group had left the door. Mr. Rawlins straightened the desks, rubbed off the blackboard, blew out the candles, locked the school-house and started for Michenay's, along the wood-path, haunted with an indescribable exhilarating fragrance, a mingling of sweet and spicy odors from blossoms, leaves, stems, from pines overhead and grass blades close to the joyous earth.

At the foot of the hill the path widened into a grassy opening. Over it the full moon hung, making it so light that one could see the brown specks on the drooping bells of the carnelian-colored wild lilies the girls had for many days watched and guarded. Besides the lily stems, all in a pitiful little heap, with her head on a mossy log, was Mary Kester, crying as if her heart would break.

Now Mary was the most modest and generous girl in the world, and no lost spelling-school honors would have made her cry that way.

It was impossible to leave the girl alone at night, crying in the forest a mile from home. Rawlins went up close to her, and spoke kindly, leaning over to take her hand. "Come, Mary, you must not stay here. I will walk home with you."

She started when he spoke, but almost at once controlled her sobs, rose without a word and took his arm. They turned back across the clearing. In a few moments she said apologetically: "I thought every one went round by the road, teacher; I thought no one crossed this way."

They were walking from the moonlit circle into the forest again, as Mary said this; but before Rawlins could reply they heard voices in the path before them—Antoine's and Flora Wilson's.

The girlish form on Rawlins' arm trembled perceptibly; a little hand urged him still further back in the shadow. But they could not escape, for the steep bank of a dry barranca curved behind them.

"You shall listen to me," Antoine was saying excitedly.

"I will not listen any more," Flora cried. "Ye have hed your answer already," she went on, a touch of her Scotch father's borderland burr coming into her voice. She took her hand from his arm and faced him angrily. "Ye've treated Mary ill, and ye know it; but t'was no doing of mine. I never wanted ye."

Antoine broke into a passionate and incoherent appeal.

"Take me home. O, take me home. I won't hear any more," cried the perplexed and angry girl.

Antoine threw himself down in an abandonment of grief on a log. Flora, both indignant and troubled, stood beside him.

"This is hard on us both," she said presently, more kindly. "I'll be friends with you still, but you must take me home now, and give this all up."

He sprang wildly to his feet. "No! No!" he shouted. "Curse your soft words. I shall die because of you."

Lifting both hands to his mouth he gave a loud whistle, three times repeated. The far-off neigh of a horse answered him. Antoine whistled again, stamped his feet and cried loudly: "Roland! here! Roland!" Another wild neigh sounded nearer, but still on the farther bank of the deep and rapid river; then a splash, the sound of swimming, the rattle of stones, the snap and dull swish of branches thrust aside, and into the clearing ran the great yellow stallion. Antoine seized him by the mane and turned to Flora.

"Go home," he said. "I shall ride to my death to-night. You don't know the mountain boys yet, I ought to take you along."

He caught her by the wrist roughly, but before she could scream his manner changed, and he kissed her hand with a sudden hereditary French courtliness. He leaped upon Roland's dripping back. Mary screamed, but neither Antoine nor Flora heard her voice, for Roland sprang forward like a huge stone from a mediæval catapult, crashed through the chapparal down the slope, and into the river again. They heard him breasting the steep beyond, snorting as he ran through frightened bands of sheep and droves of cattle, while more terrific still, Antoine raised his voice in a half insane shout: "Good-bye, love."

A few seconds later there came a yet louder shout, then a sudden crash, as the manada of horses in the farther pasture ran shrieking against the rail fence, tore it to pieces and fled, still shrieking with terror, stampeded over the hillsides, while Antoine rode his unbridled whirlwind on into the deeper forest.

Flora stood terrified beside the trampled mountain lilies over which Roland had passed. The school-teacher bent over and whispered to Mary: "Will you do just what I ask?"

"Yes."

"Then sit on this flat rock; lean your head against my overcoat. Don't move till I come back."

He stepped out into the clearing, much to Flora's surprise.

"Miss Wilson, do you know the way to Michenay's?"

"No, I don't; I wish I did." She tried to speak defiantly, but it was easy to see he was in trouble. "Mr. Rawlins, what do you know about what has happened here?" she asked abruptly.

"I know all about Antoine, and I am going to see that you get home safely." She turned without a word and walked beside him.

Soon they reached the old stables and barns of Michenay. He ran in and bridled a horse, backed him out of the stall and into the shafts. Flora knew all such toggery and fastened at least half the straps.

"Now, Mr. Rawlins," she said, "I am going to drive myself home; you must not rouse the Michenays. It is only eight miles, and I know all the cross-roads."

He hesitated, thinking of the dilemma. The road was dangerous, and the moon very low. There might be drunken cattle-herders riding home after a spree.

"It is not safe, Miss Wilson."

"Don't talk to me," she cried. "I'd rather walk home than disturb any one in the house."

Suddenly the way out revealed itself to him. Mart Michenay was the brightest and pluckiest of fourteen-year-old-boys. He could keep a secret and he loved his teacher devotedly.

"Wait," he said to Flora. "Drive up to yonder oak, and wait there till I come back." He sprang over the fence, ran to the rear of the house and lifted Mart's window, down on the first floor, in a lean-to addition of split oak shakes.

"Martin! Martin!"

"Who is it?"

"Mr. Rawlins. Pull on your clothes, take a blanket and come out here quick. Don't make a noise."

The boy was at his side in a minute. They jumped the fence again and ran to the buggy.

"Now, Martin, jump in and drive Flora Wilson home. Get back in bed before morning, and don't whisper a word of this to any one."

"You can trust me, Mr. Rawlins."

Rawlins shook the boy's hand, lifted his hat to Flora and ran back, down the hollow, splashing across the brook, straight up the path. He heard their wheels rattle once, and then no more. Mary was sitting where Rawlins had left her, crying softly to herself. She had been scarcely fifteen minutes alone.

They walked on at once, and he told her of Flora's departure, praised Martin, made the most cheerful remarks he could think of, happy if he had the slightest assent from his companion. But presently she broke out: "What will become of him?"

"He is a splendid rider, Mary—none better in the region—and his horse will carry him safely all night, unless—" The teacher stopped, aghast at his own stupidity.

"Unless what, sir?" said the trembling girl.

"It is not likely to happen. They might roll down a hillside, but then that might not hurt them much; and Roland is so sure-footed. I think we may hope for the best."

"Oh, sir," she whispered, "I am so glad you think so. I've always liked Antoine," she said as simply as a child. "We played together long ago. He saved my life down at the creek one day. It's natural I should like Antoine."

"Of course it is; and don't you think he, too, remembers his childhood?"

"But perhaps not the same way."

"Perhaps not," said the schoolmaster musingly. "Mary," he went on abruptly, "you are seventeen; I am thirty in years, and more than that in experience. I tell you that you can live without Antoine. Think that I know nothing about it, if you like—but don't fail to keep at the head of your classes, and do everything just as you did before."

Mary only began to cry softly again, and he felt compunctiously that this was rather stern preaching for the little maiden sobbing at his side. He put his hand gently on hers as it lay on his arm. "I'm just as sorry as I can be, Mary. You'll try to be a brave girl, won't you?"

"Yes, sir," she answered.

"Now, let us talk of something else." And he talked to her cheerfully till they reached the Kester cabin.

He went directly home to Michenay's. No use looking for Antoine until morning. At daybreak the anxious teacher went to Martin's room and called him. Only an hour's sleep the boy had had, yet he came out ready and smiling, a boy of a million for an emergency.

"Martin, did you ever know Roland to run away with Antoine?"

"Yes, indeed, sir, but Antoine brings him down."

"Suppose he was foolish enough, just for bravado, to jump on Roland unsaddled and unbridled?"

"Gracious, Mr. Rawlins, Roland 'ud run to the top of Mount Lassen before he stopped."

"You come down to the stables, Martin."

In ten minutes they had caught and saddled the two best colts in the home manada; in ten minutes more had swam the river and were galloping across the pasture beyond; in a third ten minutes had found the trail—as who, indeed, could help? It was like a blaze through a forest. Here Roland slipped and staggered; there, he plowed through the ground, flinging black mud far and wide; this giant fallen pine he leaped; yonder he swayed in sudden fright. Martin asked no questions, but he fully comprehended the emergency, and brought all his woodcraft into play.

Ah! here Roland left the grassy lowlands, and took the hillside paths. He twisted like a snake about the pines. There he ran between two tree trunks, and hardly a foot to spare on either side; that is the mark of Antoine's boot heel. Yonder bough would have killed him had he not been lying on his face, clasping Roland's mane.

"Martin, Martin, it gets worse!" cried Rawlins. "Straight for the Big Slide, the horse has turned. Ride faster, Martin, faster! We can follow his trail at a gallop."

Here the cliff begins, a hundred feet down, and Roland's hoof-marks are hardly three feet from the edge. Ah, he shied back and ran off, but Antoine brings him up again. Here they approached the cliff once more, at a higher point, and brave Roland has reared, whirled, and again escaped.

Martin's face grew suddenly pallid. "Mr. Rawlins," he cried, "Antoine did that o' purpose. He tried to make Roland jump off!"

"How do you know?"

"He put a handkerchief in his mouth, back there a piece, an' pulled him round. See how steady he went!"

It was true. Antoine had gained partial control of Roland, and twice had forced him to the precipice, only carried back a hundred yards by the resolute horse. The third time he faces death; he brings Roland, perhaps blindfolded, up to the verge where, a quarter of a mile below, the jagged rocks lie. Great heavens! The edge fairly crumbles under his feet, but the grand creature fought his way backward inch by inch. Yes! he had broken the improvised rein, and bounded off for the lowlands with long, irregular strides. Yet Roland did not know what fear was. You could ride him against a wall of fire, or into the jaws of death. But on this occasion he somehow had no confidence in Antoine; he could not yield absolute obedience.

"Hurrah, Martin!" cried Rawlins. "Roland will save Antoine in spite of himself."

They rode down the hill in a tearing gallop, giving the horses the rein, and shouting to urge them faster. At last, in a belt of sage-brush barrens, the trail was lost for an hour. When it was picked up again, it led through a thorny tangle of chepparal. Maddened with pain, Roland had hurled himself forward as if he were charging a battery, and had rent and crushed a path into the open pastures beyond. Fluttering fragments of Antoine's garments, and drops of blood on the rocks, showed what a passage it had been. The rescuers followed fast on the track; such a wild journey could not last forever.

Soon they passed a brush-fenced wheat field; then heard the lowing of cattle among the hills beyond. They were approaching some house. A rod further the trail whirled about the clump of oaks into a foot path and past a giant boulder; from beyond, with sudden distinctness, came the sound of falling water; the ravines, long tending toward each other, met, and disappeared in a quartz-walled valley. The end had come here. Rawlins and Martin urged their horses on; but they suddenly reared and snorted wildly.

"Antoine! Antoine!" both man and boy cried in a breath.

Feeble as a baby's wail, out of the depths of the ravine, came a human cry, piercing the ripple of waters with its agonized appeal.

They left their horses, uncoiled their lariats and went down among the rocks. Roland's feet had slipped on the smooth edge; he had crashed through a sycamore top, and there he lay, more than a hundred feet down, stark and dead.

"Antoine, Antoine, where are you?"

"I see," cried Martin, and they soon reached him.

Brushed off by the tree top, yet falling through it to the lower ledge, Antoine, though in piteous plight, was not mortally hurt; his leg was broken, and almost countless flesh-wounds and bruises added to his misery. One could not help contrasting this hollow-eyed, nearly naked, sorely wounded man, lying in the sunglare, half way down a wild ravine, with the jaunty, foppish Antoine of the spelling school of a dozen hours before.

And there, as he lay, he looked straight down on dead Roland, eighty feet below; for hours he had heard, he had told them, breaking down into sobs, the brave creature's dying moans; had called, and heard the horse whinny back his fond and last recognition. The gray dawn broke overhead as Roland died; then the sun rose, and, though Antoine crawled out of its fiercest rays, the heat was terrible.

They lifted him to an easier position, making pillows of their coats, and gave him a drink.

"Martin," said the school-master, "climb the hill and get our bearings: we must have help here, and soon."

He only waited till the boy was gone to turn upon Antoine. He had no scruple about sparing him for the sake of his condition, for he knew his man. The hot-headed Canadian would scarcely have listened in less extremity.

"Antoine," he began, "this is the worst business I ever heard of. Do you know what you have done?"

"Broken myself all into bits and pieces."

"That is nothing; you will soon get well. But you have forfeited one girl's respect and friendship, have trifled with another girl's heart, have played the fool and the madman. Worst of all, you have murdered the horse that loved and trusted you, your beautiful Roland, who three times last night saved you from suicide, and would have carried you safely to the end, had it been in the power of flesh and blood. Don't you think Roland should be up here, and you there, on the blood-stained quartz?"

Antoine broke out furiously, "It's no one's business—"

"Antoine," said the school-master, "If I had not known of these things, and had not followed your tracks, you would perish here, in unspeakable agonies of thirst and pain. And your unshrived skeleton would bleach white on these rocks. Do you wish I had not come?"

"I thought I would rather die than give her up," muttered the young fellow.

"Because you did not love her. When a man really loves a woman, he wooes her with patience and courage, more by deeds than by words; it would be utterly impossible for him to frighten her, threaten suicide, dash off into the darkness and leave her alone in the forest. You never really loved Flora. You have never loved any one but yourself. Love is self-forgetfulness."

Antoine lay a moment in silence; then, surrendering with the completeness of his temperament, he looked up with his dark and beautiful eyes full of penitence, just as Martin came down the hill shouting: "They're coming, and we'll have him up in a hurry."

"Who are coming?" asked Rawlins.

"Kester and his hired men. That's Kester's dairy ranch, three miles from his farm. It's seven miles back to father's, an' we've rode nigh twelve miles, counting the turns. I met Kester," he went on as he came to the school-master's side; "he comes over here every Saturday—and I told him Roland ate loco-weed, got mache, sprang crazy, sir, and run off with Antoine."

It was a brilliant explanation; no one in all that mountain land will doubt it. But looking at the death scene below, at the gathering vultures slow wheeling above their prey, remembering Roland's faithfulness to the end, this last requirement, this staining his royal memory to shield his "mache" master, smote Rawlins' heart with pity and sorrow.

"And what did Kester say, Martin?"

The boy laughed. "He said Roland was the best horse on Churn Creek, but Antoine wasn't no favorite of his."

Antoine's face flushed red. "Take me home," he cried. "I won't go to Kester's."

"You must, my dear fellow; it is the only way," said Rawlins. "Every minute is precious. You have lain here since daybreak. Now, Martin, ride for a surgeon."

Down the hill they ran a few minutes later, six healthy, big-hearted men, Kester foremost. When he saw Antoine, the tears sprang to his eyes and his voice trembled.

"It's blame rough. Never mind the hard things I've said of ya, Antoine. Jest look at that horse! Antoine, ye did hav an orful ride. Now, boys, chop off them tree-tops, an' whack up a litter, an' run for some blankets; au' you, Ad, skip out on the teacher's hoss an' bring Mary an' the ol' woman to the dairy ranch. Darn it, hurry up! work livelier! Who ever saw so cussed lazy a crowd!" And Kester pushed one of the men aside, seized a hatchet and began hewing a path through the bushes.

It took a long time to bring Antoine to the top of the ravine, and then he had to be carried across the fields with great gentleness, for the pain of his hurts was increasing. Before the party reached the rude cabin door Mrs. Kester and Mary had arrived on horseback—for every one rides in the mountains.

Mary, quiet and serious-eyed, was deftly helping everywhere, bringing cool water from the spring, smoothing the pillows, moving noiselessly about, the model of a nurse. A look of bewilderment yet rested in her eyes at the strangeness of this sudden call, but the tone in which she spoke to Antoine was serene, sympathetic, judicious. She had come there to nurse, not Antoine Michenay—not the man she loved—but a wounded and suffering fellow-mortal. The girlishness was gone; she was a woman, and able to keep her secrets.

Rawlins left Shasta at the end of that term of school. Changes came in his own personal affairs, and he never saw again its green valleys, its rushing rivers, its snowy peaks, its genial pioneers in camp and cabin; but he wrote to his old pupils, and had letters from them; and after half a dozen years, in one of these letters occurred the following paragraph:

"We have a little church now, and it was dedicated yesterday by ministers from Milburn and Shasta. It is built in the small clearing, near where that splendid lot of mountain lilies used to grow. Some of the girls filled a pitcher with them and set it on the pulpit, and the minister spoke about them in his sermon. But after the sermon what do you think happened? Antoine Michenay walked over and gave his arm to Mary Kester; then they went right up the isle and stood before the minister, and were married. There were no bridesmaids, but it looked as pretty as a picture. We all like Antoine better than we used to; he has been nicer and nicer ever since he was hurt so, and crippled so long; and everybody knows Mary Kester is the best and prettiest girl east of the Sacramento. Antoine is building a house and planting an orchard in the big field across the river from the old Michenay place."—Charles Howard Shinn, in Overland Monthly.

CHINESE REMEDIES.

Some of the Dainty Drugs Prescribed by Celestial Physicians.

The materia medica of the Chinese profession is something stupendous. The Pan-Tso, their standard work, is in thirty-eight volumes. It presents 11,896 formulæ, into the make-up of which over 1,900 substances enter. While there is almost no end to Chinese drugs, there are some substances which are favorites in the practice. Among these are claws and bones of the tiger and other wild animals, the cuttle-fish, dragons' teeth, fossils, the hide, horn and bones of the elephant and rhinoceros, the scorpion, snake skins, soot, and so on.

A favorite remedy is known as "the tincture of five poisons," made by steeping scorpions, snakes and other venomous creatures in samshu. This is given for fever, rheumatism and catarrh. In some parts of China it is considered the very highest degree of philanthropy for the rich to place this tincture at their doors, to be used without cost by the poor. Gunpowder, termed the "fine drug," is used as a vermifuge. A sensible remedy, which is of comparatively recent introduction among more enlightened people, is the gizzard of the common fowl, prescribed for dyspepsia. But the great cure-all with the Chinese is ginseng root. The resemblance which the roots often bear to the human form, either as the result of natural growth or skillful trimming, is given as the reason for the Chinese faith in the universal efficacy of this drug. Large and choice specimens of the root are carefully preserved in embroidered coverings and inclosed in cases of varying sizes, the whole being locked in brass-bound chests. An extraordinarily fine specimen is worth five hundred dollars. The hunting of these roots is pursued with all the ardor of gold-seeking.

The Chinese have little use for surgery. They resort to cupping and leeching and lancing on a small scale, and that is about as far as they go. Morbid growths are removed with what is known as "the five tigers specific," a composition of sulphate of iron, alum, nitrate of potash, metallic mercury and verditer. In only one respect is their surgery heroic. They will shove a needle into the body anywhere about as far as it will go.—Dr. G. W. Woods, U. S. N., in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

SIRENS OF BUSINESS.

Where the Weaker Sex is Winning Its Way Grandly.

The man who contributes to a charity or buys a bill of goods from a drummer has a vague notion that he has done a service for the solicitor. But the female canvasser never permits him to harbor any such idea about her. He is given to understand that he has done only what he should have done long ago, and it was highly improper for him to wait till she reminded him of it. That is the reason every one feels himself humble and abashed when a female canvasser booms up in the horizon and feels humbler and more abashed when she leaves.

There are two kinds of female canvassers—the old and the young varieties. Their methods are diametrically opposite. The one says everything she can; the other as little as she can. The former is a horn exhorter, and was created for the purpose of running a scheme for absorbing the ears of a congregation. But as she found all the departments in those branches of industry filled up she took to canvassing to keep in practice. She can get in more vocal work in a given space than any male agitator of the organ of speech extant. The young variety of canvasser does not run the campaign that way. Her strong points are her eyes. Once her tongue has set forth her business it suspends and her eyes begin to issue dividends. Thereafter all operations are carried on from that quarter. She finds this the most effective way. A whole park of artillery would not hold its own as an instrument of destruction against the eyes of a well-organized canvasser. If she is coldly received she throws a little warmth and feeling into her glances. If she is rebuffed the eyes fill. If she is turned away she suffuses them with a look of pleading that would reduce adamant at a hundred paces. She begs with them, prays with them, urges with them and exhorts with them, and as there is no force known to science that will overcome this mute insistence, humanity has to yield and the reluctant purse strings have to loosen.—*N. HOME LIFE.

Cheerfulness the Great Requisite For the Preservation of Home Joys.

"There are souls in the world," says Faber, "who have the gift of finding joy everywhere, and of leaving it behind them when they go. Joy gushes from under their fingers like jets of light. Their influence is an inevitable gladdening of the heart. It seems as if a shadow of God's own gift had passed upon them. They give light without meaning to shine."

Such bright hearts have a great work to do for God and humanity. In the dark hours of the Nation's history it is such as these whose cheerful exhortations keep together the "forlorn hopes" of patriotism. In seasons of financial depression it is really wonderful to see how the great public searches for the men who with apparently sincere hearts can utter words of hope, and how, when found, it leans upon them, and willingly follows their example. In our private experiences, too, how much do we all owe to the cheer of sympathetic friends! Such cheerful souls are in demand everywhere; but in no place is the inspiration of their presence needed more than in the home.

Cheerfulness, it has been well said, is largely a matter of temperament. It depends, also, to a great extent upon good digestion and a good pulse, but it may also be a matter of philosophy. It is something which is capable of cultivation.

We have all seen a child who has had a fall rise to its feet, uncertain whether to laugh or cry. For a second its emotions are on the brink of indecision, and may fall one way or the other. But the mother is there, and helps it to decide by breaking into a laugh herself. The child concludes to treat the affair as a joke, and laughs heartily over the grotesqueness of the situation.

It is often so with children of a larger growth. There are many situations in life when it seems to be uncertain whether it is best to laugh or to cry over a misfortune. It is worth while, in such uncertainties, to cultivate the habit of looking on the cheerful side. We are not permitted by the law of charity to laugh at the misfortunes of others (if we can help it), but there is no law against laughing at our own. An indifferent frivolity is one thing; but the habit of discovering the humorous elements in our unpleasant experiences in life may serve to oil the wheels of life and prevent too much friction.

Let us be cheerful at home. Whatever murky disheartenment men have had to plod through during the day, a burst of light and cheer, a kind of domestic dayspring, should break upon them the moment they enter the charmed circle of home. "An outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace" is a theological definition which might be readily transferred to almost any of the prettinesses, the æstheticisms, of the household in which so many take delight. Beauty of color and form and sound, of taste and wealth, is only valuable in so far as it typifies the glad cheer which should characterize our homes.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

AN INTELLIGENT GOOSE.

A Gander Which Was Not as Stupid as the Rest of Its Family.

The Talker finds in a recent book on "The Intelligence of Animals" a story which goes to show that the goose is not always such a silly and stupid creature as some would have us believe. Years ago in a little village of Germany, an aged blind woman might have been seen on her way to church every Sunday, led by a gander which walked calmly in front of its mistress, holding her gown in his beak. As soon as the old woman was seated in her pew, the gander retired to the churchyard to feed upon the grass, and when the service was ended he conducted his mistress to her home. One day the pastor called to pay his old parishioner a visit, but found she had gone out; on his expressing some surprise to her daughter that she would trust her mother to go out alone, she replied: "Oh, sir, we have nothing to fear; my mother is not alone, the gander is with her."—Christian at Work.

A BUSINESS WOMAN.

Mrs. M. E. DeGeer, the Founder of Kansas Towns and Newspapers.

Mrs. M. E. DeGeer called to-day with her daughter, Mrs. Kate B. Russell, her successor in the publication of the Western Times, at Scott City. Mrs. D. and her two daughters came from Chicago to Scott County, Ks., fifteen months ago and pre-empted land thirty-five miles from Garden City, and after building their own claim-houses brought in a large colonization of wealthy and influential men and women. In the early spring she started the first paper in the county, built the first hotel and opened the first law office. The result of this woman's labors, assisted by her daughters, is that a beautiful young city now stands where her claim-house stood a year ago of 300 inhabitants, with dozens coming in each day and the whole country nearly settled. Mrs. DeGeer, to meet the demand of her many friends in the East, has now placed her paper in the hands of one daughter, Mrs. Russell, and her land and real estate business in the hands of another daughter, Mrs. Eastman, and has opened a new land and law office in Syracuse, on the Santa Fe Railroad, south of Greely County, bordering on Colorado, where she has organized a town company for the purpose of establishing towns in that county. As in Scott County, she built the first house in Greely County, and incorporated a town company, with a staff of officers, to use her own words, "with money and brains," Messrs. Rice, Hunter, Decker and Core, of Hutchinson; Childs & Parsons, of Arkansas City; Hon. H. M. Wheeler and herself. They have a hotel with other buildings in their new town, Greely City, with a rich county of good land.—Topeka Daily Commonwealth.

CAPTURED BY INDIANS.

Strange Adventures of a Philadelphian in the Black Hills.

"This is a very strange story of mine," said a queer old man to a reporter yesterday. His garments were filthy, and he was old and feeble and wretched looking. "My name is Sebastian Beck, and in 1875, during the Black Hills mine excitement I left Philadelphia with a party of men and their wives and children to go in search of gold. I have just come back. We worked veins in Wyoming and Dakota, and had amassed $10,895 worth of gold-nuggets, and were just starting a colony when one day three thousand Indians swooped down on us, took our gold, and blindfolded and strapped us on ponies. Then the Chief, 'Black Moon,' went one way with the women and children, whom we never saw afterward, and Sitting Bull took us men into Montana. For ten years we were kept with the Indians, and almost became Indians ourselves. In their battles with the whites we were compelled to take part, and were dressed like warriors, with paint, feathers, bows and arrows and tomahawks. I was present at the massacre of General Custer, and had on my paint and feathers, and did my share of the whooping and fighting.

"I was made Chief of a band of Indians, and according to the rules of the tribe, had to marry a squaw. Some time ago while fishing, I sighted one of the officers of Fort Walsh, and, calling him, told him my story. He helped me escape from the Indians, and when I reached the fort I could hardly make them believe I wasn't an Indian. Ever since my escape I have been working my way East."—Philadelphia Times.

The Booming South.

Every mail brings new evidences of the birth and re-awakening of Southern industries. The magical success of the iron mines of Alabama has been one great incentive to activity. Ten years ago these mines could have been bought for $50,000; to-day they are held at as many millions. One of the most recent enterprises projected is a railroad from Knoxville to Nashville. This road will open some of the richest coal fields in the country, will penetrate primeval forests of walnut, ash, beech, chestnut and oak, and will give value to a large grazing territory and to one of the best tobacco-growing regions in the South. To-day the Southern Appalachian range is the richest untouched treasure house in the country. Its hills hide most of the materials that minister to man's well-being, including even petroleum and natural gas.—N. Y. Star.

—M. Ballaud asserts that flour kept in sacks for two or three years is unwholesome, because alkaloids are formed in consequence of the acidity of the old flour during the transformation of gluten under the influence of the natural ferment of wheat. When such flour is treated with ether and the product evaporated on a sand bath, there is found a fatty matter which has an acid reaction, exhales a disagreeable odor and has an acrid taste. If a little hot water is added and the mixture permitted to stand over the sand bath a short time and then allowed to cool, the alkaloids may easily be recognized on the glass slides on employing the usual tests. The reactions may be obtained with flour even but a year to a year and a half old, but they are very marked with flour which had lain two or three years after having been milled.

—The Hindoos say that chess was the invention of an astronomer who flourished several thousand years ago, and who was possessed of supernatural knowledge and acuteness. The Greeks claim that it was the invention of Palamedos to beguile the tedium of the siege of Troy. The Arab legend is that it was devised for the instruction of a young despot by his tutor, a learned Brahmin, to teach the youth how a King was dependent on his subjects for safety.

—According to General Morin, the eminent expert, the proper temperature in well ventilated places is as follows: Nurseries, asylums and schools, 69 degrees; workshops, barracks and prisons, 59; hospitals, 61 to 64; theaters and lecture-rooms, 66 to 69. In dwellings in this country it has been the custom to keep the temperature at 65 to 70 degrees.

—An exposure to light during twenty-five years has produced remarkable changes in the colors of beetles in an English museum. Fiery red has turned to bright green, pale yellow to brown, blue to black, and green to purple.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Pipsissewa, Juniper Berries, and other well-known and valuable vegetable remedies. The combination, proportion and preparation are peculiar to Hood's Sarsaparilla, giving it curative power not possessed by other medicines. It effects remarkable cures where others fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

CONSUMPTION.

Important to the Public as well as the Medical Profession.

Hall's Journal of Health, referring to Consumption, makes the following important statement:

"Consumption usually begins with a slight, dry cough in the morning, then on going to bed, getting more and more frequent, with more and more phlegm, increasing debility, thinness of flesh, shortness of breath, and quickness of pulse," and it may be added that in desperate cases, and, in fact, in all cases of Consumption, or troubles of the throat and lungs, immediate relief may be obtained and a permanent cure affected by the use of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, a medicine known for more than thirty-five years as an unfailing remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis and all pulmonary and pectoral diseases. That the worst cases of Consumption have been cured by the use of Hall's Balsam has been attested to by the thousands who have used it, or have been cognizant of its wonderful remedial efficacy. BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME XI. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 27, 1886. NUMBER 12.

EMPTY GRAVES.

Decatur, Georgia, in a Furious Fever of Excitement.

Body-Snatchers' Work—Several Coffins Exhumed, but the Silent Occupants Were Gone.

DECATUR, GA., January 22.—This community is greatly excited over the repeated desecration of its grave-yard by body-snatchers and the discovery of the complicity of the sexton in the crime. Decatur has a handsome cemetery, located in the edge of the town. The inclosure is large, and many of the lots are well cared for. There the bodies of the dead have been laid to rest for three or fourscore years. A part of the cemetery is set aside as "God's acre," and there the poor are laid away. Up to a week ago no one dreamed that the bodies in the cemetery had been disturbed, but last week Jos Smith, the sexton of the cemetery, directed suspicion on himself, and was watched that night. With George Vaughn, the negro janitor of the Atlanta Medical College, he was detected in the act of robbing the grave of Israel Sanford. Vaughn gave bond, while Smith was lodged in jail. The body was never recovered. Smith is still in jail. About two weeks ago Simon Reed, a colored man aged seventy-five years, died. He was buried in "God's Acre." When it was found that the body of Sanford was missing a great many people began to wonder if old man Reed's had gone the same way. Public opinion ran high, and pressure was brought on the Mayor and Council for an investigation. Yesterday Mayor Kirkpatrick, Councilman Austin, Marshal Chivers and several other gentlemen went to the graves, accompanied by a force of negro men to open them and see if there was anything missing. The first grave examined was that of Simon Reed. The negroes with shovels set upon the grave and were soon at the coffin. It was empty, save a pair of breeches and one or two minor pieces of wearing apparel. The body of the old man had been taken away, and was then, no doubt, being well cured in some dean's vats. The negroes who were shoveling dirt grew very much excited and did not need to be urged to greater exertion. As soon as it was clearly seen that Reed's body was gone, they were put to work on two other graves that were very near together. Both graves of colored people and when the coffins were reached it was found that one body was gone. The men were then put to work on the grave of a white lady whose death occurred some weeks ago. When the planks over the coffin were reached Mayor Kirkpatrick said: "It is no use to go further in this grave. I saw this lady buried and I know those planks have not been disturbed." The coffin was therefore not disturbed. There were no other suspected graves that the Mayor felt authorized to open, and the work was abandoned at that point. There are other graves in the cemetery that are thought to be empty, but so far there have been no other investigations, as the relatives of the dead people object to the graves being opened. It is not improbable, however, that there will be still more graves opened. The general impression is that there has been a good deal of grave-robbing in the vicinity of Atlanta. Of late several robberies have been detected, and it is believed that about these parts many a mound rises above an empty coffin.

A Rumpus in the Ohio Senate.

COLUMBUS, O., January 23.—In the Senate to-day President Kennedy held a point regarding a resolution to take up the Hamilton County contest cases and consider them in open session. An appeal was taken from the decision and sustained. The Chairman then rose to a question of privilege, and pointedly defined his authority and duties as presiding officer, which, he said, would be observed according to law and precedent, regardless of rules adopted by the majority to abridge his constitutional rights. On the question of the adoption of a minority report by the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the Hamilton County contests, the Chair held that the four Hamilton County members could not vote, they being interested parties. Then there was a row. The Democrats refused to vote on any question, and the Chair declared the report adopted by the seventeen Republican votes as that would be a majority under the ruling. In the midst of great excitement, a recess until to-morrow morning was declared. President pro tem O'Neill took the chair, and the Democrats, organizing another Senate, reversed a part of the proceedings. The Democrats adjourned to 4 p. m. Monday. The conflict of authority may possibly lead to serious trouble.

Seacoast Fortifications Recommended.

WASHINGTON, January 23.—The Secretary of War to-day submitted the report of the Fortifications Board. It is a long document, and describes fully the necessity and advantages of better coast defenses. It estimated that it will require about $126,000,000 to establish a good system of defenses. A recommendation is made that an appropriation of $21,000,000 be made at the present session of Congress to secure the necessary plant for beginning the construction of such heavy ordnance as will be required. The board also suggests the establishment of two Government foundries, and recommends the construction of torpedo boats for harbor protection.

Chinese Danites.

ST. LOUIS, January 22.—In the Chinese murder trial yesterday it was found that the defendant belonged to a secret society which had its "Danites" to punish with death any member who betrayed the secrets of the organization. These assassins were called "The Order of the Golden Hatchet." A Chinese witness yesterday refused to give any information about the Society, alleging that he would be assassinated inside of a month. Several members of the Order are in every city, whose duty it is to obey the orders of the Society in the matter of putting objectional Chinamen out of the way.

A Mendacious Merchant.

OTTAWA, ONT., January 22.—A merchant of Calgarry, named Ferland, who has traded among the Indians of the Northwest, but who has a grievance against the Dominion Government, is said to have set afloat all the sensational stories about the threatened uprising. Sir John MacDonald who arrived here yesterday, says that there is not the slightest indication of trouble, and that all the agents of his department report the Indians on all reserves quiet and perfectly satisfied.

Fifty-eight Cavalry Horses Burned.

FT. CUSTER, MONT., January 22.—The cavalry stable with fifty-eight horses were burned at the post here to-day.

Indian Affairs.

WASHINGTON, January 22.—The annual conference of the Board of Indian Commissioners and the representative of the various missionary societies, Indian Associations, etc., was held here yesterday. A resolution was adopted declaring in favor of standing by the treaty rights of the Indians, and elevating them before dissolving their tribal relations and dividing their lands in severalty. A resolution against the bill of Congressman Townshend, of Illinois, to organize the Indian Territory into a Territory of the United States was unanimously adopted.

Epidemic of Diphtheria.

READING, PA., January 22.—Malignant diphtheria prevails in the northern portion of this county to an alarming extent. Between twenty-five and thirty deaths have occurred within a short time within a radius of five miles. The disease has now broken out in the eastern portion of Richmond Township, and numerous deaths are reported every day.

Fatal Coasting Accident.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 21.—William Barry, James Broderick and Wm Carsen, ranging in age from sixteen to eighteen years, were coasting on Webster avenue last evening, when they collided with a heavy wagon. Barry and Broderick received fatal injuries and Carsen was painfully cut and bruised.

THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

Victoria Opens the British Parliament in Person.

LONDON, January 21.—The Queen alighted at the Peers' entrance to the House of Lords at 1:30, where she was met by Lord Halsbury, the Lord High Chancellor, and escorted within the Chamber. Her Majesty was at once escorted to the Throne, and when she was seated Lord Halsbury, the Lord High Chancellor, immediately began the reading of the address. The Queen's speech opens with a reference to her relation with the other great powers, which she said was friendly. She was pleased to state that the Afghan boundary question was settled.

"The Roumelian rising shows that the people of that country desire a political change. My object in the negotiations which have been carried on in this connection was to bring them under Prince Alexander of Bulgaria, without impairing the Sultan's rights.

"The long-continued acts of hostility of King Theebaw necessitated war against Burmah. The gallantry of the forces under General Pendergast rapidly reduced the country, which, to insure peace, has been incorporated into the empire.

"The agreement made with Spain secures to England all the commercial rights granted to Germany in the Carolines.

"I have seen with deep sorrow a renewal of the attempt to excite the Irish against the Union. I am resolutely opposed to the disturbance thereof, and I am convinced that I have the support of my parliament and people. The social and material conditions of Ireland engages my attention. Although there has been no marked increase in crime, legal processes in many places have been resisted, and organized intimidation continues. My Irish subjects must be protected in their legal rights and individual liberty by every effort. If the existing law be inadequate to cope with growing evils, I look with confidence to your willingness to invest the Government with all necessary powers.

"Bills will be introduced to create councils in the counties of Great Britain, who will undertake the local business now transacted by the Courts of Quarter Sessions.

"A measure for reform in the county government of Ireland will also be presented.

"You will also be presented with bills facilitating the sale of glebe lands, removing the difficulties hindering the cheap transfer of land; mitigating the distress of the poor in the Western highlands of Scotland, and extending the powers of the Railway Commission.

"I trust that beneficial results will flow from the Royal Commission on Education."

The address closes with an expression of hope for the prompt and effectual dispatch of the important business before Parliament, and commends the Parliament to the keeping and guidance of Almighty God.

Miners Crushed to Death.

MAHONY CITY, PA., January 21.—Jacob Branshire, Nicholas Cannute, miners, and two laborers were working in the gangway of Ellangowan Colliery yesterday when a terrible crash was heard in all parts of the mine. The miners, about 200 or more, thought an explosion had occurred, and all hurried to the gangway, from whence the noise came, when it was discovered that about ten tons of rock and coal had fallen, completely burying alive Branshire and Cannute, but only partially covering the two laborers, who had extricated themselves when assistance arrived. They were not fatally injured, but were terribly cut and bruised. The work of rescuing the other two was then begun, and an hour subsequently the bodies were found. Death must have been instantaneous, as almost every bone was broken.

Big Beef-Slaughtering Schemes.

KANSAS CITY, MO., January 21.—The Times to-morrow will say that the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company, in connection with its projected lines into the Indian Territory and Texas, will establish stock-yards at Argentine, adjoining the city, with capacity for thirty or thirty-six thousand head of cattle, and also erect large packing-houses. Work will be commenced as soon as the season permits. The paper also states that an Eastern firm owning eighteen butcher-shops in New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore have purchased ground for a large packing-house, from which to supply their Eastern markets with dressed beef.

None Escaped Injury.

ST. JOSEPH, MO., January 21.—A disastrous wreck occurred last night on the Des Moines & St. Joseph branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy system, about four miles west of Albany. The passenger train bound for St. Joseph encountered a broken rail, when the whole train, except the engine, was thrown from the track and down an embankment fifteen feet, demolishing the cars. There were fifteen passengers on the train and none escaped injury. An old man named Miller, of Palmyra, Iowa, was instantly killed, his neck being broken and skull crushed.

The Nanticoke Imprisoned Miners.

WILKESBARRE, PA., January 21.—It being still believed by the relatives of the entombed men at the Nanticoke mines that some of them may possibly be alive, it has been decided to sink a six-inch bore hole over the spot where the men, if alive, or supposed to be, so that relief can be given them. It will take about twenty days to sink the hole. The experienced miners believe that the men have been dead for some time, but the hole will be sunk to satisfy the relatives of the buried man.

Distressing Double Drowning.

DAWSON, PA., January 21.—A sad skating accident, resulting in the drowning of two persons, occurred near here last night. A party of young folks were enjoying themselves on the Youghiogheny River ice, when a young lady named Fisher fell into an air hole. Her escort, James Marshall, rushed to her rescue, but the ice broke, letting him into the water also, and before succor could reach them the current swept them under the ice and they were both drowned. The bodies have not been recovered.

Spanish Revolutionists in France.

MADRID, January 21.—It is rumored that a revolutionary expedition against Spain is being prepared in France, and that it will depart from Marseilles.

Called Bonds Owned by National Banks.

WASHINGTON, January 21.—The Secretary of the Treasury to-day transmitted to the Senate his reply to the resolution of Senator Ingalls, in which he informs the Senate that of the bonds included in the $10,000,000 call $5,095,850 worth are owned by national banks and deposited with the United States Treasury to secure their circulation.

Mother and Two Children Cremated.

BOONEVILLE, MO., January 21.—At 7:30 o'clock this morning a frame tenement house, occupied chiefly by colored people, was destroyed by fire. Anna Reed, colored, and her two children, were unable to escape from the burning building, and they were all burned to death.

Chinese Starving.

VICTORIA, B. C., January 21.—The distress among the Chinese is appalling. Many are begging, but most are stealing and house-breaking. The Mayor has informed Chinese merchants that they must contribute to the support of their starving countrymen. Soup kitchens are talked of.

Horrible Death of a Child.

ZANESVILLE, O., January 21.—A little daughter of Henry Darnar, of Perry Township, was burned to death last evening. Her clothes caught fire while she was standing in front of the fire to get warm, and before the flames could be extinguished the child was burned into a crisp.

Buried in the Ruins.

TERRE HAUTE, IND., January 21.—At 9:50 o'clock this morning a terrific boiler explosion occurred at the distillery of Fairbanks, Dunning, Frank McNallis and Geo. Olterman were killed. Their bodies have been recovered from under a heap of debris frightfully mangled. Charles Wilker, Michael Ryan, Riley Evington, Frank Bryant and Joe Parsons are among the injured. The entire engine-house is torn down. Damage not estimated. Cause of the explosion is not known.

A Big Strike Ended.

PITTSBURGH, January 21.—The strike at the Edgar Thompson steel works is ended and work will be resumed at once.

A MARRIAGE JOKE.

Two Frolicsome Young Men, Disguised as Indians,

Are United by a 'Squire, Who Afterwards Sues Them for Damages.

LUMBERTON, N. C., Jan. 25.—A lawsuit just entered here brings to light an extraordinary marriage performed early last week in a neighboring township. 'Squire James Bishop was called on some time since by John Trant, a Croatan Indian, who solicited his services to marry him to an Indian girl. The 'Squire stipulated to perform the ceremony Monday evening about dark. While in a group of young men a few days later he mentioned the interview, and said it was the first time in his experience of twenty-one years that he had been called on to perform the marriage ceremony for Indians. Just after dark Monday night two young men, one of them dressed as a woman, came to the 'Squire and asked to be married, saying they were the Indians. The 'Squire came out with a lamp in hand and the wind extinguished it. One of the party then said: "We are in a hurry; don't matter about the light; marry us in the dark." The 'Squire at first demurred, but the man said "I'll pay you five dollars, we are in a big hurry." 'Squire Bishop then performed the ceremony briefly. When it was over he asked for the license and fee, whereupon the young man laughed, and after telling him how he had been sold ran off. The next day he demanded five dollars, which they refused to pay. The third day he was ill of pneumonia, and had a narrow escape. He is still confined to his bed. Yesterday he instituted suit against Davis Furneyhough and Richard Roach for $1,000 damages. He alleges that he caught pneumonia by standing out in the cold to perform the bogus ceremony, and alleges also that as he did perform the ceremony he is entitled to the $5 fee, out of which he has been swindled. Later the parties asked him to withdraw the suit upon payment of the $5. This he declined to do.

A FATED FAMILY.

Seven Mysterious Deaths Within Twenty Months in One Household.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Jan. 25.—The death of George M. Palmer, Jr., twenty-two years old, of No. 143 Otter street, was reported to the Coroner yesterday. This is the seventh death which has occurred in the family under peculiar circumstances in twenty months. Geo. M. Palmer, Sr., is a broker who has lived for more than twenty years at the corner of Otter and Sophia streets. About May 1, 1884, one of his children died after a brief and mysterious illness. Since then the deaths of his five other children and his wife have occurred in rapid succession, in the same mysterious manner. The sixth death occurred about the last of November, and was that of a daughter. A thorough investigation was made by the Coroner without result. The post-mortem examination showed that death had resulted from Bright's disease of the kidneys. Dr. Starck, the family physician, had diagnosed the case, which had the symptoms, like those preceding, of lead poisoning. An analysis of the water showed the presence of lead, but not in sufficient quantities to produce the symptoms or cause death. On occasion of the sixth death, Dr. Taylor made an investigation and reported to the Board of Health. He said that the house was healthy, that there was no lead in the water and that he could not account for the deaths. Dr. Starck is convinced that the cases were all of chronic lead poisoning, and that large quantities of lead must have been taken into the system in some manner. Palmer's business, as a broker, has been greatly injured by the deaths. Many neighbors think there will soon be developed a terrible case of wholesale murder by poison.

Couldn't Give Her Up.

CANTON, O., Jan. 25.—Several weeks ago the daughter of Michael Flaherty, a young woman of marriageable age, declared her intention to get married. Although the father did not directly object, the thought of having his only daughter leave his little household preyed upon his mind. The marriage occurred yesterday morning. When the couple left Flaherty's house for church he was in his usual health, but when they returned an hour later he was found lying at the point of death, and expired a few moments after their arrival of heart disease. His death is directly due to the shock given the old gentleman by his daughter's marriage.

The Mexican Pension Bill as Amended.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The House Committee on Pensions to-day added an amendment to the Mexican pension bill introduced in the House by Mr. Woolford, and directed the report of the bill to the House. As agreed upon in the committee the bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension rolls, at the rate of $8 per month, the names of all surviving officers, soldiers and sailors who served in the Mexican war for any period during the years 1845, 1846, 1847 and 1848, or their surviving widows. No soldier whose political disabilities have not been removed shall be entitled to the benefits of the act.

Miners Overwhelmed and Killed.

GUNNISON, COL., Jan. 25.—In a snow slide that carried away a cabin yesterday at the Excelsior Mine, in Poverty Gulch, near Crested Butte, three miners named Wm. Alexander, John St. John and Mr. Goss were killed. The bodies were recovered to-day. A second slide carried away a cabin in Crystal Basin, occupied by Robert Corey and Henry Collins. Both were killed. Slides are occurring daily. Great anxiety is felt for other miners' camps not yet heard from.

The Chinese Must Surely Go.

PORTLAND, OREGON, Jan. 25.—A dispatch from Tacoma, W. T., says that the jury in the trial of fifteen prominent citizens and officials of Seattle, indicted under the so-called ku klux act, have rendered a verdict of not guilty. The town is wild with enthusiasm, and the feeling that the Chinese must go is now stronger than ever.

Hard Winter.

EDINBURGH, Jan. 25.—All reports agree that this is the hardest winter Scotland has experienced in twenty years. The snow is two feet deep. Sheep are perishing, and wild birds are flocking to the towns and villages to obtain food. The railway companies find it very difficult to keep trains moving.

—A small whitefish, seemingly a new variety of the icthyological species, is visiting Oregon rivers in large numbers, the annual run commencing with the first fall rains and continuing two or three months. It resembles the smelt in its pearl-like whiteness, but there the resemblance ends, as it has well defined scales, and a single specimen sometimes weighs a pound or more. As far as can be ascertained it has never been found excepting in the waters of the Willamette and its tributaries, and only within four or five years.—Chicago Times.

—The death of Dr. F. [illegible] Prideaux has called forth many expressions of regret in England. She was one of the most distinguished of the women graduates in London University. In her examination in 1882 she held the first honors in anatomy and took the gold medal in scholarship. In 1884 she was accorded honors in each subject. Her death was due to diphtheria, contracted while at her post of house-surgeon in the Paddington Hospital for children.

—A pear that weighs 2¼ pounds and measures 14¼ inches the short way round and 18¾ inches the long way has been picked in Shasta County, Cal.

A POOR-HOUSE BURNED,

And Five of the Unfortunate Inmates Perish in the Flames.

JACKSON, MICH., January 24.—The County Poor-house was almost entirely destroyed by fire at 1 o'clock this morning. There were forty inmates, and all escaped but five, who perished in the flames. The remains of the victims were brought to the city to-day. The dead are as follows: Dolly Martin, aged 60, insane, an inmate for twelve years; Kate Avery, aged 70, insane, an inmate for ten years; Jane Atkins, aged 70, insane, an inmate for ten years; Zena Boynton, aged 93, deaf; Charles Elliot, aged 73, blind. The building is situated in a lonely spot about four miles from the city. It was recently built at a cost of $12,000. The fire, the origin of which is unknown, broke out in the inmates' kitchen, and the whole interior was destroyed. The thermometer at the time registered 10 degrees below zero. All the inmates lost their clothing, rushing out into the snow in a naked condition. Thirty of the paupers were brought to the city and housed. Some of these will die from the effects of the exposure they were subjected to. John Doherty, the hired man, brought three of the lunatics down the fire-escape in his arms, thus saving their lives. An imbecile boy, nineteen years of age, was found in bed and was rescued by means of the fire-escape. There were only two men, besides the inmates, about the place when the fire broke out and they rescued the inmates before other help arrived. Wm. Mills, one of the inmates, was the man who first issued Sanders' Spelling Book. At one time he was worth a quarter of a million dollars.

A MOST BRUTAL MURDER.

An Old Lady Wantonly Killed by a Negro Near Henderson, Ky.—The Murderer Lynched.

HENDERSON, January 24.—A cruel murder was committed before daylight this morning three miles below this place. Calvin Simpson, a Union County negro, broke into the house of an old white lady named Mrs. Graves. She and two daughters fled from the house, followed by Simpson. The old lady was overtaken and killed with a club. The girls escaped unhurt to a neighbor's house. Simpson then went to Males Browns's house, a near neighbor, drove him out, and took possession. Simpson fortified himself in the house, which was guarded until officers arrived and battered down the door and arrested Simpson, who was brought here and put in jail. He feigns insanity, and is quite violent. There is talk of lynching, but all is quiet to-night.

EVANSVILLE, IND., January 25.—A special to the Journal from Henderson at 2 this morning states that a mob took Calvin Simpson, the mulatto murderer of Mrs. Graves, from the jail at half past 1 o'clock, and hung him to a tree half a mile from town, after which they riddled the body with bullets. The mob told him to say his prayers, which he did. They then asked him what he killed Mrs. Graves for. He replied that the Lord asked him to do so. They then said: "Up you go to the Lord," and strung him up. They then retired and left him hanging. There have been so many murders in that section of country that the people are resolved to stop the business.

SEVEN RAVING MANIACS.

A Whole Family Rendered Crazy by Being Shamefully Swindled.

ST. LOUIS, January 24.—Seven brothers, all raving maniacs, en route for the Jacksonville, Ill., asylum, passed through this city yesterday. The Commissioner in charge of the lunatics states that prior to the war a wealthy farmer by the name of Anson Arnold settled in Hickory County, Mo., with a large family. The acquirement of money seemed to be their highest aim in life, and the whole family of seven sons and five daughters deprived themselves of the necessities of life in order to gain it. About three years ago a stranger visited their home, and after convincing them that they could in a short time largely increase their wealth, induced them to invest their all in what proved to be a mythical silver mine in Nevada. After months of anxiety they learned that they had been imposed upon, and all seven of the brothers, upon the receipt of the news, immediately became afflicted with a violent form of insanity, which is the cause of their present trip to Jacksonville.

TWO CONFIDENCE MEN

Who Imposed on Evangelist Steve Holcomb and His Louisville Congregation.

LOUISVILLE, January 24.—R. D. McKelvey, aged 25, son of David McKelvey, Mayor of Allegheny City, Pa., was arrested to-night at the instance of the evangelist, Steve Holcomb, who charged him with obtaining money under false pretenses. McKelvey and his partner, Robert Brooks, were converts at Holcomb's Gospel Mission, and soon became earnest exhorters at the meetings. McKelvey borrowed money from Holcomb, saying he wished to go into the peddling business. Yesterday he eloped with Miss Lizzie Elliott, a member of Holcomb's congregation, who clerks in a shoe store. An investigation, showing that McKelvey and Brooks were sharps who have served terms in the penitentiary, and who have been working confidence games in other cities, led to the arrest.

Eleven Dead Bodies Recovered.

WHEELING, W. VA., January 24.—Since yesterday eleven more bodies have been recovered from the Newburg mines. The bodies were found in various positions, some with arms extended as if about to pursue their usual work, others with arms and limbs contracted as if in awful agony. All were terribly burned and blackened, and their distorted features told of their terrible sufferings, but none were so mutilated as the three that were recovered yesterday. One man was found face down with his head on his arm as if he had escaped the violence of the explosion, and assumed that position in hope of finding sufficient air to prolong life until rescued, but this theory is contradicted by practical miners, who think the men were all killed by the explosion.

His Mother's Dream Comes Sadly True.

WYANDOTTE, KAS., January 24.—A young man named J. S. Conner, from Stella, Neb., arrived here yesterday to take a position as telegraph operator at the Missouri Pacific Depot. He was found dead in his bed at Ryan's Hotel this morning. He had blown out the gas and suffocated. A letter was found in his pocket from his mother, saying that she had dreamed he was dead.

Both Apparently Bent on War.

LONDON, January 25.—Turkey is making the greatest naval preparations, fearing action by Greece.

ATHENS, January 24.—The army will soon be ordered to cross the frontier.

Burned to Death in a Fit.

HAWKINSVILLE, GA., January 24.—A neighbor who called in to see Mrs. Johnson, wife of Dr. Johnson, found her lying on the floor dead, her head resting on a bed of ashes in the fire-place, her nose and hair burned off, eyes burned out, and clothing burned off. It is supposed she fell in the fire in a fit.

Good, Fat Cattle for Chicago.

SHOSHONE, IDAHO, January 24.—Eighteen car-loads of Idaho cattle, fattened on clover hay, were loaded to-day at Caldwell for the Chicago market. This is the first train load of winter-fed cattle shipped this season over the Oregon Short Line. The running time was made thirty miles an hour.

Fatal Accident to a Sleighing Party.

ELMIRA, N. Y., January 23.—Three couples of prominent young people from Havana were sleigh-riding this afternoon, near Millport, a liveryman named Manning driving the team. The horses ran away throwing the entire load with great violence down an embankment. Miss Clara Ellis, daughter of Prof. Ellis, of Cook Academy, was thrown against a telegraph-pole and instantly killed, and all suffered severely from the fall.

Safe-Blowers Who Got $1,500.

EVANSVILLE, IND., January 24.—A safe at the town of Cairo, Henderson County, was blown open this morning and $1,500 in money, besides notes and checks, was stolen.

XLIXTH CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, January 21.—SENATE.—Bills introduced: To enable the people of the Territory of Dakota to form a Constitutional and State Government; to prevent the demonetization of American coin by certain persons in the United States. Laid on the table for the present, by request. The Senate proceeded to the consideration of bills on the calendar. The first bill in order was one to divide part of the Sioux reservation in Dakota into a separate reservation, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder. The bill, after debate, finally went over, and the bill to provide for the counting of the Electoral vote was taken up, and Mr. Sherman took the floor and addressed the Senate. Mr. Sherman then offered an amendment, striking from the bill the clause allowing either house to exclude a vote, and providing that in case of disagreement between the houses the question in dispute should be submitted to a joint convention of both houses, which joint convention shall immediately, without debate, upon the roll-call of the respective houses, vote upon the question or questions upon which there has been such disagreement, and the decision of the majority of the members of the joint convention shall be deemed final and conclusive, and the votes shall be counted accordingly, and be announced by the President of the Senate; that while the two houses shall be in meeting, as provided in this act, the President of the Senate shall have power to preserve order, and no debate shall be allowed, and no question shall be put by the presiding officer except to either house, or a motion to withdraw, and upon questions which the two houses have disagreed, as aforesaid. Mr. Edmunds replied at some length, and concluded by saying that he could see neither the wisdom nor the constitutional propriety of Mr. Sherman's proposition. Mr. Evarts was disposed to regard the amendment proposed by Mr. Sherman with favor, as offering an opportunity to the Senate to overcome the majority of the House by the vote of the united body. The Senate adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE.—No bills of any importance being reported under the call of committees the House resumed in the morning hour the consideration of the bill to increase the pensions of soldiers' widows. Mr. Warner (Ohio) offered an amendment providing that this act shall apply only to widows who were married before its passage. Mr. Townsend (Ill.) offered an amendment as a substitute for Mr. Warner's amendment, providing that when an invalid pensioner shall die, his widow or minor children shall be entitled to an original pension, without being required to prove that the death of the pensioner was due to his military or naval service—amendment rejected by a vote of 108 to 115, and Mr. Warner's by a vote of 105 to 126. On motion of Mr Snowden (Pa.) an amendment was adopted making it a misdemeanor for any person to receive any money for the prosecution of any claims arising under this act. Mr. Browne (Ind.) then offered his amendment, repealing the limitation on the arrears of pension act. Mr. Rogers (Ark.) raised the point that the amendment was not in order, as it contained the substance of a bill pending before the House. A long discussion of the point followed, and in order to enable the matter to be looked into still further the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, January 22.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—Mr. Herbert (Ala.), from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back the Boutelle resolution calling on the Secretary of the Navy for information relative to the alleged erasures of certain inscriptions and the dismissal of Union soldiers at the Norfolk Navy-yard, with an amendment extending the inquiry to dismissals made at the Navy-yard and light-house district, at Norfolk during the terms of the immediate predecessors of the present Secretary of the Navy. Several sharp debates were had, and two or three amendments voted down by a strictly party vote. An amendment by the Committee on Naval Affairs was then adopted and the house took a recess. The House, at its evening session, passed sixteen pension and three disability bills, and adjourned until Monday.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—SENATE.—A number of communications were received from the Executive Departments. Senator Walthall, of Mississippi, was sworn in. Senator Hoar's subsidized railroad extension bill was reported. A joint resolution of the House went over to permit a correction of words misspelled by the House engrossing clerks. A bill providing for a free bridge across the Potomac was reported and passed. The passage of the electoral count bill was urged by Mr. Morgan, of Alabama, in a speech, after which the Senate went into executive session, but at 4:10 p. m. adjourned.

HOUSE.—In the House, the call of States for the introduction of bills was ordered for to-morrow, and at 12:15 p. m. the House adjourned on the announcement of the death of Congressman Rankin, of Wisconsin.

A New Incandescent Lamp.

Mr. Max Muthel has patented in Germany an incandescent lamp which possesses the advantage of requiring no vacuum in the globe. He has, it is reported, very ingeniously overcome one danger that experiments of this kind have heretofore presented, and that is the fusion of the incandescent wire. The wire used by him consists in a mixture of bodies that are conductors and non-conductors of electricity. He takes magnesia, silicate of magnesia, etc., and porcelain clay, and forms a thread of them, which he heats to incandescence and saturates with a solution of platino-iridium salts, and afterward raises several times to incandescence, in order to reduce the absorbed salts to a metallic state. Instead of the foregoing mixture, filaments of clay may be taken and saturated with a solution of metallic salt, which is then reduced to a metallic state through incandescence and the use of oil of lavender or some other organic substance, or through an electric current. With wires thus prepared, fusion is absolutely overcome, the presence of the non-conducting substances preventing the metallic parts from melting. Mr. Muthel supposes that the electric spark jumps, so to speak, from one particle to another, and in this way causes a heating of the other substances, which, brought to incandescence, emit a more intense light.

Colds Caught at Funerals.

[Philadelphia Bulletin.]

At the recent funeral of the late Theodore Bergner, of this city, there was introduced an innovation that should at once become an established custom. All the gentlemen in attendance at the final services at the grave were requested to keep on their hats, thus relieving them of the necessity of following an old and purposeless practice of standing bareheaded in the cold air. The observance of this fogy usage has been the cause of many fatal colds, and now that the initiative has been taken against it, it will no doubt soon be generally ignored.

The Longest Range Gun.

It is difficult to state the result of the large number and variety of experiments which have been made with guns in recent years. The 100-lb. Parrott gun, rifled, is set down to carry its ball effectively 6,910 yards, a distance of close upon four miles.

—The entire pearl fisheries of Mexico from the mouth of the Colorado River to the boundary of Central America, are now controlled by a single company.

—A school-teacher in the suburbs of Boston recently punished a pupil for telling an untruth by putting Cayenne pepper on his tongue. In the course of about two weeks he died of diphtheria. The friends of the boy naturally claimed it to be a result of the punishment. An investigation satisfied the school committee that it was nothing but a coincidence, but they passed a vote disapproving of this mode of punishment.—Boston Herald.

—Cremation is evidently making headway. If ridicule could have killed this method of disposing of the dead, it would have succumbed to the cartoon printed some years ago, depicting a small boy with a tin can in his hand standing at the open door of a crematory and asking of the proprietor: "Please, sir, is dad done yet?"—Boston Herald.

—A convulsion of nature has lately caused several hundred feet square of ground near Electric Mountain, in National Park, Montana, to be thrown about in a remarkable way. Portions of it have been upheaved, while in other places great openings of an unknown depth appear.—Denver Tribune.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

A noticeable feature has been the steady appreciation in the prices of old crop of Burleys responding to a good general manufacturing demand. In the old tobaccos, as well as the new, current preferences have been running to medium and better grades, and those categories have ruled stronger than the grades below, though the very lowest grade of Burley trash has attracted demand enough to advance it somewhat. We quote 1885 tobaccos as follows for full weights and sound packages:

Proceedings of the Legislature.

FRANKFORT, January 16.—SENATE.—The Senate to-day passed a bill amending the charter of the Citizens' Gas Light Company, of Louisville. The Senate at last adopted the joint rules agreed to by the House at an early day, and then adjourned.

HOUSE.—A score of new local bills was introduced and a few passed. Mr. Watson offered a bill providing that on and after the first day of March, 1886, it shall not be lawful for any druggist, or other dealer in drugs or medicines, to sell any sulphate or other preparation of morphine in any bottle, vial, envelope, or other package, unless the same shall be wrapped in a scarlet paper or envelope, and all bottles so used have a scarlet label. Referred. Mr. Neal offered a bill to make the penalty for murder hanging instead of discretionary with judge and jury, as at present. Mr. Shackleft offered a bill to license the carrying of concealed deadly weapons.

FRANKFORT, KY., January 18.—The attendance in each house was small, and sessions very short. In the proceedings there was not a single feature of general interest save the following: Under the head of unfinished business, the House took up Mr. Spalding's bill to prohibit the sale of liquors within one-half mile of country churches, which was reported favorably last Friday. By the consent of Mr. Spalding it was recommitted to the Committee on Judiciary. Under the same head a bill of interest to workingmen was called up. The law makes a man's wages to the extent of fifty dollars exempt from execution, excepting for claims for food and raiment. The bill placed fuel in the same category. Notwithstanding the committee report in its favor, it was lost.

FRANKFORT, January 19.—SENATE.—The Senate passed the pleuro-pneumonia bill with some unimportant changes, by a vote of 21 to 10. Briefly stated, the bill authorizes the State to hire a veterinarian to examine all cattle supposed to be infected with pleuro-pneumonia and have them instantly killed if it be shown that they are infected. Those persons who bring into the State cattle infected with pleuro-pneumonia, or any who sell or drive upon the public highway cattle so infected, are to be punished with heavy fines and imprisonment. The pay of the veterinary surgeon is fixed at $5 per day.

HOUSE.—The Committee on Criminal Law reported on the bill, setting forth a number of questions to be asked in the selection of jurors to try criminal and penal cases as follows: "Are you related by blood or marriage to the defendant or defendants or the person alleged to have been injured by the offense charged? Have you been convicted of a felony in or out of this Commonwealth? Have you formed or expressed an opinion from the statements of a party or witness, or reading or hearing read the minutes of the examining board, or a copy of the same? Have you physical or mental defects such as render you unfit to discharge the duty of a juror? Do or did you stand in the relation of guardian and ward, or master and servant to the defendant or the party alleged to have been injured by the offense charged? Have you such conscientious convictions that you would not on the law and testimony return a verdict of guilty when the offense is punishable with death? Are you an attorney-at-law, practicing physician or member of any religious denomination or court officer? Have you any such bias or prejudice, in the case as would prevent you giving the defendant a fair and impartial trial?" The bill reducing the number of grand jurors from sixteen to twelve was also favorably reported.

FRANKFORT, January 20.—SENATE.—The Senate heard eulogies on the late Senator A. B. Clark.

HOUSE.—The House discussed the proposed rules. Bills were introduced to tax circuses and other traveling shows, to prohibit the sale of deadly weapons, to move the capital from Frankfort to Lexington and to authorize the Directors of the Penitentiary to appoint the Warden.

FRANKFORT, January 21.—SENATE.—The Senate passed a bill providing for night schools in cities of twenty thousand inhabitants or over, to which pupils not more than forty years old may be admitted. Senator Berry pressed the measure to its passage. Mrs. Virginia Hanson was re-elected State Librarian.

HOUSE.—The House did nothing of importance.

FRANKFORT, January 22.—SENATE.—The only bill of general interest which was considered was that prohibiting the playing of base ball on Sunday in this Commonwealth. Amendments exempting from its provisions the counties of Jefferson, Campbell, Henderson and Union were adopted, and the bill was passed.

HOUSE.—The House devoted the day to a bill regulating the number of jurors in felony trials. The object was to give the Commonwealth the same number of challenges as the defense had. Various amendments were offered and rejected, after which the bill was lost. It has been before the House for three days, and but for the handicap of an adverse report from the committee, would probably have passed. There was nothing else of importance before the House.

Miscellaneous Items.

MRS. VIRGINIA HANSON has been unanimously re-elected State Librarian by the General Assembly, a compliment both handsome and deserved.

PAT DOWNEY, a wealthy farmer living near Frankfort, was found dead in the road the other morning, about a hundred yards from his house. He had been to town the evening before and drank heavily of liquor and did not start home till late. When found all his clothes were removed, and it is supposed that in his intoxicated condition he imagined he was going to bed.

DEPUTY United States Marshal F. B. Riley arrived in Louisville on the 22d, bringing the first intimation of a bloody tragedy that occurred near the little back woods town of Manchester on the night of the 17th inst. George Gray and Dan Gray, brothers, went with Theo Beuge and Dinks Stivers to a house in that neighborhood kept by Kate Harney, a loose and handsome woman. Kate proved to be a bone of contention before a great while, and the four men, who were armed, began to shoot. In the end, George Gray, Dinks Stivers and Theo. Beuge were killed, and Dan Gray left lying at the point of death, with several bullets in him. The woman, who was the only one present, ran out of the house as soon as the shooting began, and there is not a single eye-witness to the affair except Dan Gray, who will probably die. The three men who were killed were found by the neighbors lying all around the room. They were each shot several times.

A SIX-MONTHS-OLD son of Lucy Reynolds, a prisoner at the Louisville Workhouse, died the other morning suddenly. Coroner Miller held an inquest, and found that the cause of death was poison, contracted from the mother's system by reason of her excessive use of opium.

THE K. C. R. R. is bound in the sum of $30,000, with good and sufficient security, to comply with the terms of the ordinance granting it the right of way through Covington to the river, and the route will soon be made public, notwithstanding several statements to the contrary.

A NEW and perhaps fatal plague, hardly surpassed by that of the flux of last year, has struck in the vicinity of Peach Orchard.

THE Kenton and Campbell County Pharmaceutical Association held a meeting the other day and decided to cut the rates on patent medicines to agree with the same rates as in Cincinnati.

MRS. ANNE STRAUB, mother of Judge Straub, died in Kenton County, aged seventy-nine years. Her husband, Isaac Straub, died in 1875.

FOUR bright and beautiful children of Charles Ritter and wife, Hopkinsville, have died with diphtheria within ten days. The youngest was two and the oldest five years. The latter succumbed on the 19th. The mother is distracted with grief, and it is feared will lose her mind.

THE "ECONOMY" RECORD.

What the Democratic Party Has Done in This Line for Ten Years Past—Its Present Duty.

The State Administration of Governor Tilden in 1875 first turned the tide of public sentiment in favor of Democratic rule.

In 1873 an expiring Congress on its last day, with a Senate having only seventeen Democrats out of seventy-four members and a House containing one hundred and five Democrats out of two hundred and forty-three members, had passed the Salary-Grab bill, which boldly took nine hundred and seventy-two thousand dollars out of the Treasury and divided it among the Senators and Representatives for two years' increase of back pay, or from March 4, 1871, up to the date of the passage of the bill. While several Democrats had been weak enough to vote for the iniquitous bill, the responsibility was clearly with the Republican majority.

In 1874 Governor Tilden was elected on a platform demanding economy and honesty in public expenditures, and he at once commenced the work of cutting down expenses and cutting off rascals.

In 1876 the Democratic National platform declared: "Reform is necessary in the scale of public expenses," showing that in ten years of Republican rule taxation had risen from sixty million dollars to four hundred and fifty million dollars, or from five dollars per head to more than eighteen dollars per head, and said: "We demand a rigorous frugality in every department and from every officer of the Government." Mr. Tilden was elected by the people on this platform, although cheated out of the office by politicians.

In 1880 the Democratic National Convention based the claim of its candidates to the support of the people mainly on the ground of "the honesty and thrift of a Democratic Congress," which had reduced the public expenditure $40,000,000 a year.

Samuel J. Randall was Speaker of the Forty-fourth Congress for a part of the term and of the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses up to March 3, 1881.

In 1880 Hancock was only defeated by the unscrupulous use of money by the Republicans and by scarcely concealed corruption of the ballot-box in Indiana, New York and Ohio. The "golden stream from Stephenson's bank" and the "crisp new two-dollar bills" will not soon be forgotten.

As Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the Forty-eighth Congress, Mr. Randall kept up the reputation of the Democracy as the advocate of honest expenditures and economical appropriations and paved the way for the election of a Democratic President last year.

Speaker Carlisle has now before him a grave and heavy responsibility. On economy in appropriations and honesty in expenditures the Democratic party has been restored to power and to the confidence of the people. While the appropriation bills were under Mr. Randall's supervision there was no danger of retrogression. But Speaker Carlisle, through the scattering of these bills, has now to find eight Randalls for Chairmen of Committees instead of one—eight Representatives instead of one who will exercise over the appropriations the same watchfulness, economy and firmness displayed by the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the last Congress.

No doubt Mr. Carlisle will seek to put the committees which will now have to report important and heavy appropriation bills in addition to their other duties into honest and capable hands. No doubt, the chairman of all the committees among which the appropriations are to be scattered, will seek to do good and honest work. The question is, will they be able to do such work effectively without possessing that knowledge of the whole mass of appropriations asked and of the amount to be appropriated which a single committee could command?

If the policy of crippling the Appropriations Committee's power, which has been wisely and beneficially used, should destroy the Democratic record for strict economy, it will be disastrous to its authors.—N. Y. World.

CONGRESSMAN BELMONT.

Why the Friends of the "Plumed Knight" Are Fiery Mad at the "Young Polo Player" from New York.

With signal fatuity the followers of James G. Blaine expose their sores by making an outcry against Perry Belmont's receiving the chairmanship of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. They will never forgive him for having made a spectacle of Mr. Blaine when he appeared as a witness before the Committee on Foreign Affairs in 1882. It is easy for Mr. Reed, of Maine, to say that Belmont achieved prominence only "when a great man like Blaine condescended 'to wipe his boots upon him.'" but the fact remains that Belmont came out of the encounter with honor, while Blaine's reputation received no tarnish only because it was already so darkly spotted. Throughout his examination in that investigation Mr. Blaine played the part of a bully and braggart, and continually sought to evade incriminating himself by insulting his examiners. Instead of answering pertinent questions he delivered tirades against the impertinence and boyhood of Mr. Belmont. But the young member of Congress stuck to his points with a dogged persistence that provoked Mr. Blaine to a pitiable rage. One thing Mr. Belmont could not ascertain, and that was what became of some of the records of the State Department relating to the Chili-Peru affair, which had disappeared. They have never turned up, and until they do Mr. Blaine must rest under the suspicion of having spirited them away with the same purpose as induced him to appropriate the Mulligan letters. That investigation, in which Mr. Blaine was held upon the gridiron of cross-examination by the "young polo player," disclosed the fact that as Secretary of State he had sought to take advantage of the war between Chili and Peru to further the settlement of a baseless private claim. To this end he dismissed a faithful minister and appointed one after his own heart who took with him two sets of instructions. For more than six months "the most pressing service" of American diplomacy in South America was prostituted to the benefit of a private claim; and the ultimatum of the United States represented to be that by no treaty of peace should there be a cession of territory to Chili by Peru, in disregard of the rights of Mr. Landreau, an alleged American citizen.

Throughout the investigation Mr. Belmont showed a familiarity with the subject and a grasp of the principles in foreign relations remarkable in so young a man. He has had two years' experience since on the committee of which he has been appointed Chairman, and in all his acts has proved himself a far more active and intelligent man than its ex-Chairman—ex-Governor Curtin. This, to be sure, is not very high praise, for superiority over the war Governor of Pennsylvania does not infer high qualifications for such a post. But in certain quarters Belmont will never be forgiven for baiting the bull of Maine until he flourished his tail in the air and bellowed like a calf.—Chicago News.

DEMOCRATIC MINORITY.

The Duty of Vigorously Upholding President Cleveland's Nominations—Devotion to Party Principle with the Popular Encouragement.

Next in importance to the approaching discussion of the silver question will be the debates which we are told the Republican Senators will direct against President Cleveland's nominations.

The fact that the White House is now inhabited by a Democrat has made no change in the feelings of those gentlemen as to their responsibilities under the Constitution. They must still advise the President upon certain questions just as though he were a pure-blooded Republican, and give their consent to his proceedings as they think fit.

But what is expected to make a peculiar stir among the Republicans while debating the new candidates for office, and to produce an energetic and solemn exhibition of eloquence, will be their conclusion that they are the special keepers of the Civil-Service law and the appointed promoters of its spirit and extension. It was invented and sustained by their party, and they must look after its interests; and the way to do this will be to keep the Republicans in and prevent the representatives of the Democrats from taking their places.

It will devolve upon the Democratic Senators, in the event of such an attempt, to resist it with the greatest vigor and indignation. Besides sustaining the action of the President by following this course, they will be battling for one of the most fundamental principles of Democracy. This is that the people have the right, through their proper representatives, to choose their own agents of Government, and that the expressed wishes of a popular majority must be fully and faithfully observed. It was the intention of the Democratic majority in 1884 to take the control of the Government from the Republicans into their own hands; and this desire must be respected now and furthered by every justifiable exertion possible on the part of the Democratic Representatives. The fact that Mr. Cleveland regards himself as in some way the chosen Magistrate of the whole people, and in consequence as not holding precisely the same relations to the Democracy as Democrats elected by narrower constituencies, should not lessen a whit the intensity of that party's Senators in their devotion to its principles, or weaken their determination to stand immovably for their party's rights against the assaults of its enemies. They must fight for the Democracy and against the humbug pretensions of the Republicans at every opportunity that is afforded.

In such a contest they will have the people at their back.—N. Y. Sun.

Free and Equal.

General Logan's new bill for the appointment of a commission to investigate and report on the "mental, industrial and physical progress made by the colored race since 1865," is a measure which should be suppressed. It is an outgrowth of the idea that the negro is in some sense a ward of the Nation, and indicates on the part of its author an indisposition to recognize the fact that the negro is a citizen as free and independent as any white man, and responsible to no one but himself for the use that he makes of the privileges conferred upon him. If the negroes are American citizens, there is no reason why they should be made the subject of a special inquiry. The mere proposition to place them even inferentially in the same category as the Indians or the cattle of the plains indicates an unwillingness on the part of some people to recognize the fact that they are free, and that with every advantage that anybody has they are able to take care of themselves. On their own part the negroes should resent this discrimination as tending to perpetuate the race prejudice and sink their citizenship in the question of their color.

Politicians who have been borne into power on the shoulders of the negro doubtless find it difficult to let him alone, but the time has come when all such meddling as that contemplated by the Logan bill should be most emphatically resisted.—Chicago Herald.

DEMOCRATIC ITEMS.

—The Republican journals which are so indignant at the refusal of the Supreme Court of Ohio to go behind the returns should moderate their rage. The year 1876 furnished an eminent precedent for such action.—N. Y. World.

—Civil Service Examiner—If a profit of two millions of dollars can be realized from thirty years in Congress at a salary of $5,000, how much can be made as acting Vice-President in three years at a salary of $8,000? Applicant—I am sorry, sir, but I have never studied political economy.—N. Y. Sun.

—We read in the papers that in some localities where Democratic postmasters have been appointed Republicans refuse to patronize the office, mailing their letters on the cars and at other places in order to cut down the revenue of the office and thus reduce the salary of the Democratic official. People who will do that are not entitled to postal facilities, and, if it could be done, the Postmaster-General would be justified in depriving them of any chance to either send or receive mail.—Chicago Mail.

—Governor Hill's view of Civil-Service reform is that of a practical man, not of the closet theorist. He declares the selection of public servants on the ground of merit to be the safeguard of popular rights; but he also points out that this does not conflict with the principal, indispensable in a popular Government that heads of departments and others charged with the execution of administrative policies should be men in accord with the Chief Executive or administrative officer intrusted for the time being with the execution of the popular will expressed through the ballot box. The Civil-Service statute, as he views it, applies solely to official places calling "mainly for clerical ability" or other expert qualifications which competitive examinations may determine.—N. Y. Sun.

A WASHINGTON special to the Post says: Last week, Senator Vorhees introduced a bill to admit Washington Territory as a State, and he also introduced a bill to admit Montana, as a State. The Senator was asked if he intended to make the admission of Dakota conditional on the admission of Montana, as it has been reported that the Democrats were disposed to do. He replied: "I can speak only for myself. I think the best arrangement we can make is to admit Dakota, Montana and Washington together. They must all come in soon, and they might as well come now. I don't see how we can prevent Dakota coming in. She has a voting population of 80,000, and is certainly entitled to admittance. I thought at first I should oppose the division of Dakota, but I do not see how I can. The Territory has an area of five times my own State, and South Dakota will be about as large as Ohio and Indiana. Montana has a voting population of 26,000 and Washington has a voting population of 40,000. There are not fifteen Congressional districts in the country with the population of Washington, and not a hundred with that of Montana. Dakota is Republican. Montana is Democratic, and I am confident will remain so. Washington is close, and may be won by either party. If she comes into the Union by Democratic votes, under Democratic Administration, our chances in the new States will be all the better. It seems to be much the best plan to take in those three Territories at once. They are entitled to it, and politically it will be as fair and practicable an arrangement as can be."

REPRESENTATIVE Warner, of Ohio, has prepared a preamble and resolution relative to the Mississippi river improvement, which has been referred to the committee on Rules. It recites that it is currently reported that mud lumps are rising and a bar rapidly forming from the ceaseless and immense deposit of silt by the Mississippi from its mouth, so as to form serious and threatning obstacles to navigation from the mouth of the jetties to the deep water of the open Gulf, and that it is the right and solemn duty of the people's representatives to know whether or not the people's money is being wisely and judiciously expended for the work of river improvement, and whether the works that are done, and those that are in contemplation, are well founded in wisdom, in order that errors may be corrected, and mistakes involving the outlay of immense sums of money may be avoided, and the great and paramount object of deep water navigation from St. Louis to the deep sea may be accomplished. The Speaker is therefore directed to appoint a special committee of eleven members, two from each of the Committees on Appropriations, Commerce, Rivers and Harbors, and Levees, and Improvements of the Mississippi River, and three from the House at large, to consider the subject. The committee is to be accompanied by an engineer officer detailed by the Secretary of War. It is directed to proceed to the points where work has been done by the Mississippi River Commission, and critically examine the work and its effect. It is also to examine the jetties and the bar outside within a radius of five miles from the mouth of the jetties, and to ascertain whether any bars or mud lumps are forming there, and how rapidly, and whether any bar now exists that impedes navigation for vessels drawing twenty-five feet of water.

The bill introduced by Hon. B. A. Neale, of Graves county, into the House on Saturday last, which is intended to repeal the present law on the subject of willful murder, in so far as it allows juries to render a verdict of confinement in the penitentiary for life, is exciting a good deal of comment. In a brief interview with Mr. Nealo, he gave some of the reasons for wanting to restore the law to original principles. Said he

"Willful murder is the highest and blackest degree of the crime of murder, and he who commits that crime, by both divine and human law, forfeits his own right to live, and therefore ought to die, there being but one degree in willful murder, the punishment should always be the same and all persons guilty of that crime should be treated alike. That it is only for willful murder that a man can be hung or put in the penitentiary for life, therefore, the practice of putting one man in the penitentiary for life, and hanging another for the same offence, and same degree of that offence, is a discrimination between men that the law should not allow. Such a practice encourages crime, as well as disrespect for the law. Besides," said he, "the policy and object of the law against murder is not only to punish the guilty, but to rid society of such monsters. This object of the law was to a great extent defeated by a verdict of confinement in the penitentiary for life, by reason of so many of these life prisoners being pardoned and turned loose upon society again."

"The records of the penitentiary show that within the last six years there have been eighty-four life prisoners put in the penitentiary, and twenty-four pardoned out, which is nearly twenty-eight per cent. of the whole. The average time of confinement of the twenty-four pardoned was less than six years. Thus the object aimed to be accomplished by the law has been, and will continue to be, defeated, and the verdicts of juries set aside and the labor and cost of convictions all lost, while society receives no protection from the law. There are 110 life prisoners in the penitentiary now, and the rate of admission has been for the last six years fourteen per year. At this rate, if the pardoning power was not exercised, after discontinuing the ratio of deaths, there would be over 300 life prisoners at the end of twenty years. The cost of one of these per year, including food, raiment and medicine, will not fall short of $80 a year, making a total of $24,000 per year to keep men, who, by the laws of God and man, ought to be hung."—The bill was defeated.—Capital.

THE HIDDEN HAND.

Last Thursday morning James W. Pollard produced quite a flutter in our usually quiet town by the statement that on Tuesday evening, about 7 o'clock, a bucket of water placed upon a stand-table in his family room was lifted by invisible hands to the center of the room where it was tilted over. That he then took the bucket to the well, refilled and returned it to the stand table and resumed his seat, before a blazing fire and beside his wife. That almost immediately thereafter the same invisible person lifted the bucket and again sat it down on the carpet and again tilted it over. Again Mr. Pollard refilled the bucket at the well and again returned it to the table where it had sat for two years past, and the third time the bucket was lifted from the table, and this time passed between Mr. and Mrs. Pollard and the grate to the center of the room where it was again tilted over. He further stated that on Wednesday evening about the same hour (7 o'clock) the bucket was freshly filled at the well again and placed upon the table, and before Mr. Pollard could take his seat the bucket was lifted from the table, and the water again poured on the carpet. Thursday evening several persons visited Mr. Pollard's house, if possible, to witness this singular performance, upon their arrival, about 7:20 p. m., Mrs. Pollard stated that the bucket had been filled and placed upon the stand, had began to move, and was almost off the stand when she caught hold of it and detained it. There was no ice on the table or bottom of the bucket, and Mrs. Pollard, who did not seem to be at all alarmed, confessed herself unable to account for the strange performance of her water bucket. She corroborated the statement of her husband except that she stated that he was mistaken in stating that the bucket left the table three times Tuesday evening, but declared that it did leave the table twice. In front of the table there was a wet icy space, some two feet in length and about eight or ten inches in width, which Mrs. Pollard said was a part of the result of the singular action of her water bucket. Tuesday and Wednesday evening, she stated that the water spread all over the carpet in front of the grate but that the heat had dried it up except what remained immediately in front of the water table, Mrs. Pollard also stated that on Tuesday night they heard distinctly some one chopping at their wood pile, and concluded that from the length of time the chopping continued she expected to find the next morning about all their wood cut ready for use. But when the morning came not a stick was missing nor had a stick been cut.

We have had no definite information from the seat of war since Thursday night. There have been some reports that are not sufficiently authenticated to justify publishing. But should anything remarkable take place our readers shall have a statement of it in our next issue.—Eminence Constitutionalist.

The price has steadily increased from $10.35 per 100 kilograms in 1870 to $19.60 in 1884, while the prices of nearly every other grade of tobacco have fallen off in that time.

At a meeting of the Democratic Executive Committee of Boone county, held in the Court-house in Burlington, Ky., on Monday, December 7th, 1885, it was ordered.

That a Democratic primary election be held in the several voting precincts in Boone county, on the first Saturday in April 1886, between the hours of 8 o'clock a. m., and 7 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating Democratic candidates for Circuit Clerk, County Judge, County Clerk, County Attorney, Assessor, Jailer, County Superintendent, Surveyor and Coroner.

That the qualification of voters shall be the same as those specified in the call of the district committee, which is as follows: "That no one shall be eligible to vote at said election except those who are and will be entitled to a vote at the August election 1886, according to the laws of the State, and who are identified with the Democratic party, and who if voting at the November election, 1884, voted for the Democratic Electors for President and Vice-President."

That the Democratic voters of the county may have the privilege in voting for the county offices alone, to to express a first and second choice when there are more than two candidates for one office, so that before the board to count the votes the hindmost candidate shall be dropped and those votes cast for said hindmost candidate expressing a second choice, said second choice shall be counted as first choice for the candidate so named.

That the clerks of the several voting precincts together with the chairman of the Democratic County Committee shall constitute a Board to compare poll-books and count the vote, and shall, upon ascertaining who has received a majority of the votes cast for the respective offices, declare said candidate the regular Democratic nominee for said office. Said Board shall meet at the court-house in Burlington, at 1 o'clock the following Monday, April 5, 1886.

That the clerks appointed in the several precincts, prepare the poll-books to include both district and county candidates, and at the close of the polls, shall duly certify seal and deliver to the chairman of the Executive Committee of the county, on the day named in sec. 4.

That a list of the officers of the election shall be published in the Boone County RECORDER the first week of said paper's publication after the first Monday in March, 1886, and said officers shall consist of two judges and a clerk, and in case of anyone failing to serve who has been selected any good Democrat present may be selected to fill the vacancy.

Done by order of the committee.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE.

Boone Circuit Court, Ky.

Elizabeth Utz, &c, Plffs.
vs | Notice of sale in equity
Z E Rice, &c. Defts.

By virtue of a Judgment and order of sale of the Boone Circuit Court, rendered at the Oct., Term thereof, 1885, in the above cause, the undersigned will, on Monday, the 1st day of Feb'y. 1886, at 1 o'clock p. m., or thereabout (being County Court day), proceed to offer for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, on a credit of 6, 12 & 18 months, equal installments at the Court-house door, in the town of Burlington, the property mentioned in the Judgment to wit:

A tract of land on Sand Run Creek in this county, containing by survey, 262½ acres, and bounded by the lands of Julia Loder, John Cave, Ben Clore and others. Said tract is divided into two lots by a line crossing it s 5¾ w and about 200 or 300 yds. west of the house. The lot fronting on Sand Run Creek contains 115¼ acres, and the lot on which the house and barns are located containes 119¼ acres. These lots will be offered separately, after which the entire tract will be offered in a body, and the bid or bids making the most money will be accepted.

The purchasers will be required to give bonds with approved security, for the payment of the purchase money, to have the force and effect of a judgment, bearing legal interest from the day of sale. Bidders will be prepared to comply promptly with these terms. Bonds payable to the undersigned.

1886 THE COURIER-JOURNAL. 1886

AN ORGAN OF

LIVING IDEAS AND LIVE ISSUES.

AN ENEMY OF

Monopolies, Oligarchism, and the Spirit of Sectional Strife.

The Courier-Journal (HENRY WATTERSON Editor-in-Chief), is the acknowledged Representative Newspaper of the South, is Democratic in politics, and first, last, and all the time is for a reduction of the War Taxes as levied on the people by the tariff now in force.

The Weekly Courier-Journal

Is the best weekly newspaper published in the United States, and for the quantity and quality of matter that appears in each issue of it, it is the CHEAPEST. Its telegraphic news facilities outclass any other paper, and it has the services of the ablest writers and correspondents in the country. It presents the news of the week from every section of the World. It gives to its readers throughout the year a greater number of Serial and Short Stories by prominent and popular writers than any of the high-priced magazines. It is in every respect a Model Political and Family Paper.

The Weekly Courier-Journal has by far the Largest Circulation of any Democratic Newspaper in America.

It is acknowledged by press and people throughout the United States to be a great paper; great in size; great in enterprise; great in ability; great in the correctness of information; great in variety; great in every sense of the word. It is the paper that everybody should have. To be without it is a great opportunity lost. Those who once take it are not willing to be without it in their homes.

FREE PREMIUMS.

A list of handsome and useful premiums of great variety are offered free to yearly subscribers. On receipt of a request for them, we send free of charge a sample copy of Weekly Courier-Journal and our Premium Supplement, giving our full list of premiums, to any address.

Notice.

Notice is hereby given to all persons engaged in the sale or manufacture of a certain fence known as the "Lenox Saving Portable Fence," that the same is an infringement on a certain other fence known as the Wescott & Gurley Champion Fence, being patented on the 23rd day of April 1878, and being patent No. 202,945. The undersigned are prepared to show to the full satisfaction of all persons, that they have full title to the State of Kentucky in said Wescott & Gurley Champion fence, and that the said Lenox fence is an infringement on same. We request all persons to quit the sale and manufacture of said Lenox fence, and all persons failing to comply herewith will be dealt with according to law.

THE

COMBINATION FENCE

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and servicable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay; and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

The people of this place and surrounding country should unite and make a effort to secure the services of a fine teacher and have the Morgan Academy put in operation. The money spent in this county in a year, sending to schools abroad, would employ two good teachers for several years. We will have more to say on this subject hereafter.

Frank D. Kirkpatrick, of this place, and Miss Clara Clore, of the Florence neighborhood, will be united in marriage at the residence of Elder W. S. Keene, in Covington, this evening at 3 o'clock. We trust that, in their new relation, the contracting parties will enjoy a long and prosperous journey through this life. They will return to groom's father's to-morrow, where they will receive a few of their many friends.

The extreme cold weather of last week caused the death of a number of live stock. Several farmers near Sparta lost fine blooded calves through that means. The supposition is that they being fed on the dry feed, and all the streams being frozen, were unable to obtain water for several days. When the thaw occurred last Friday they drunk too much of the cold water and it caused their deaths.—Warsaw Independent.

The steamer Minnie, operated by the Boone County Distillery, and which plies between Lawrenceburg, Ind., and Petersburg, one day last week, in 1 trip took eight hundred barrels of whisky to the wharf at Lawrenceburg for shipment East, and, in returning, took aboard and safely carried seven carloads of grain back to the distillery. As the ice was running in the river, this was considered a remarkable feat for the boat. But, with Captain Fenton in command and that old reliable engineer, Lemon, on board the Minnie can be depended on.

In this issue is the announcement of M. T. Garnett as a candidate for reelection to the office of County Clerk. Mr. Garnett has made an acceptable officer and will now receive the unanimous endorsement of the people.

S. W. Tolin this week announces himself as a candidate for reelection as the attorney for this county. He has been an attentive official, and will now receive the endorsement of the people.

J. R. Clutterbuck, who has been a faithful sheriff, is announced for a reelection. There is no indication that he will have any oposition, and will be kept in possession of the county's financial department.

RICHWOOD.

Health in this community generally, good.

Some tobacco has been sold in this section, but none for fancy prices.

John M. Henderson and son, Edgar, carpenters and builders, of Hebron, have been doing considerable work in this neighborhood this winter. They are now giving Jackson & Harmons commodious tobacco house at this place its finishing touch. This building is an immense structure, and is conveniently arranged for the business for which it was designed.

Another Jesse Cooley has been captured, this time at Charleston, West Virginia. The Alf Burnett detectives made the arrest for larceny, after which they concluded their game was the one Cooley wanted in this county, and had his photograph taken, and accompanied by a description it was sent to Sheriff Clutterbuck. While the picture does not look so very much like Cooley, the decription and the location of the scars fit him exactly. The negro has been sick in jail for some time, which may account for the photograph's not looking more like Cooley when he left here. Gaines Robinson, for whom Cooley had worked considerable has gone on to identify the negro if it be the one wanted. At this writing (Saturday) nothing has been heard from Mr. Robinson.

UNION.

Miss Sarah Bannister has returned from Elliston.

Elder Sarvin, of Indiana, preached at Sardis last Tuesday.

Mrs. F. Dickey is in Louisville, the guest of her daughter, Mrs. Converse.

Miss Callie Taliaferro will not attend school this term, on account of impaired health.

Mrs. B. L. Corbin and daughter, Lillian, are absent, visiting relatives in Florence and Newport.

Mr. Orville Riley, a young Baptist minister, of Owen county, was the guest of H. W. Riley last week.

Mr. Fisher and wife now members of this community, and we will always welcome such genial people as they.

Miss Mary Wilkie leaves this week for Covington, where she will spend sometime with her sister, Mrs. Harris.

Miss Willa Whitaker, who has been the guest of Miss Mary Wilkie for the past week, returned to her home in Covington last Monday.

Miss Laura Norman writes that she reached her destination, Midway, S. C. in safety and is much pleased with what she has seen of the South.

Miss Annie Anderson recently lost between Mr. Bannister's residence and her home a small gold breastpin, in the form of an "L" with small charm and two gold monograms attached. If found, please leave at J. A. Huey's.

THE FASHIONS.

Facts Regarding the Latest Styles in Dress at Home and Abroad.

Some of the new cashmere gloves have the long wrists embroidered in hair stitch on the closed tops with silk of a pale shade.

Fancy bonnets are made of tinsel and novelty fabrics of various kinds over frames of wire and lace net.

New silk jerseys are beautifully embroidered with jet in various designs, and sometimes in patterns covering the whole garment.

The most stylish handkerchiefs are plain white, with narrow hems and tucks, or borders composed of squares formed of alternating thick and transparent blocks.

Among other delicate and novel bonnet trimmings are imitations of birds' wings and tails of crepe lisse embroidered in white silk applique on velvet, and also in delicate gilt thread on black lace.

Dresses made entirely of lace are a dainty novelty worn by those who can afford such expensive luxuries. Made over a black silk, they are worn for dress occasions in the daytime, and over silks of delicate colors for evening. Nothing can be more elegant. Black marquise lace, a very beautiful silk lace, with exquisite flowers and vines on a fine net ground, is used for this purpose, as well as the French and Chantilly laces.

Jersey waists of solid color are worn with a gay striped or plaited skirt and sash, by little girls.

The black armure grenadines are used as the principal part of a costume, with a Breton vest and plain lower skirt that has three cross stripes of pale blue with gold tea-brown or olive, with black armure stripes as well; or else the gayest scarlet stripes are alternated with dull green and gold, with black stripes at intervals.

The French poplin, or, as it is also called, faille francaise, resembles gros grain of light weight and fine reps, and is almost as light as the silk surahs which it promises to rival for summer dresses.

Checked materials are combined with plain ones in a very effective manner.

A stylish polonaise is open from the shoulders to the waist line, slantwise, over a plain plastron. At the waist it is fastened with a metal clasp or plain bow of velvet. Then it opens again over the skirt, falling into a shawl point on each side. At the back it forms a draped puff, also finished into a shawl point.

The new pinafore front, a revival of the Jewess tunic, is a style likely to find favor with economical women, both as a means of freshening an old dress and making the same dress do duty as two distinct toilettes. It is, as its name indicates, an apron, fitted to the figure and covering the whole front of the dress from the shoulders down; its effect is greatly improved by cutting slits in either side a little below the waist-line near the hips, and draping a plain sash through them, letting it form a fan-bow in front and full ends behind.

For very light dresses for summer evenings the nun's veilings have the bayadere stripes of white or silver or gilt, to be made up with plain white veiling.

The Algerienne stripes of many gay colors across the fabric from selvage to selvage are very effective in grenadines or nun's veilings for combination with plain goods.

For children's dresses, especially for kilt skirts and sash drapery, there are wool stuffs, heavier than veiling yet not as heavy as camel's hair, with the brightest cross stripes of blue with gold, red and blue, or brown with yellow and red.

Ecru canvass or etamine, in small meshes, makes quiet and tasteful dresses, with wool lace of the same shade and some ribbon bows for garniture. A silk false skirt and waist lining are necessary for such a dress.

Havana brown is a favorite color for the spring.

White with brown velvet is a new combination.

Embroideries are works of art, carried out in chenille, beads and gold thread and shaded like a painting.

White and black is a fashionable combination for evening.

Trains apparently distinct from the front breadth are worn, the front breadth being either of brocade or a beaded or embossed fabric, the back of some heavy stuff like velvet or satin.

Colored silk linings are placed in brocade wraps, and as they are visible in the wide sleeves add a pretty and becoming touch of bright color.

A very lovely mantle is of moss green brocade showing an ottoman satin ground, with raised velvet flowers in the same shade. A wide band of ostrich feather trimming outlines the edge, and the lining is of bright red silk.

Wide bands for covering the skirts of cloth suits, made of wide and narrow braid crocheted in elaborate patterns with heavy silk cord, are seen in sets comprising skirt and waist trimmings.

'HOME COMFORT RANGES'
30,000 In Use.

Who would be free must themselves "strike the first blow," and when a "woman says she will, she will." Henceforth the desertion of the cook need not be the signal for house hold wheels to stop, for with a "Home Comfort" Wrought Iron Range in the kitchen, the mistress can do the cooking without danger to health or temper.

Remember, the Home Comfort Ranges are the only Wrought Iron Ranges that have Malleable Iron Top Plates and Malleable Iron Fire Linings. And all other Wrought Iron Ranges you see advertised are Cast Iron Tops and Fire Linings.

LITTLE ✠ PARAGRAPHS
Expressing the Sentiments of our Customers.

I gladly add my testimonial to the perfectness in construction and its adaptability to the wants of the public. PETER JETT, Mt. Olivet, Ky.

We could scarcely over-estimate its advantages. The fact that a 20-pound roast of beef and a delicate cake can be baked successfully at the same time is sufficient evidence of its merits. To testify to this is a pleasure duly appreciated by Robt. OVERBEY, Ellisville.

Having purchased a Home Comfort Range of J. D. Gates, we take pleasure in recommending it to our friends of Bath county as the best thing of the kind we ever used. It heats up very quickly, with a small quantity of fuel, and does better baking and cooking than any cast iron range or stove we have ever used. J. VARNSDALE.

We have used it a sufficient length of time to know that we could get nothing better, E. KENTON, Mt. Olivet.

Having had long experience in the use of many kinds of stoves, but for quick work and economy of fuel it takes the lead. A. HILDRETH, Blue Licks.

It is the most excellent article I have ever purchased in its line, and it is most happily named Home Comfort.
WM. MCCLANAHAN, Ellisville.

I can safely say for perfect baking, cooking and economy of fuel it excels all others. JAS. HENRY, Nicholas Co.

I seldom recommend an article for others' use, but in this case will say I consider it superior to anything of the kind ever manufactured.
WM. HALL, Sardis.

It is a very satisfactory piece of house furniture. Strong, well made, and does its work with certainty and dispatch.
H. B. SAMPSON, Blue Lick.

No one can appreciate its great advantages without using it. Had we known its merits we would have bought one long ago; and discarded the old one.
J. DOOLY, Carlyle.

You can not say too much in parise of it. I have the best biscuit and the best meals in the world baked on it. I would not part with it for any reasonable amount of money.
W. N. SMITH, Nicholas County.

Dear Sirs: You can write anything you choose in recommending your beautiful and perfect operating Home Comfort Ranges, and sign our names.
J. W. RALLS, J. H. BOWEN,
JAS. DOOLEY, J. H. CAYWOOD,
WALTER POTTS, N. P. RALLS.

The "Home Comfort" Range is all right in every respect and I do not see how we could get along without it as it does better work and takes so much less fuel than our old cast iron stove.
J. A. MCCORD, Fleming County.

I indorse all that has, or can be said in favor of the "Home Comfort" Range.
S. C. STOCKDALE, Fleming Co., Ky.

The above statement in behalf of the "Home Comfort" Range suits me, and I claim enough can not be said in their favor. I am using one and could ask for nothing better of the kind.
J. E. MCCARTY, Fleming Co. Ky.

THE ABANDONED HORSE.

[Adapted from prose version in N. Y. Sun]

"Oh with the saddle and shoot him!" Ten miles from the camp he fell lame,
And the whip and the spur were both useless, and master's voice calling his name.
'Twas a cavalry scout just returning to camp from a rough ride of more
Than a hundred miles' wearisome journey, a party that numbered a score.

No further the horse could be driven, he must be abandoned, his lot,
To hinder the enemy's profit, was to be dispatched by a shot.
His master dismounted in silence, revolver drew tremblingly forth,
Put it back, loosed the bridle and saddle, and turned to the south, to the north.

"Poor Jim!" as the horse softly whinnied, relieved for a moment from pain,
And he patted the drooping head gently, and smoothed down the long, tangled mane.
"Did Jim! we have roughed it together, together braved sun stroke and cold;
We have feasted and fasted together, been comrades where cannons' booms rolled.

"If a cut from a saber would save you, I'd bow my bare face to the blow, I'd lose a leg, Jim, or my right arm, to save your life, gladly let go!"
He had taken the trappings off gently, and the horse brightened up in relief.
"Good-bye, Jim, old fellow! It's orders. I feel like a murdering thief!"

He dashed with his coat sleeve the moisture that was blinding his sight,
The troop were far off in the distance, and swiftly was gathering the night.
Once more he raised the revolver—"God, pardon me! It must be done."
A flash—a report—and his comrade he saw drop to earth like a stone.

He turned and fled camp ward in anguish. He could not look back to the spot
Where the one who had borne him so often lay dying from his dual shot.
The poor beast lay stunned a few moments, then raised his head tortured with pain.
What means it? Alone and unsaddled. He struggled his feet to regain.

And gazing about him, he wondered who is it has done him this harm—
Shook his head, from his nostrils all bleeding blew forth a wild note of alarm;
In the enemy's country, abandoned! Ah, now he remembers it all!
He was lame, and his rider dismounted, caressed him—What then? Did he fall?

Shot down by some hidden guerilla? With eyes flashing wildly with pain,
He seeks by the road for his master. Abandoned! The search was in vain.
But he knows this road well, for so often each bridge and each turn he has seen!
He will back to the camp ere death takes him, that long, darkened miles intervene.

He nerves for one last, freshened effort. "Halt!" calls out the sentry, "Who's there?"
At last! Jim stood still for a moment, then down the hill swiftly did bear;
And ere they could stop him, he entered once more within pale of the lines,
And was welcomed, when passing the boundry, with shots from a dozen carbines.

Dead now. The men gaze at him silent. "It seems like a murder," one says.
While his master kneels rev'rent beside him, the faithful head once more to raise.
"Too bad!" mutters one grim old sergeant. Then back to their posts they go.
And a distant cock heralds the morning, with misty veil fading and slow.

IN THE SNOW.

How Margaret's Cold Resolve Was Completely Thawed.

I was hanging clothes on the line. I detested it, and I was getting furiously angry. It was intensely cold, my fingers, bundled up in great white mittens, were like lumps of ice, my feet sympathized strongly. The wind blew and flapped the frozen clothes into my face, when my shawl was not flying round my head. I knew by former trials how blue my nose was, and how purple my cheeks. If I had been a man I should have said something very strong, and dashed away at the pins and the clothes in a manner that would have demolished both. But I was only a woman, I only thought the expressive phrases and fumbled carefully with my mittened icicles.

The porch door opened.

"Margaret! Margaret!"

I turned round on the slippery snow, and holding by the rope to steady myself, I screamed:

"What!"

"Come in, right away."

"But the clothes aren't half out," I cried, in return.

"Come in. Somebody wants to see you."

Aunt Margaret had hardly shut the door before I was on the step. I went into the kitchen, half dizzy with the cold and the heat of the room and the pain of my fingers. I didn't expect to find any company there, but the fire had got low in the sitting-room, and Aunt Margaret had invited them to the kitchen fire.

Close by the stove sat two people, a young lady and gentleman, but at that moment I saw only the lady—though I had not seen her before since she was grown, I knew her instantly—my cousin Charlotte Leigh, from Boston. My first sight of her gave me a confused idea of velvet and fur, and of the handsomest face I had ever seen, all mingled with an exasperating consciousness of the state of my own complexion and habiliments.

"Your Cousin Charlotte, Margaret," my aunt said.

Having managed to get one mitten off, I advanced and put my hand in hers.

"You will excuse the coolness of my greeting," I said, alluding rather more to my fingers than my manner, for she could not restrain a slight shudder as our hands met. "But I am not at present in my natural condition. I'm more than half frozen."

I took off my ungainly hood and shawl, while Charlotte laughed gayly, with a certain childish manner that quite enchanted me.

During the process of thawing, Charlotte watched me with some interest. In a moment she bent forward and took my hand, saying:

"Now that the purple is fading from your face, you begin to look like the Margaret I remember. Let me present my cousin, Reede Staniels."

If almost any other person had spoken like that, I should have been annoyed, but in her voice I was not. Reede Staniels bowed gracefully to me, and I looked at him for the first time.

He was a slender, haughty looking young man, but when he smiled or wished to please his face softened and glowed. I had heard Charlotte speak of Reede when we were children together, and a year or two ago she had written that he was in Europe. I had always had an idea that Charlotte would marry her Cousin Reede, though she had never said so, and her flirting proclivities were alarmingly developed: but Reede enjoyed the privilege of first flirter.

As I became warmer I talked faster, slightly annoyed all the time by the presence of the young man, who had risen and sauntered to the window. He suddenly turned and asked:

"Is this the village hotel opposite?"

Charlotte laughed

"Do you intend to engage a suite there?" she asked.

"That depends," he replied, assuming his indolent air.

"Is it a call or a visit?" I asked Charlotte; tell me the latter, and I shall be forever grateful."

"The latter, then," said Charlotte, with an enchanting smile.

"And your balls and operas—think of the sacrifice," I said.

"Farewell for a time," she cried, tossing her muff on the table.

Reede turned again from the window.

"Then I shall not escort you home to-morrow?"

"No; you will return alone and report at my father's house."

"Will return? You are imperative; you do not know but I have decided to stay."

"Stay here!" exclaimed Charlotte, who stood before the little mirror arranging her hair. "Tell it in Gath! Publish it in Askelon! The daughters of Boston will mourn, for Reede Staniels has taken flight."

"In that case," said Reede, with his hand on the door, "in that case it follows that the daughters of this village will rejoice."

He bowed to me with a rare, impudent grace, and went out.

Charlotte had seen the look and the bow, and glanced at me to see its effect. I could not help smiling as our eyes met.

"What do you think of him?" she asked.

"Very handsome and quite killing—in his own estimation."

"Oh, you'll like him; everybody does," she said.

"Then it will be wise in me to submit to his attractions gracefully, I responded. "Shall I hold out my hands for the fetters, Charlotte?"

"Not till you hold your hand for the ring," she replied, and I thought I detected a warning in her voice.

Somehow I resented that tone; I had no idea of being fascinated by my cousin's cousin, and I said with emphasis:

"Then you'll see me forever free."

"Amen to that," was her response.

Charlotte was inducted into our best chamber, which room, at her special request, I shared with her. I expected every day for a week that she would announce her intention of returning home, but she did not; and after a few days more I ceased to expect it.

Contrary to our expectations, Reede Staniels returned immediately to Boston. Charlotte said she thought a sojourn in the country too much for his temperament to endure. But Charlotte had not been a fortnight with us, when, one afternoon, a light, brilliant cutter suddenly whirled up at the gate, and Reede, looking up at our faces at the window, lifted his hat and bowed low.

"We'll have a splendid ride!" cried Charlotte.

"Doubtless," I said, settling back to my sewing.

"You look as if you were not going," said Charlotte, in a surprised tone.

Reede opened the door as she was speaking, coming in with two little boxes in his hand.

"You see I couldn't help coming back, Lottie. Your father says you may stay as long as you like. But you must hear the other side of the case—half a dozen exquisites are dying because of your absence, as many bouquets were doing the same thing in your parlors last night, wasting their sweetness under the hands of the housekeeper. But I mustn't tell you any more, or you'll be wanting to go back, which desire I should veto, for I've brought my turnout, as you see."

Charlotte stood with amused face listening to his talk. The glow over her face was one of real pleasure. He sat down as he ceased speaking, putting his two packages on the table and commencing to open them.

"You'll perceive I am more fortunate than the forsaken gentlemen in the city, for I can bring my offerings directly to their shrine."

He took from their warmly-lined hiding-places two little clusters of flowers. He laid one in Lottie's hand, then advanced to my side, saying, with more deference in his tone:

"Will Miss Ware accept these? Not for their rarity, but because it is winter-time."

Fragrant, warm-looking honey-suckles and deep blue violets dropped softly on my work.

I looked up into his face; he seemed to have been willing to meet my eyes. He saw my thanks there before I could speak them.

"I am glad that you like them," he said, and turned away, leaving me slightly annoyed that I had gratified him by giving him the glance he had so evidently wished for.

I had at our first meeting felt vexed at his thoroughly at home air, here in the house of strangers, but that feeling passed away and gave place to a little amused surprise that he could be so. His manner was somewhat boyish, but the decided, proud cast of his features when in repose was so opposite to that appearance, that it gave one the idea that his real character did not lie on the surface.

"I came particularly to take you two to ride," he said, after a moment's silence, during which we had been admiring our flowers, and he had been turning over the books on the table. "Will you go?"

For some reason I imagined that Charlotte would prefer to go alone with him, and I did not doubt that he would like that arrangement better. He had just come from her home, and they would have a thousand things to talk of, about which I should know nothing.

"Nothing would be pleasanter. Come, Margaret," said Charlotte, rising to go to her room.

"I really should like to go, but it is very inconvenient for me to go to-day," I said, determined now that I would not be teased into it.

Charlotte cast a deprecating glance at me and closed the door.

"It is impolite to urge you, I know, Miss Ware," said Reede, "but I wish you would go."

"My excuse is true," I said.

"Then some other day you must make amends," he said, stooping to inhale the perfume of the flowers I still held in my hand.

Charlotte had said truly when she had told me that no one could help liking Reede. There was something about him very attractive, for that reason I did not wish to like him. I never cared to like those to whom all paid tribute.

"Thank you, I certainly will," I replied to his last sentence.

I feared I might be considered affected in refusing to go now, but in truth I would much rather remain, and I was prone to do as inclination prompted.

Charlotte came down ready for her ride.

"It's no use urging her," she said, looking at me. My compliments to Mr. Marsden, if he comes."

"Who is Mr. Marsden?" asked Reede, with exaggerated interest, pausing with his hand on the door. "I must discover before I go."

"Oh, he calls here," replied Charlotte, with a glance at me.

"Oh!" with prolonged reflection, came from Reede's lips.

The inflection told me that he thought he had discovered why I staid at home, and I was provoked with myself that I was provoked. Still more irritated was I when Mr. Marsden, the lawyer, happened to call that very afternoon, and was diligently chatting with me when Reede and Lottie returned. They expatiated so much on the sleighing that Mr. Marsden invited me to try it with him the next day, and I graciously accepted his invitation, to the apparent amusement of Charlotte.

Reede had taken up his abode in the hotel opposite. He drove us on many rides, he took us to the country amusements, he sauntered in at all hours of the day and evening. A great deal of the time I was busy with some household duties, and many other times I left to Charlotte the pleasure of entertaining or being entertained by him.

A fortnight he had been with us. Charlotte began to ask me to go home with her, but I did not wish to go. Since my last term in a city school, I had felt that if I were not to live in town, I must not allow myself to be so attracted by its gayeties, its concerts, its paintings, its innumerable beauties.

At last, after many declarations, she asserted, if I would not return with her, she would go in a week. I trusted something would detain her.

It was a clear, moonlight night with cold, still air lying over snowy roads and fields. Sleigh after sleigh dashed merrily away on the road to the neighboring town, where one of the wealthy gentlemen was to give a party in honor of his entrance to his new house. A stamping of feet on the doorstep, and a moment later Reede entered with radiant face and eager eyes I was alone in the sitting-room.

"What! Are you not ready?" he exclaimed. "All the rest have gone. Where is Lottie?"

I felt unaccountably nervous.

"She has a severe cold and is in her room. She is very much disappointed that she can not go."

"Is her illness serious?" he asked.

"Oh, no, I think not," I said, and resumed the seat from which I had risen.

"It is late, now; why don't you put on your cloak?" he asked.

"But I thought I would not go, as Lottie could not be one of the party," I said.

"But I have thought of it all day. I insist upon your going; you must go."

He bent down with one hand on the arm of my chair, his impetuous spirit shining in his eyes and penetrating to my heart.

Why was I so interested in him? The tone in which he said: "I have thought of it all day," thrilled through me, his eyes melted my resolution not to go.

"Come."

He took my hand and raised me from my chair. I went and donned wraps and furs.

When we were fairly on our way, he said, looking down at me with that irresistible glance of his:

"And you were intending to disappoint me? But now I will take care of you to-night; I have you; you are in my power."

It was an instant before I could trust myself to answer words spoken in such a voice as that. I wondered if he had ever spoken like that to Charlotte—to any one. That thought gave me a reply in indifferent tones:

"Then be lenient, be generous to your prisoner——"

"Or she may repent having placed herself in my hands," he interrupted. "Were you not going to say that?"

"You have said that," I replied. "There is no need of my repeating it."

"But you will not repent, you will trust me to-night—Margaret?"

That name in such a manner was a caress. His face was absolutely luminous. I dared not look at it. He seemed yielding to some powerful impulse, now that for the first time he saw me unrestrained by another's presence.

A thought of Charlotte came coldly across me; then I remembered certain things she had said that had given me the idea that Reede Staniels was one of that detestable species, a male flirt. I recalled that suave distance of manner which I generally employed with him. It seemed to freeze him instantly. He became deferential and polite, and almost silent.

A light, filmy haze was spreading over the sky; it softened the moonlight and obscured the stars.

"Is this the turn, Mr. Staniels?" I asked, as he took the right of four corners.

"Yes, this leads to R—, doesn't it? That sleigh ahead is one of our party, I believe."

"Then we are right," I said. "I'm not familiar with this locality at all."

"And you must not be lost with me," he said in such icy tones that I repented my coldness; but it appeared the only safe way for me.

The swift going horse sped like the wind over the road; it was a lonely, winding way, over the hills and into valleys. The haze thickened over the sky, flakes of snow fell softly on my face, and flecked with white the furry robe round me. It was a deceitful storm, for it came gently at first, luring us on, for we thought it would not storm much.

We rode on, turning corners by guess now, for I became convinced that we had lost our way, and there were no houses where we could inquire. The snow came thicker, clogging the horse's feet and impeding his speed. We could not see anything before or around us but the silent fall of whiteness. At last the horse dropped into a slow, toilsome walk up a hill. The reins hung loose in Reede's hand.

"Truly, I did not mean to get lost," he said, in an apologetic tone.

"No, I had not thought you did," I replied.

He put his disengaged arm round me, drawing me closer, and stooping his face nearer mine.

"And truly, I am not sorry," he said. "Do not require me to feel sorrow for anything that gives me your presence without chance of interruption."

I laughed.

"You need not fear intrusion here, certainly," I said.

"Do not torment me!" he cried, with sudden and overpowering impetuosity. "I will not bear it. You have been repellant to me to a degree that would have cured a passion less strong than mine; but I ask now to know if I am very disagreeable to you. Margaret, be kind."

His hair swept over my cheek, his hot breath sighed across my lips. For my life I could not at that moment command my voice. And I firmly believed him to be engaged to my Cousin Charlotte. Was it possible he was playing with me? I asked myself.

"You do not reply," he said, in a low, passionate voice; "you are colder than this snow, but I love you, oh, I love you!"

Suddenly and powerfully he drew me to him, prisoning my lips with a fiery, penetrating kiss.

He released me and gathered the lines hurriedly in both hands. It was time he did so, for the horse had reached the top of the hill, and was plunging down in such a zigzag course as at any other time would have made me half afraid; but I felt willing to die—to die by the side of the man I loved. I feared terror and pain would come if Charlotte knew of this. I could see nothing but trouble for a lover like this.

The horse stopped short, so abruptly that I was almost thrown from the sleigh. Reede sprang out and went to the horse's head. I imagined something was wrong about the harness. Reede had hardly reached his head before the horse dashed aside, throwing out his front feet, and hitting Reede a blow which sent him prostrate. Though I could not see distinctly, I knew from the horse's appearance. The horse reared and danced. I held the reins, but he did not seem to feel the strength—it was all I had—with which I sawed at his mouth. A deadly, horrible feeling was at my heart. Reede did not rise. At last the horse stood still a moment. I dropped the lines and slid from the cutter, staggering through the snow till I reached the spot where Reede had fallen. I forgot that the horse might run away.

I brushed the thick falling snow from his face. He was stunned, but I did not know whether he was otherwise injured. My love rose and overcame all the barriers I had placed about it. If he would look into my eyes again, I would not refuse him what he sought there.

Finally consciousness returned. He tried to rise, and at last stood with trembling hand on my arm.

The horse stood quiet.

"Can you walk to him, or shall I bring him here?" I asked.

He tried to walk, but could not.

"I've hurt me here," he said, putting his hand to his side; then, impatiently; "I am helpless."

Fortunately my country life had taught me how to drive. Reede sat down powerless, suffering, I knew, more than he had told. I turned the horse, not because I knew the way, but because I hoped the horse might know it. A long ride of silence. I turned to Reede who sat quietly, his handkerchief to his face. I bent nearer.

"What is it?" I said in sudden fear.

I touched his handkerchief. In the dim light I could see dark spots upon it.

"Only blood," he said.

"My God!" I cried in agony. "You bleed; how much are you hurt?"

"To death, I hope," he said, in a low, weak tone.

My suffering seemed more than I could bear.

"Live, oh live!" I murmured close to his cheek, "or my love will kill me."

Even in that gloom I saw the lightning-like flash of his eyes; I felt the sweet smile that curved his lips.

"God has not forgotten me," he said, his forehead bending to my shoulder. "In my despair a few minutes ago, I almost thought so. I must live now."

He did live, but it was after much suffering and danger. The hurt he received was internal, and long in healing. The long distance we were obliged to ride before reaching assistance, made the wound worse. The horse, true to his instinct, carried us to the hotel where Reede staid.

"How was the party?" asked Charlotte, when I entered her room.

"I didn't go," I said.

She sat up in bed, rubbing her eyes to look at me. She saw something on my face, for she exclaimed:

"What have you been doing, then?"

I sat down on the side of the bed.

"Were you ever engaged to your Cousin Reede?" I asked.

A look of pain or something akin to it passed over her face.

"A sort of tacit engagement," she said, slowly, "a kind of agreement our fathers made, for us to ratify if we would."

"And you have never done it?" I inquired.

"No," after a pause, "he loves you."

"It is very strange he should," I said, beginning to wonder that he did—"I, a country girl, when he knew so many polished belles of the city."

"Strange!" cried Charlotte. Have you never known that you are magnificent? No, you have not known it. Therein lies the charm."

"Are you sorry he loves me?"

"A little."

She said afterward, a year after, when she was dressing me for my marriage:

"Had I known a year ago that you had grown to such a face and form, I should not have brought Reede Staniels into the country with me."

"Why?" I said.

"Because I wanted him to love me."

"And now?" with a smile.

"Now I would rather be loved by Marston Hunt, you know. So put forever at rest those conscientious compunctions that revealed themselves that night you so suddenly asked if I were engaged to my Cousin Reede. But 'tis the truth, he did used to flirt. Don't be annoyed, he never looked at anybody as he does at you. You will be happy—he is good, he is noble."—Catherine Earnshaw, in Ballou's Magazine.

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

All About Dresses, Gloves, Fans, Feathers and Other Novelties.

A lavish use is made of ribbons in the trimming of dressy costumes for indoors. Entire fronts of skirts are sometimes covered with loops and ends, while long loops and ends float in shoulder knots. Vests are in keeping with the front breadths just mentioned; jabots, neck bands, collarettes or rosettes are set on corsages, while on skirts we see the same styles of trimming appear in support of drapery, or set anywhere that may harmonize.

Black gloves are worn with dressy toilets of black and white, but are not so tasteful as white gloves which are seen to some extent, yet not nearly as much so as tan shades from light to medium. The fancy chenille dotting (which in goods for dressing wear is very great) extends to gloves and we observe specimens where chenille dottings cover the upper portion of the glove—that is, the long expanse of kid now thought necessary when the sleeve is short. Apart from a few novelties, however, the long mosquetaire of smooth kid is most worn.

Stylish fans are of oblong shape and composed chiefly of the softest down with a rim of stiff feathers or ostrich tips on the outer edge. Artificial flowers are imbedded in the down with peculiar effect. One of pale green shows an ivy handle; others have handles of mother-of-pearl or tortoise shell.

Ostrich tips are in great favor as an ornament for the hair, and not unfrequently combine with a knot of ribbon on the shoulder. Minnie Hauk, in her recent success as Manon, wore three pale pink tips in powdered hair, and they were extremely becoming. Her dress was a pale pink underskirt, covered with white lace in front and trimmed with festoons and pink ribbon rosettes below. Overdress of pale blue and black brocade, with low corsage laced in front. Shoulder knot of pink ribbon; black velvet bows on the skirt; a pink rosebud on one side of the corsage; a prolonged spray of pink roses as a finish to the overdress on one side of the skirt. Altogether an extremely fanciful yet very pretty dress—notable, too, as the one worn when she was recalled twenty times at Prague.

Skirts of delicate or bright colored satin are brought out to be worn under dressy indoor costumes. Some of black satin being shown for rich, black toilets. Great attention, indeed, is paid this winter to colored skirtings, and we have them of many grades; not a few, furnished with bustle, pad, steels and tapes. Less costly skirts are of farmers' satin, ladies' cloth, flannel, or chiefly felt, for which no substitute has been found. Charmingly light skirts are quilted with eiderdown half way up, but these again are far from cheap.

Quite small girls, say from five years upward, are wearing dresses made of course suit goods, such as were thought suitable only for adults. White dresses are not now seen on children over the age of infancy, and pale cashmere is only worn on some state occasion. Heavy veiling or flannel are most used for the little ones, but cashmere is always a stand-by and suitable in anything but black.

The fleece-lined Jersey has poised very successfully, because the wearing of this comfortable garment in winter is a real desideratum, while on the same order we note the introduction and immediate popularity of corsets, having sides which "give" with the wearer's movements. Rubber elastics are not used, so that they do not readily wear.

No greater contrast is possible than the sight afforded by elderly New York women and their attire. Haggard faces look out of keeping with costly earrings, glittering jewels in their hair and furbelows on toilets. Cosmetics are freely used but do not accomplish the desired task, and one debates inwardly whether puffiness be not better. We have both styles, both equally prevalent, and one recalls as a pleasant dream the well-rounded physiognomy of some matron who is not ashamed of being matronly and who leaves bedizzening to her grand-daughters.—*N. SURGERY WITH COCAINE.

Dr. J. Leonard Corning Gives the Result of His Experiments.

At a recent meeting of the Medical Society of the County of New York at the Academy of Medicine, Dr. J. Leonard Corning read a paper entitled the "Prolonged Anæsthetitation by Incarceration of the Anæsthetic Fluid in the Field of Operation." The paper had special reference to the use of the hydrochlorate of cocaine in operations of all kinds, and it was shown that expert specialists had only reached the point where the possibilities of cocaine were dawning upon them. Cocaine was yet in the state of experimentation, and every day something new was being discovered in regard to its wonderful properties. Dr. Corning related a number of experiments that he had made with cocaine for the purpose of limiting its application to the parts to be operated upon, effects from its use, and to prevent any evil constitutional effects from its use, and to reduce the strength of the solution.

A prolonged anæsthetic condition, he said, could be secured by suspending the local circulation while the cocaine was in the part to be operated upon. One of the objections to the use of cocaine was that its effects soon passed off, and the patient would feel pain when the instruments were used. The brain was liable to be affected if a comparatively large amount of cocaine was injected into the body while the circulation remained free. If the circulation was checked the percentage of cocaine could be reduced and the danger of using a large quantity of the solution would be reduced to a minimum. The solution usually employed in operations was from two to live per cent. in strength, but with this new method tumors, cancers, abscesses have been removed, dislocations reduced, ingrowing nails removed, and successful plastic and other delicate operations performed with a solution containing from one-third to one per cent. of cocaine. In this new method of using cocaine a map of the superficial veins was first made and then bandages are applied to compress the parts near the point of operation so as to check the circulation of blood. Then a superficial hypodermic injection is given quickly, of from two to five minims. After the superficial tissue is anæsthetized, long needles are inserted and the cocaine injected into the deep-seated tissue. The bandages prevent the liquid from being absorbed and passing into the blood, and localizes it at the point that is to be operated on. Even with the weak solution that is used it is only a rare case in which supplementary injections are necessary. The doctor explained the manner in which he applied the bandages, to various parts of the body, and showed a number of rubber rings and instruments that he found useful in the practical application of his method. He said that when cocaine was injected into the body there was a zone of anæsthetized flesh from one-half to one inch in diameter.

Dr. Lewis, the President, in the discussion that followed the reading of the paper, said that he had used Dr. Corning's method in the removal of a large epithelial cancer from the shoulder of a woman. The integument was unusually thick and the operation lasted forty minutes. The patient did not complain of pain but once, and that was when the knife penetrated a part that had not been injected with cocaine. He pronounced the operation painless and a success.

Dr. Roberts said that one of the most important objections to the use of cocaine is the fear of the patient. Pain and consciousness have heretofore been synonymous terms. It can now be demonstrated to patients that operations where cocaine is used are absolutely painless, even though the patient sees what is going on. If cocaine is not given skillfully its usefulness is impaired. He said that he had found Dr. Corning's method of great service, and that he had used it in many operations with success. The most important result attained is the reduction of the quantity of the drug.—Chicago Herald.

THE AMERICAN GIRL.

Her Little Peculiarities and Characteristics Wittily Described.

Stylish to the backbone. Independent as independent can be, but very pure. Is devoted to pleasure, dress, spending money, shows her moral nature nude—just as it is, so as to deceive nobody. Flirt all winter with this or that one, and dismisses him in the spring, when she instantly catches another. Goes out alone. Travels alone. When the fancy strikes her she travels with a gentleman friend, or walks anywhere with him; puts boundless confidence in him; conjugal intimacy seems to exist between them. She lets him tell what he feels—talk of love from morning to night; but she never gives him permission to kiss so much as her hand. He may say anything—he shall do nothing. She is restless; she gives heart and soul to amusement before she marries. After marriage she is a mother annually; is alone all day, hears all night nothing except discussions about patent machinery, unexplosive petroleum and chemical manure. She then will let her daughters enjoy the liberty she used without grave abuse. As nothing serious happened to her, why should Fanny, Mary, Jennie, be less strong and adroit than their mother? She originates French fashions. Parisian women detest her. Provincial women despise her. Men of all countries adore her, but will not marry her, unless she has an immense fortune. Her hair is vermillion, paler than golden hair; her black eyes are bold and frank; she has a patent shape which 'tis forbidden to counterfeit; spreads herself in a carriage as if she were in a hammock—the natural and thoughtless posture of her passion for luxurious ease. When she walks she moves briskly, and throws every glance right and left; gives many of her thoughts to herself, and few of them to anybody else. She is a wild plant put in a hot-house.—Figaro.

REMARKABLE WALKING CANE.

The Artistic Workmanship of a Half Breed Indian Sixty-six Years Old.

Mr. Isaac Estill, Esq., of Winchester, Tenn., was in the city, and had with him quite a curiosity in the way of a walking cane, as well as a curious specimen of rural ingenuity and workmanship. The stick was a hickory sprout taken from Lookout Mountain in 1830, fifty-six years ago, by one Foster, a half breed Indian from the hills of Georgia. Foster was evidently gifted by nature with a talent for carving in wood, as is evidenced by the work referred to. The staff is mounted with the head and beak of an eagle, resting upon the top of what is said to be a remarkably fine likeness of himself carved by his own hands. Below these heads are a series of Masonic emblems, a rattlesnake, rose leaf and twig, lion, wild duck, turtle, a trout, another snake, sheaf of wheat, a bundle of sticks, a panther, an elephant, a garfish, an owl, a rabbit, a squirrel and a pipe. All of these figures were carved in the hard wood, and notwithstanding the fact that the work was executed more than a half century ago, it is well preserved, and will be kept by its owner and handed down to his posterity as a relic well worth the keeping.—Nashville American.

"I will not. Who are you that you can order me around this way?" "I am Frank James." "Why, how do you do, Mr. James? Please wrap up these boots. Five dollars, you say? Here's your money. Good day."—Arkansaw Traveler.

—A writer in the Journal of Mental Science gives the results of a series of experiments to determine the comparative action of coffee and alcohol. He finds that while alcohol increases the production of heat, it really lowers the bodily temperature by virtue of exaggerated radiation. The caffeine in coffee, however, preserves the heat, and thus, if given in conjunction, with alcohol, restrains the tendency of the latter to lower the temperature.

A TERRIBLE CONFESSION.

A Physician Presents Some Startling Facts.

The following story—which is attracting wide attention from the press—is so remarkable that we can not excuse ourselves if we do not lay it before our readers entire:

To the Editor of the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat.

SIR:—On the first day of June, 1881, I lay at my residence in this city surrounded by my friends and waiting for death. Heaven only knows the agony I then endured, for words can never describe it. And yet, if a few years previous any one had told me that I was to be brought so low, and by so terrible a disease, I should have scoffed at the idea. I had always been uncommonly strong and healthy, and weighed over 200 pounds, and hardly knew, in my own experience, what pain or sickness were. Very many people who will read this statement realize at times they are unusually tired and can not account for it. They feel dull pains in various parts of the body and do not understand why. Or they are exceedingly hungry one day and entirely without appetite the next. This was just the way I felt when the relentless malady which had fastened itself upon me first began. Still I thought nothing of it; that probably I had taken a cold which would soon pass away. Shortly after this I noticed a heavy, and at times neuralgic, pain in one side of my head, but as it would come one day and be gone the next, I paid little attention to it. Then my stomach would get out of order and my food often failed to digest, causing at times great inconvenience. Yet, even as a physician, I did not think that these things meant anything serious. I fancied I was suffering from malaria and doctored myself accordingly. But I got no better. I next noticed a peculiar color and odor about the fluids I was passing—also that there were large quantities one day and very little the next, and that a persistent froth and scum appeared upon the surface, and a sediment settled. And yet I did not realize my danger, for, indeed, seeing these symptoms continually, I finally became accustomed to them, and my suspicion was wholly disarmed by the fact that I had no pain in the affected organs or in their vicinity. Why I should have been so blind I can not understand!

I consulted the best medical skill in the land. I visited all the famed mineral springs in America and traveled from Maine to California. Still I grew worse. No two physicians agreed as to my malady. One said I was troubled with spinal irritation; another, dyspepsia; another, heart disease; another, general debility; another, congestion of the base of the brain; and so on through a long list of common diseases, the symptoms of many of which I really had. In this way several years passed, during which time I was steadily growing worse. My condition had really become pitiable. The slight symptoms I at first experienced were developed into terrible and constant disorders. My weight had been reduced from 207 to 130 pounds. My life was a burden to myself and friends. I could retain no food on my stomach, and lived wholly by injections. I was a living mass of pain. My pulse was uncontrollable. In my agony I frequently fell to the floor and clutched the carpet, and prayed for death! Morphine had little or no effect in deadening the pain. For six days and nights I had the death-premonitory hiccoughs constantly! My water was filled with tube-casts and albumen. I was struggling with Bright's Disease of the kidneys in its last stages!

While suffering thus I received a call from my pastor, the Rev. Dr. Foote, at that time rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, of this city. I felt that it was our last interview, but in the course of conversation Dr. Foote detailed to me the many remarkable cures of cases like my own which had come under his observation. As a practicing physician and a graduate of the schools, I derided the idea of any medicine outside the regular channels being in the least beneficial. So solicitous, however, was Dr. Foote, that I finally promised I would waive my prejudice. I began its use on the first day of June, 1881, and took it according to directions. At first it sickened me; but this I thought was a good sign for one in my debilitated condition. I continued to take it; the sickening sensation departed and I was finally able to retain food upon my stomach. In a few days I noticed a decided change for the better, as also did my wife and friends. My hiccoughs ceased and I experienced less pain than formerly. I was so rejoiced at this improved condition that, upon my dying bed, I vowed in the presence of my family and friends, should I recover, I would both publicly and privately make known this remedy for the good of humanity, wherever and whenever I had an opportunity, and this letter is in fulfillment of that vow. My improvement was constant from that time, and in less than three months I had gained 26 pounds in flesh, became entirely free from pain and I believe I owe my life and present condition wholly to Warner's safe cure, the remedy which I used.

Since my recovery I have thoroughly reinvestigated the subject of kidney difficulties and Bright's disease, and the truths developed are astounding. I therefore state, deliberately, and as a physician, that I believe more than one-half the deaths which occur in America are caused by Bright's disease of the kidneys. This may sound like a rash statement, but I am prepared to verify it fully. Bright's disease has no distinctive features of its own, (indeed, it often develops without any pain whatever in the kidneys or their vicinity), but has the symptoms of nearly every other common complaint. Hundreds of people die daily, whose burials are authorized by a physician's certificate as occurring from "Heart Disease," "Apoplexy," "Paralysis," "Spinal Complaint," "Rheumatism," "Pneumonia" and the other common complaints, when in reality it is from Bright's disease of the kidneys. Few physicians, and fewer people, realize the extent of this disease or its dangerous and insidious nature. It steals into the system like a thief, manifests its presence if at all by the commonest symptoms and fastens itself in the constitution before the victim is aware of it. It is nearly as hereditary as consumption, quite as common and fully as fatal. Entire families inheriting it from their ancestors, have died and yet none of the number knew or realized the mysterious power which was removing them. Instead of common symptoms it often shows none whatever, but brings death suddenly, from convulsions, apoplexy or heart disease.

As one who has suffered, and knows by bitter experience what he says, I implore every one who reads these words not to neglect the slightest symptoms of kidney difficulty. No one can afford to hazard such chances.

I make the foregoing statements based upon facts which I can substantiate to the letter. The welfare of those who may possibly be sufferers such as I was is an ample inducement for me to take the step I have, and if I can successfully warn others from the dangerous path in which I once walked, I am willing to endure all the professional and personal consequences.

Alfonso's Unhappy Dog.

A Madrid correspondent writes: "One of the deepest mourners of any since Alfonso's death has been Ugly, his Skye terrier. The poor animal howled to be allowed to go with him to El Pardo, but was not allowed. She got there notwithstanding, but how nobody knows. When the king was dead she was found lying under his bed in a state of the deepest depression. Ever since that loss she has been altogether off her feed, and to prevent her from dying from inanition milk and soup have been forced down her throat."—Paris Morning News.

FATAL COLLISION.

The Target Was Turned and Two Trains Collided.

Three Killed, and Others Mangled—Two Corpses in Transit Mutilated and Government Money Scattered About.

TIFFIN, O., Jan. 29.—This morning at 12:45 as the east-bound passenger train on the Baltimore & Ohio was pulling into Chicago Junction it collided with a west-bound freight train. The target was turned, blocking the freight train from the side track. The conductor of the freight, Charles Palmer, and a brakeman named Thomas Creela were in the caboose. They failed to flag the passenger train and had no signals out. The passenger train was running at the rate of fifty-five miles per hour, or faster. It carried two coaches and three sleepers, all of which were badly damaged. In the baggage-car was a coffin containing two corpses, a mother and her babe, which the husband was taking from Dakota to Baltimore. The rough box was broken open, the corpses turned on their faces and horribly mutilated. Two passengers were in the smoking-car playing cards. Neither of them can tell what was the trump. The baggage car and express-coach were shattered into tooth-picks. The express-car was carrying a considerable amount of Uncle Sam's silver, which was scattered far and near. The sleepers were full of passengers, and fortunately for them no one was seriously injured. The engine was buried in the bank fifteen feet away from the track. It is a complete wreck. When the trains struck the tender, baggage-car and two coaches were thrown about fifty feet ahead of the engine. Fifteen box-cars were piled up by the track, and there was no piece of the caboose left that a man could not carry off. Thousands from the surrounding country visited the wreck. The names of the killed and wounded are as follows: J. R. Briston, conductor of the passenger, Piedmont, W. Va., aged thirty-two, unmarried, resides with his mother, who is a widow. He died at 10:10 a. m., unconscious. George Vandalier, fireman on the passenger, Lafayette, Ind., aged twenty-seven, married. His wife was to meet him at Garrett, Ind. He was found dead beside his engine. Charles Palmer, conductor of the freight, died at 7 a. m.; married. His home is in Garrett, Ind. Compound fracture of the right thigh. An unknown lady was scalded, and her right limb fractured. The accident happened one and a half miles from Chicago Junction. The wreck is still burning. The wounded were removed to Tiffin. Miss Belle Moore, of Deshler, who was engaged to be married to Engineer Briston, arrived here to-night and viewed the corpse. The remains were taken to his home at Garrett by his brother, who arrived half an hour before his death.

SAVED HIS FLOCK.

A Cool Headed Minister Averts a Horrible Catastrophy.

LASALLE, ILL., Jan. 29.—Six hundred people gathered in the new hall in the rear of the Methodist Episcopal Church last night to celebrate Robert Burns' birthday. The hall is on the second floor and supported from the cross beam above by a bolted iron rod. During prayer the floor began to sink and a total collapse of the building seemed imminent. The Rev. Jas. White, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church perceiving the danger, began to sing. The immense congregation paused, and the intervals of inaction saved countless lives, for the next instant the sinking sensation ceased. In accordance with the advice then given the crowd dispersed in small details. An investigation showed that the thread of the rod had stripped off inside the bolt because of the weight below. If a rush and the consequent disturbance of the floor had followed the settling, the rod must have been wrenched from the bolt, and the building wrecked. There being a large coal fire on the floor, and only one exit by a spiral stair, the ensuing horrors can be easily imagined. A subscription list is being circulated and generously signed to reward the quick witted pastor.

Another Call for Bonds.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—The Secretary of the Treasury has issued a call for redemption of bonds of the 3 per cent. loan of 1882. The principal and accrued interest will be paid at the Treasury of the United States, in Washington, on the first of March, 1886, and the interest will cease on that day. Following is a description of the bonds: 3 per cent. bonds issued under the act of Congress approved July 12, 1882, and numbered as follows: $50—Original number 298. $100—Original number 2149 to original number 2165, both inclusive. $500—Original number 1068 to original number 1075, both inclusive. $10,000—Original number 9189 to original number 9786, both inclusive. $10,000—Original number 16,449 to original number 17,400, both inclusive. Total, $10,000,000. The bonds described above are either bonds of the "original issue," which have but one serial number at each end, or "substituted bonds," which may be distinguished by the double set of numbers, which are marked plainly "original numbers" and "substitute numbers." All of the bonds of this loan will be called by the original numbers only.

Facts for Millers and Farmers.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Jan. 29.—Advanced sheets from a Biennial Miller's Directory shows a net decrease of 6,812 flouring mills in the United States and Canada, as compared with 1884. The number of mills at present in operation is 13,267. The gross capacity shows a slight increase over 1884. Every State and Territory shows a decrease in number of mills, except Dakota, Nevada and the District of Columbia. In Wisconsin there is a loss of 120 mills, the present number being 657. The most marked loss is in Pennsylvania, Ohio, New York, Illinois, Missouri, Texas, and the Province of Ontario.

Gladstone Called.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—The Queen has accepted the resignations of Lord Salisbury and his Cabinet, and has summoned Mr. Gladstone for a consultation. Lord Salisbury returned to London this evening from Osborne. He was closely guarded by detectives. The dead-lock between Mr. Gladstone and Lord Hartington continues, the latter holding that the repression of disorders in Ireland is primarily necessary. Previous to Mr. Gladstone being summoned it was reported that the Queen hesitated between the ex-Premier and Lord Hartington, and has ordered the Ministers not to surrender their seats of office until Monday.

Smothered Under a Hay Stack.

BENTON, NEB., Jan. 29.—The body of a man was found one mile east of here yesterday near a hay stack and covered with hay. An old carpet sack and a large supply of fishing tackle was found with him. He had evidently been smothered by the hay stack falling on him, and had been dead a long time. Nothing to identify the remains was found.

Mules Cremated by a Mine Explosion.

PITTSBURGH, Jan 29.—An explosion at the Banksville coal mine of Long & Co., this morning set fire to the pit and cremated nine mules. A number of miners were at work at the time, but all escaped without injury. The mine is still burning.

Female Physician Killed by Cars.

CARBONDALE, PA., Jan. 29.—A carriage containing Mrs. Wesley Stanton, her daughter, aged fifteen years, and Mrs. Julia A. Hunter, a practicing physician of this place, was struck at the Erie Railway crossing, by the 11:30 passenger train from Scranton to-day. The occupants were thrown out and Mrs. Hunter instantly killed. Mrs. Stanton was dangerously hurt.

A Week's Failures.

NEW YORK, Jan. 29.—The business failures occurring throughout the country in the last seven days number for the United States 252, and for Canada 37, or a total of 289, as compared with 329 last week, and 289 the week previous to the last.

THE ANGEL OF DEATH

Again Invades the Home of Secretary Bayard—The Mother Succumbs to the Shock of Her Daughter's Sudden Call.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—Mrs. Bayard died this morning. Deep sympathy is felt for the Secretary and his family. Unlike the death of her daughter, this one has been expected, for the mother began to fail at once when the daughter died. The Secretary is thoroughly prostrated, and some of his friends say they would not be surprised if he should feel like giving up his duties here at no distant day. The immediate cause of Mrs. Bayard's death was congestion of the brain, brought on by the shock of her daughter's sudden death. For the first week following that event she stood the strain and excitement quite well, but a week ago last Friday she was compelled to take to bed, and gradually grew worse from day to day. On Thursday congestion of the brain made its appearance. She was unconscious for twenty-four hours before her death. Although for years Mrs. Bayard had been a confirmed invalid, she had for the last six months been in better health than for many years. Last summer she was very ill at her home in Wilmington, Del., with complication of the liver and stomach, and her recovery at that time was doubtful. At the solicitation of her daughter, Miss Kate, she put herself under the care of Dr. F. A. Gardner, of this city, and under his treatment she had improved so much as to be able to go in society this winter, although still an invalid, was in comparatively good health when her daughter died. She was about fifty-one years of age.

A FINANCIAL EXHIBIT.

Bank Notes and Legal-Tender Notes Outstanding at Specified Dates.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—The following is a statement of the Comptroller of the Currency showing the amounts of national bank notes and of legal-tender notes outstanding at the dates of the passage of the acts of June 20, 1874, January 14, 1875 and May 31, 1878, together with the amounts outstanding at date and the increase or decrease. Amount outstanding June 20, 1874, $349,894,182, Jan. 14, 1875, $351,861,450; May 31, 1878, $322,555,965 amount outstanding at date (circulation of national gold banks not included, $362,409), $317,655,023. Increase during the last month, $581,768. Decrease since Feb. 1, 1885, $8,769,891. Legal-tender notes: Amount outstanding June 20, 1874, $382,000,000; Jan. 14, 1875, $382,000,000. Amount retired under act of Jan 14, 1875, to May 31, 1878, $35,318,984. Amount outstanding on and since May 31, 1878, $346,681,016. Amount on deposit with the U. S. Treasurer to redeem notes of insolvent and liquidating banks and bankers retiring circulation under act of June 20, 1874, $46,589,431. Increase in deposit during the last month, $3,983,019; increase in deposit since February 1, 1885, $4,292,412.

AN INDIANA MURDER

About Which There Was Strong Talk of a Sunday Night Lynching.

EVANSVILLE, IND., Jan. 31.—Late Saturday evening Nicholas Hudson shot and killed Stephen Ellis in the suburbs of Rockport, Spencer County, Ind. The two men, with several others, left town after supper for their homes in the country. When a short distance out a quarrel arose, resulting in the shooting of Ellis through the body by Hudson. Another man named Cissna was suspected, but when arrested he said Hudson was the murderer. The latter was pursued by the officers and arrested eight miles from Rockport while in bed asleep having a revolver and brass knucks with him. He confessed and was taken to Rockport and put into jail towards morning. He had been drinking heavily. Hudson is about twenty-two years old and very tough in his habits. Ellis was a quiet, inoffensive citizen, about twenty-four years old and married. There is great excitement up there over the murder and strong talk of lynching Hudson. Precautions have been taken against lynching.

Convict Cowboy's Christmas Present.

JOLIET, ILL., Jan. 31.—Bert Coatman, a cowboy convict serving a sentence of three years at Joliet Prison from Wyoming, was released yesterday afternoon, having served his term. When Coatman was brought into the clerk's office to be discharged the clerk handed him a package of bills amounting to nearly $1,100, and informed him that $1,000 of the money had been sent to him as a Christmas present by one of the cattle kings of Wyoming. The ex-convict was nearly paralyzed with astonishment at his good fortune, and left the prison doors with a light heart.

The Susquehanna Booming.

PORT DEPOSIT, MD., Jan. 31.—The Susquehanna has continued to rise all day, and is now higher than at any time this winter. All the wharves and lumber yards are submerged under several feet of water, and citizens have all day been moving live stock and valuables to a place of safety. The ice gorge remains unbroken, but the ice has weakened materially, and watches have been stationed all along the river to give the alarm should any change occur. Reports from up the river are such as to cause grave apprehension.

An Interesting Situation.

TROY, N. Y., Jan. 31.—An interesting feature of the struggle between the Knights of Labor and the Fuller & Warren Company was developed yesterday afternoon. There are seven freight cars on a side track loaded with Fuller & Warren stoves consigned to various branch houses of the concern. The Delaware and Hudson locomotive engineers, who are members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Knights of Labor, have refused to haul the cars because the goods contained in them are boycotted. Trouble is expected to grow out of the affair. If an engineer is discharged all the others, it is said, will strike.

Jail Delivery Frustrated.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Jan. 31.—At Chester this afternoon, eleven colored prisoners attempted a jail delivery by attacking Sheriff Hood. With the assistance of another prisoner, Hood succeeded in getting his assailants back, shooting one of them, Allen Goode, in the head. Goode will die. The prisoners finding the attempt abortive, rushed back to their cells.

Quick to Answer the Call.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—Over $5,000,000 three per cent. bonds embraced in the 132d call for $10,000,000 which will mature February 1, have already been received at the Treasury Department for redemption.

Unparalleled Damage by Sleet.

CONCORD, N. H., Jan. 31.—The storm which subsided last night had raged for forty-eight hours, and caused great damage throughout the State. Reports received from some of the largest fruit-growers in the State say that their orchards are ruined.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., Jan. 31.—The damage done by the sleet-storm is unparalleled. The injury to garden and fruit trees is beyond calculation. Similar reports are received from other towns. In Nottingham one man lost 1,000 peach trees.

A Mock Turtle Child.

AMERICUS, GA., Jan. 31.—In Webster County lives a man, who has a daughter, aged twenty-three, strangely deformed. Her head and body are well developed, but her arms and legs are short like a turtle's floppers. She is twenty-six inches in height when standing. Large sums have been offered the father by showmen, but all have been declined.

Captain and Mate Lost Overboard.

LEWES, DEL., Jan. 31.—The brig Robert Moore, thirty-nine days from Demerara, has arrived here. When nineteen days out and while scudding before a gale, Captain George Staff and First Mate John Madison, both of New York, were swept overboard by a heavy sea. Second Mate Sanderson brought the vessel to the breakwater.

A NEW INVENTION.

Telegraphing From a Moving Train to a Roadside Station.

Sending Messages Through the Air—The Current Leaping to Wires and From Them Again.

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—The system of transmitting and receiving telegraph messages from trains in motion was successfully demonstrated by the Railroad Telegraph and Telephone Company at Clifton, Staten Island, to-day. Inside the car at a small table a telegraph operator sat sending and receiving messages to and from the outside world while the train was in motion. The operator differed from others in having telephone sounding-plates over his ears, held in place by a rubber band passing over his head. In front of the operator on the table was an ordinary Morse key, by which he sent the message to an operator at Clifton, who received them through telephone sounding-plates fastened on his ears. Mr. Edison, who was present, explained that in the Clifton office there was a condenser made of layers of tin-foil separated by air, but that at the car a condenser was formed by the thirty Baltimore and Ohio wires stretched along the track, by the tin roofs of the cars, which were all connected by copper wires and by the air between the wires and the tin roofs. Under the table of the operator in the car was a local battery. The current used may be conceived as passing first from the battery in the Clifton Station and leaving through the condenser to the telegraph wires, then passing along those wires without interrupting ordinary messages until it gets opposite the car, when it jumps across to the tin roofs and passes down through a wire to an electro-magnet on the operator's table. Thence it returns through the axles and wheels of the car, and through the ground to the Clifton Station. The Morse current, without the aid of the electro-magnet, can not pass through the condenser so as to make a continuous musical note. It passes through, but its waves are so much slower that no distinct sounds are formed. Many messages were sent to and from the moving car. This invention, it is asserted, will be especially useful to train dispatchers, who may by its use communicate with a train at any point on the road.

IS SUICIDE AN ACCIDENT?

A Law Suit of Much Interest to Life Insurance Men.

CHICAGO, Feb. 1.—A novel case is in hearing before Judge Dyer, in this city, the decision in which will attract considerable attention in insurance circles, as it involves a question of whether or not suicide is an accident. The 23d of May, 1884, Edward M. Crandall took out an accident insurance policy for $10,000 for a year in the Accident Insurance Company of North America. July 7 following he committed suicide. Due notice was given to the company, but it refused to pay on the ground that suicide was not accidental within the meaning of the policy. Suit has now been brought by Mrs. Laurette M. Crandall, wife of the deceased, to recover on the policy. She testified that her husband was of a cheerful disposition, but shortly before his death he became morose and nervous, suffered from sleeplessness and showed signs of insanity. He had considerable financial trouble and had lost most of his property. The trial will be resumed to-morrow.

WHOLESALE FORGERY.

Two Hoosiers Play a Slick Game by Means of an Assessor's Books.

WARSAW, IND., Feb. 1.—W. W. Mikles, of Bourbon, Ind., and J. V. Card, of this place, have been arrested on a charge of forging several thousand dollars worth of notes against prominent farmers in this county, which had been left in the hands of an attorney for collection. Mikles furnished bail, but Card is in jail. It was discovered in the county offices that the signatures of thirty-six prominent taxpayers had been clipped from the Assessor's list and stolen. It is supposed this was done by the forgers to get the signatures. Card belongs to one of the best families in this county, and his arrest has caused a sensation.

Convict Attends His Child's Funeral.

OTTAWA, ILL., Feb. 1.—Some comment was caused yesterday by the action of Governor Oglesby, in allowing Peter A. Weast, who is serving a three-year term in the penitentiary for manslaughter, to attend the funeral of his little daughter, which took place at Streator. Weast was accompanied by a guard, and was kept in jail until Sunday morning, when he was taken in a sleigh to Streator. Over 1,000 people attended the funeral. Weast will be taken to Joliet this morning. This is the first instance in the history of the penitentiary where a convict has been allowed to attend a funeral.

Killed at the Crossing.

CENTRALIA, ILL., Feb. 1.—James Hurd, an old man sixty years of age, was instantly killed at Sandoval this afternoon. He attempted to cross the Ohio and Mississippi track with a team, when the west-bound express struck the wagon, throwing out Hurd and cutting him up in a horrible manner. Both horses were killed also. A similar accident occurred here this afternoon in the same manner, but the teamster miraculously escaped with his life.

Robbed of Their Savings for Years.

HUNTINGDON, PA., Feb. 1.—During the temporary absence from home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Westbrook to-day the residence was robbed of $4,500 in gold and many valuable papers. The old couple had been saving the money for fifteen years and had secreted it in an old trunk.

Horses With Hydrophobia.

OMAHA, NEB., Feb. 1.—At Kearney, on Saturday, Dr. Ramaciotti, acting for the State Veterinarian, shot six horses out of a consignment of twenty from Chicago. It was claimed that the horses were afflicted with hydrophobia.

The Bursting of a Balance-Wheel.

LAPEER, MICH., Feb. 1.—To-day at noon the balance-wheel in a saw-mill, six miles from here, burst. Joseph Reamer was fatally injured about the head, and Albert McNail had his foot cut off.

XLIXTH CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—SENATE.—A number of bills were introduced, including one by Mr. Sherman to discontinue the coinage of a standard dollar, to provide for the monthly purchase of bullion and the issue of coin certificates thereon. Resolutions for the retirement of U. S. District and Circuit Judges and the forfeiture of unearned land grants were offered by Mr. Ingalls. The bill to divide the Sioux Reservation in Dakota was considered until the expiration of the morning hour, when the bill for the admission of Dakota as a State was taken up and debated. The death of Congressman Ellwood, of Illinois, was announced by a message from the House and after eulogies by Senators Cullom and Logan, the Senate at 4:15 p. m. adjourned out of respect to the memory of the deceased.

HOUSE.—The morning hour was occupied by resolutions and reports, one of which, from the Committee on Military Affairs, authorized the President to restore officers to the army in certain cases. It went to the public calendar. Eulogies were delivered on the late Representative Reuben Ellwood, of Illinois, and at 2:30 p. m. the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—SENATE.—In the Senate the credentials of Hon. J. Z. George, U. S. Senator from Mississippi, were read and filed. A bill was passed removing the political disabilities of Geo. S. Storrs, of Texas. Mr. Call denounced the charge of a certain claim agent interested in a claim made by the State of Florida, which proposed to deduct $62,000 out of a cash award of $92,000. Mr. Platt submitted a resolution to consider executive nominations in open session. Referred to the Committee on Rules. A number of resolutions were introduced. The bill to divide the Sioux Reservation in Dakota was discussed until the expiration of the morning hour, when the Dakota State bill was taken up. Mr. Vest spoke at length in opposition. Mr. Logan took the floor, but gave way to Mr. Dawes for a motion to adjourn until Monday. The Senate adjourned at 5:05 p. m.

HOUSE.—In the House a few private bills were reported. At 12:20 the House went into committee of the whole on the private calendar. The Fourth of July claims was the first bill. It was laid aside for favorable report, and a cotton claim next taken up. This was amended to prevent payment if the claimant was disloyal. The committee then reported the bill, referring the claim to the Court of Claims for adjudication. The two bills were passed, and at 4:30 p. m. a recess was taken until 7:30 for the regular Friday consideration of pension bills. The House, at its evening session, passed about fifty pension bills, and adjourned until Monday.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—SENATE.—A number of executive reports and communications were received and referred. The renewal of the Hot Springs leases went over. Mr. Call submitted a resolution directing the Committee on Military Affairs to report a bill providing that Union soldiers shall be exempt from civil service examination before appointment. It went over for the present. The bill to divide part of the Sioux reservation in Dakota was passed. The Electoral count bill was debated by Messrs. Hoar, Sherman and Ingalls. At 4:25 the Senate went into executive session, and at 5:25 p. m. adjourned.

HOUSE.—Resolution was adopted by unanimous consent empowering the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice to investigate any expenditure made by the Government relative to the rights of the Pan Electric and Bell Telephone Companies. An attempt to have articles read on the telephone scandal was ruled out of order. Mr. Brady, of Virginia, was refused permission to reply to Wise. Under the call of States, a number of bills and resolutions were offered and referred, after which an attempt to adjourn was voted down by the opposition, and Mr. Matson, of Indiana, took the floor. He moved to suspend the rules and put upon its passage the bill increasing soldiers' widows' pensions. After considerable debate Mr. Matson's motion was agreed to—yeas 193, nays 66. The resolution as passed limits the increase to widows who were married to soldiers at the time the injuries for which pension was granted occurred. It also shuts out the pending Brown amendment repealing the limit to arrears of pensions. At 5 o'clock the House adjourned.

VACCINE VIRUS.

How it is Propagated in Chester County, Pennsylvania.

[Philadelphia News.]

The visiting scientists were first conducted to the operating-room, where upon a padded table, from whose corners rose four posts, a heifer was thrown and her legs fastened to the posts. Her belly, all the inside and the back part of the thighs were shaved to the skin. The thin, white and clean epidermis of the Alderney calf presented an inviting surface, and Dr. Zuill's assistant, enveloped in a spotless apron, stood over the beast and diligently scraped off the upper cuticle from sixty-five spots on the skin. Dr. Zuill, as fast as the surface was abraded, rubbed on it the points of ivory which had been coated with the lymph from a scab of cowpox. This was the process of inoculating. The calf will be sick, but in eight days the scabs will have formed and be ready to remove for the dipping of fresh "points" into the lymph which will exude from the sore. The points, which are made from elephant tusk ivory, are simply thin strips pointed in the shape of a surgeon's thumb lancet. It requires from 800 to 3,000 of them to take up all the healthy virus which is produced from the inoculation of a calf, 2,500 being the average. Having been "charged," as the dipping in the virus is called, they are allowed to dry thoroughly, each one is carefully wrapped in tin foil, and placed in a hermetically sealed bottle. The great enemy of the point is heat and moisture combined. The sealing in the bottle guards against the latter, and the storage in a refrigerator, kept at about the freezing point of temperature, against the former. Combined, these influences will set up fermentation in the virus, which destroys its potency.

HONORING HIS MEMORY.

Eulogies Pronounced on the Late Vice-President Hendricks by Senators Voorhees, Hampton, Ransom, Spooner, Sherman, Evarts and Others.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Yesterday being the day appointed for the Senate addresses in memoriam of the late Vice-President Hendricks, the galleries of the Senate began to fill at an early hour. When, therefore, at noon, President pro tempore Sherman called the Senate to order, all the seats in the galleries were occupied, the larger proportion of the occupants being ladies. After the transaction of some unimportant business, Mr. Voorhees called up his resolution expressive of the Senate's deep sense of the public loss in the death of the late Vice-President Hendricks. The resolution having been read, Mr. Voorhees addressed the Senate.

In strong and graphic English, Mr. Voorhees reviewed the life and public services of Mr. Hendricks. In dealing with Mr. Hendricks' political views, Mr. Voorhees said it had been, and especially late in his life, charged as a reproach against him that he was a partisan. If, by that, the speaker said, was meant that he sincerely believed in the principles and purposes of the party to which he belonged, and sought, by all honorable methods, what he believed to be the public good by placing its measures and its men in control of the Government, then the accusation was true, and the term of reproach became a just tribute to an honest man. It was the partisan of deep, honest convictions dealing justly with opposing views, who, in all ages of the world, in every field of human progress had led the way.

In conclusion, Mr. Voorhees said: "As long as American history treasures up pure lives and faithful public services—as long as public and private virtue, stainless and without blemish, is revered, so long will the name of Thomas A. Hendricks be cherished by the American people as an example worthy of emulation. Monuments of brass and marble will lift their heads to Heaven in honor of his name, but a monument more precious to his memory and more valuable to the world has already been grounded in the hearts of the people whom he served so long, faithfully and with such signal ability. In the busy harvest of death of the year 1885 there was gathered into eternity no nobler spirit, no higher intelligence, no fairer soul.

Mr. Hampton (S. C.) said that when one of the great actors in the political arena fell, all animosities were buried with him. This impression was indelibly fixed on the speaker's mind by the extraordinary spectacle beheld at the funeral of General Grant, when among those who bore the body of the great Captain of the Union armies to the grave were Confederate soldiers, who, a few brief years ago, were his mortal enemies. The same generous feeling marked the obsequies of the dead Vice-President. If political and personal animosities ceased at the grave, should we not be tolerant and charitable in judgments on our contemporaries, he asked, even though they were our political opponents?

Mr. Ransom (N. C.) said that Mr. Hendricks had always proved himself a lover of the whole country and its liberties. The Southern States, in this emergency, felt deep, sincere and overflowing sympathy and sorrow at the bereavement of the Northern sisters. "Thank Almighty God," said Mr. Ransom, "that the everlasting covenant of our Union is established in the hearts of all our people, and that, through the clouds of this sorrow, we can behold the peace that is never to be broken."

Mr. Spooner (Wis.), in eulogizing the dead Vice-President, delivered his maiden speech, and was listened to with great interest. He spoke at length of Mr. Hendricks' strong partisanship and said that to him no political partisanship, honorable in its methods, was offensive. In party he saw only the instrumentality through which, and through which alone, might be wrought out the triumph of his principles. In active, faithful, honorable party service he saw, therefore, devotion to the principle, not mere lust for office. The imputation that he was a spoilsman, he said, rather angered than grieved Mr. Hendricks, for he knew it came from those who had either been of a hostile camp, or, if his own, had went to linger in the shade and slumber while he and the "boys," as he sometimes loved to call the party workers, had borne the heat and dust and burden of the battle. Spoilsman or not, he went down to his grave loved, trusted and mourned by his party.

Addresses were also delivered by Senators Sherman (O.), Evarts (N. Y.), Vest (Mo.) and Harrison (Ind.). The resolutions in memoriam were agreed to, and the Senate adjourned out of respect to the memory of the dead.

SERIOUS FLOODS.

Immense Fields of Wheat and Orchards of Fruit Ruined by Recent Overflows in the San Joaquin Valley.

STOCKTON, CAL., Jan. 27.—The San Joaquin river has been gradually rising for the past week. Sunday a portion of the city proper, comprising one-fifth of its area, was covered with water. Little damage, however, ensued. The business portion of the city was not affected in any way. Later the Mass tract, comprising about three thousand acres of wheat, was flooded by the giving way of a flood-gate. The damage is estimated at about $75,000. The water about Roberts' island, which is protected by levees, rose nine feet above the level of the land. The pressure was too great for the levees to withstand, and a break occurred through which the water rushed and soon converted thirteen thousand acres of wheat and orchards into a miniature lake. The damage here is estimated at $350,000. Roberts' island is divided into three divisions with cross-levees. The break occurred in the middle division. Fears are now entertained that the cross-levees which divide the upper and lower portion from the middle section of the island may give way. If the middle section is not soon repaired there is little hope of stopping the break for a week, though most strenuous efforts are being made to do so.

Torn to Death in a Wheel.

MOUNT CARMEL, PA., Jan. 27.—A shocking accident happened at Congressman Scott's mines at Green Ridge yesterday morning. A young man named McCanlis was walking on a narrow ledge inspecting machinery, when he fell headlong upon two revolving cog-wheels. Before he could recover himself his left arm was torn from his body. He then attempted to reach a platform, but made the horrible discovery that his clothing had been caught by a slowly revolving shaft, and that he was being slowly drawn to death. He struggled and screamed, and in a few minutes his body, in fragments, was sent whirling around a screen.

Proceedings of the Legislature.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 25.—It was bill day in the Senate and House to-day, and but little of general interest was done. The following is the most important bill offered: Be it enacted, That every company, corporation or association, now existing, or hereafter organized, and doing business in this State, shall be required to make a full payment in good and lawful coin to its employes engaged in manual or mechanical labor, for such work and labor done and performed by such employes for said company, corporation or association, at least once in every calendar month in the year, providing there is no written contract to the contrary. If any company, corporation or association shall neglect to make said payment, as provided for in the first section of this act, any employe may demand the same of said company, corporation or association, or any agent of said company, corporation or association upon whom a summons might be served in a suit for wages, and if said company, corporation or association shall neglect to pay the same for thirty days thereafter, said company, corporation or association shall be liable to pay interest at the rate of one dollar per day for each succeeding day in addition to said wages to be collected by said employe in a suit, together with reasonable attorney's fees in said suit or said wages withheld; provided that said interest shall in no instance exceed twice the amount due and withheld. Mr. Thompson introduced the following bill of importance to insurance men: Whenever any person shall wish to obtain insurance on any houses or buildings of any kind, he shall file with said company or its agent, his affidavit stating the cash value of said houses or buildings, and affidavit of two responsible persons stating the same fact. It shall be the duty of said company or its agent, if the insurance is taken on said house or building, to give the insured a copy of said affidavits. The amount stated in the affidavits shall be conclusive evidence of the cash value of said houses and buildings at the date of the policy. The insurance company taking the risk shall pay the amount of the insurance named in the policy within sixty days after the pay of loss, and on failure to do so shall pay interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum from the day of loss on the sum named in the policy.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 26.—SENATE.—The subject of Sunday base ball playing was reconsidered and recommitted to the Committee on Religion and Morals. Three bills regarding the city of Newport were introduced by Mr. Berry. A joint resolution to investigate lawlessness in Rowan County was adopted.

HOUSE.—A joint resolution favoring Federal aid to education was discussed and referred to the Committee on Education. The bill making seduction a felony was passed.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 26.—The Senate and House devoted the day to discussing a bill extending the time for the investigation of ex-Warden South, of the State prison. The result, while not final, was interpreted as favorable to South.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 27.—SENATE.—The Senate devoted the day to considering the action of the Prison Commissioners in removing Warden South nearly two years ago. The matter summed up in a word is that South wins and takes charge of the prison again at noon to-morrow.

HOUSE.—In the house the biggest bill offered was one enacting that any individual, company or corporation, now or hereafter acquiring, controlling or operating any telephone in operation in the State shall be allowed to charge, collect or receive as rental for the use of such telephone a sum not exceeding three dollars per month where one telephone only is rented by one individual, company or corporation, the rental per month for each telephone so rented shall not exceed $2.50 per month. Where any two cities or villages are connected by wire, operated or owned by any individual, company or corporation, the price for the use of any telephone for the purpose of conversation between such cities or villages shall not exceed fifteen cents for the first five minutes, and for each additional five minutes no sum exceeding five cents shall be charged, collected or received. Any person convicted of any violation of the above rates shall be fined in any sum not exceeding twenty-five dollars, to be recovered before any court of competent jurisdiction by proceedings in the name of the Commonwealth. Mr. Neal offered a bill which provides that no court of this Commonwealth shall hereafter make any allowance against the State to any pro tem. Commonwealth attorney in any instance where the service of such attorney has been less than one entire day, and that no such allowance shall exceed seven dollars per day. The bill further provides that a pro tem. attorney for the Commonwealth shall be entitled to one-half of the fees and commission allowed by law to the regular attorney in all judgments rendered while the pro tem. attorney is serving. Mr. Thorne presented a bill for the purpose of providing a uniform system of text-books and course of study in primary and elementary departments in the common schools and to prescribe the periods at which such transfers may be made. Mr. Thorne says that poor people are frequently put to unnecessary expense by changes in books and the children also retarded in their studies. It provides that the present text-books and course of study now prescribed by the State Board of Education shall be used for four years from the first Monday in September, 1886. No change shall be made oftener than once every four years.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 28.—SENATE.—Met at 10:30 o'clock and began the discussion of Senator Dixon's high license bill, which had been set for consideration to-day. Senator Berry moved an amendment, providing that all counties in the State in which local option is now in force shall make a county levy sufficient to pay into the State Treasury an amount equal to $5 per head of its voting population. Several other amendments were offered, and the Senate got into something of a wrangle over the matter. Finally Senator Hays moved to postpone further consideration of the bill until next Monday morning at 11 o'clock. This was lost, but another motion to postpone until noon on Wednesday was adopted.

HOUSE.—The House wasted an hour or two over the South question, and then took up a bill granting the right to testify to defendants in criminal cases. This was recommitted to the Committee on Criminal Laws. A bill came up to instill a modicum of intelligence into the jury box, but it was recommitted to the same committee and the day's work was ended.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 29.—SENATE.—Bills passed. Providing that the Commonwealth shall not be liable for the cost of transcribing and indexing records, but allowing the County Levy Courts to take such steps as they see proper. Regulating legal trials and actions in Campbell County—dividing the county into two districts, and providing that actions shall be brought in that district where the majority of the defendants reside. House bill for the increase of punishment of the crime of incest. Mr. Hills offered a resolution to release the State Prison lessees from their contract, based upon a request from them filed some days ago. The resolution lies over one day.

HOUSE.—A resolution was offered in the interest of the colored people in reference to the discrimination against them in relation to the selection of jurors, for better educational facilities, and various other complaints of the unequalities and injustices in the laws of the Commonwealth to the colored citizens. Referred to the proper committees. Several unimportant local bills were passed. Also an act to amend an act granting the consent of the State of Kentucky to the acquisition by the United States of a certain lands along the rivers of the State, by authorizing the United States Government to deposit in court the damages to be paid to the owners of condemned land. An act to amend Chapter 56 of General Statutes, providing that no articles of incorporation shall be so recommended until they shall have first been filed in the Clerk's office of the County Court of the county where the principal place of business is.

FROM ONE WHO KNOWS.

Views of an Ex-Governor of South Carolina on the Southern Question.

In the current number of the New Englander, Mr. Daniel H. Chamberlain—of whom, as Republican Governor of South Carolina, the country once heard a great deal—breaks a long silence to discuss the present and prospective aspects of the Southern question. We are bound to say that his remarks, as a whole, are among the best yet made on a very fruitful subject; and coming from such eminent Republican authority, are especially deserving the thoughtful consideration of all honest members of that party. It will be remembered that Senator Sherman while unintentionally helping to elect a Democratic Governor in New York last fall—recommended, as an infallible panacea for Southern ills, the reduction of the basis of representation in those Southern States where fewer Republican votes are cast than the party managers think ought to be. Chamberlain devotes more attention to this characteristic proposition than its impudence merits; declares that the alleged remedy would not, even if it could be tried, reach the disease, and that the latter must be left to cure itself. He says—and let us not forget who it is that says it—that

> The evil in question is plainly the result of the want of intelligence, experience and good judgment on the part of the class who are deprived of the right to vote, and of the race prejudice and political ambition of the class which inflicts the wrong, intensified and made reckless, in respect to the right to vote, by the insupportable corruption and maladministration of most of the Southern State governments from 1868 to 1876.

In other words, if in any Southern State colored citizens are deprived of any of their political rights, it is mainly, if not entirely, the fault of the Republican party. First, in conferring citizenship upon a class not even now possessed of sufficient "intelligence, experience and good judgment" for the proper recognition and fulfillment of its obligations; and second, by the establishment and maintenance of "the insupportable corruption and maladministration of most of the Southern State governments from 1868 to 1876."

This is the whole Southern business in a nutshell. The freedmen—as President Lincoln so well knew—were not prepared for citizenship, and should have been allowed to wait until some degree of preparation had been attained. But in spite of their unfitness, the ballot was thrust into their hands by an unscrupulous Republican policy; and then, in order to consummate that policy, they were used to fasten upon the Southern neck the meanest and dirtiest of despotisms. The results of which Republicans complain are, says Chamberlain, inevitable "whenever in any community those who hold nearly all its property, intelligence and experience in self-government are set against those who are for the most part without property, education or experience of public affairs." We may add that if Massachusetts or Maine had suffered for eight months "the insupportable corruption and maladministration" which South Carolina and Louisiana endured for eight years, they would have risen in righteous wrath and driven every negro and carpet-bagger into the sea. The wonder is, not that the Southern people, under such intense provocation, did some things they ought not to have done, but they were not utterly reckless in their resistance to the ineffable iniquity. The greatest wonder is that, in less than ten years after the provocation was removed by the destruction of Republican rule in the South, the two races are working together for a common prosperity in peace and harmony; that there is so little real trouble between them that during the last Presidential campaign Republican office-holders and traveling newspaper correspondents could not find a single "Southern outrage" worth reporting.

Chamberlain urges his political associates to "abandon all efforts to prolong, through party proclamations and appeals, a controversy which has resulted so disastrously to those in whose interests it has been carried on," and to leave whatever difficulties yet remain in the Southern situation to be overcome by the National forces now at work. That is, let the South manage its own affairs in its own way, unvexed by Northern interference or instruction. It is most devotedly to be wished that Sherman, Logan and their co-laborers in the making of sectional mischief, may follow this sensible and patriotic advice; but if they do, what will become of the bloody shirt?—and without the bloody shirt what would become of "the grand old party?"—St. Louis Republican.

RASCALS CRY OUT.

The Abuse Hurled at Commissioner Sparks Not Coming from Honest Homesteaders.

The outcry that has lately been made against Commissioner Sparks, of the Land Office, would naturally lead the public to believe that Mr. Sparks is an odious tyrant, whose order suspending the issuing of patents until the claims to the lands in question could be examined was a blow at the poor but honest settler seeking a humble home on the prairies of the great West. There has been clamor enough over the matter to deafen ears of brass. A little investigation only is necessary to show that the clamor is not made by bona-fide settlers, who are fulfilling the requirements of the Homestead law. The man who has settled on his homestead—and is improving it knows he has nothing to fear, even if he is compelled to wait a little for his patent until the rascality of somebody else is exposed.

In point of fact, the howl is raised by land speculators and cattle kings, who want the earth, and want it for nothing. They have fenced in millions of acres to which they have no legal title, but they hope to obtain a legal title by the perjury of cowboys and other irresponsible agents, who will swear to a lie for a very small consideration. The order of Commissioner Sparks blocks this rascally game, as an investigation is sure to reveal the perjury. Hence the outcry.

The extent to which the false entry of lands under the Homestead act has been carried may be inferred from the report of Special Agent Webster Eaton, in regard to a portion of the Duluth and St. Cloud land districts. He states that four thousand and three hundred final homestead entries have been in a district in which he finds less than one hundred actual settlers of all kinds, who are making or trying to make a living by farming. It is a shame that this wholesale robbery of the public lands has been allowed to exist until nearly all the lands available for settlement have been gobbled up. But because wrong has been done in the past is no reason why it should be allowed to continue. What lands are left should be reserved for actual settlers and the large bodies now held fraudulently should be restored to the public domain. Commissioner Sparks will have the countenance and support of every honest man in the country in his effort to withstand the rapacity of the land grabbers.—Philadelphia Times.

THE DECIDING ACT.

The Law of the Land Does Not Oblige the President to Give His Reasons for Removals.

It is not generally known that originally the requirement of confirmation of the executive appointments of the President by the Senate did not, in practice, exist, whatever may have been the theory held by Congress. It is true that originally confirmation by the Senate was applied, but only in the cases of quite a small number of the principal officers. In the meantime, however, the Senate has been constantly extending its claims to the principle of confirmation, until they now include a considerable portion of the whole executive offices of the Government, some one hundred thousand in number.

Now, in view of this enormous stride toward the assumption of purely executive functions on the part of the Senate, nothing can be clearer or more certain than that the President is compelled to make his appointments with an eye to the favor of the Senate rather than to the welfare of the public service. And when to the evil of the deprivation of the Executive of a power which naturally and scientifically appertains to his branch of the Government are added the political jobbery and mutual trading which have in the past influenced that body, and which the Civil-Service act was designed to reform, the evils and the tendency to political debauchment by the present Senatorial practice can readily be perceived.

There was one period, however, in the history of the country when this domination of the Senate in appointments passed into desuetude and, indeed, into a state of almost abject abeyance. This was during the civil war. The necessities of the then situation restored the President to his natural and scientific place in the Government, and compelled the Senate to abdicate its virtually usurped and absolute executive powers and to accept obediently the nominations of the Executive. At that time, in fact, both houses of Congress attempted to solve a problem which no Legislature, from that of the long parliament of Cromwell to the revolutionary assembly of France, had ever successfully coped with, and most signally and abjectly failed therein.

The war once ended, however, the Senate, through the unpopularity of President Johnson and the instrumentality of the Tenure-of-Office bill, was again enabled to seize the power which had been wrested from its grasp by means of President Lincoln's overmastering astuteness and the favoring circumstances which environed him.

Just now a contention has arisen between the President and the Senate. The Senate claims, under the Tenure-of-Office act, that the President is bound to submit to it his reasons for removal of officers. This act authorizes the President, "in his discretion," to suspend any officer during the recess of the Senate. But, at the same time, it is by no means in any portion of it mandatory on the President to state his reasons for removal. Consequently, if the President should refuse to give those reasons, technically this refusal, it would naturally follow, gives the Senate no just cause for refusing confirmation.

In the meantime the public will watch the outcome of this contention between the Executive and the Senate with no little interest.—Chicago News.

MERELY COMMON-SENSE.

Putting Men in Responsible Places Who Sympathize with the Administration's Policy.

Much ado is being made over the suggestion that the President will hereafter distribute the patronage among those who indorse his policy, and ignore the skeptics and opponents. This proposition, which is the merest creature of conjecture, is being as gravely canvassed as though the President had formally proclaimed it, and is made the basis of a most bewildering array of criticism. The President is taken to task with reproachful acrimony. He is pictured as an overbearing Cæsar, riding down the honest convictions of men, and compelling adhesion where it would not be freely yielded.

Of course this is the most arrant nonsense. In the first place the President has made no such declaration of purpose, nor is he likely to. There is nothing in the situation to call for the definition of rules in that respect. The President is responsible to the country for the honesty and competency of his appointees—nothing more. He is responsible to his party for their Democracy. But in all other respects he has absolute discretion. It is not necessary that he should prescribe limits within which he will distribute preferments since the right of distribution rests with him. The people made him President because they have confidence in his wisdom and patriotism. They hold him to no account except for the general result of his Administration, and the reputation of the Democracy, which is corollary.

There are certain places involving executive functions and possessing discretionary powers in which it is not only the President's privilege, but his duty, to put men who are in accord with his views. He has made a frank declaration of those views, and they have met with the cordial approval of the country. There is no secret as to the ends which he deems important to the Nation's welfare or as to the means by which he proposes to promote them. Why, then, since he is the head, charged with the formulation of a policy and held responsible for its successful execution, should he not call to his councils and choose for his coadjutors men who sympathize in his convictions and aspirations? Mr. Cleveland is no faint-hearted weakling. He is not President for the glory and the salary. He represents a great party; he is the trustee of a colossal undertaking. He is earnest, with comprehensive plans and virile methods, and he wants about him those who share his ideas and partake of his characteristics. Nothing could be more silly in itself or more disastrous in its effects than a compromise with such imperative obligations.

The people are taking no share in these querulous complaints. They have appraised the President's policy and are proud of it. They would have him omit nothing calculated to establish it upon an enduring basis. He has been commissioned to accomplish a great work; they wish him godspeed from the bottom of their anxious hearts.—N. Y. Star.

THE colored people met last night in the hall of the House of Representative for the purpose of considering the enactment of a law to further advance the race. They were entertained by Mr. Simmons, of Louisville, who in an impressive speech, urged a relief for the benefit of his people. The purpose is to present a certain petition before the General Assembly for the advancement of the colored folks in this State, and a bill to that effect will be introduced at an early day.—Capital.

THE BLIZZARD IN THE SOUTH.

While the range of temperature in the recent terrible blizzard, which enwrapped the continent, was never so low except in the far South as two years ago, the storm and wind accompaniments rendered it probably the most destructive to life of all on record In the far South the extreme of cold was the greatest ever known, and probably more fatal to vegetable life than any similar visitation, and in the Western States and Territories the high velocity of wind and heavy snowfalls at temperatures 30 to 40 degrees below zero formed a combination not often if ever equaled. The losses of human life were comparatively large and the human suffering frightfully severe in many sections, especially the more thinly settled. The losses of live stock from the Southwest up, are estimated for different districts from ten per cent, upward, in some few instances as high as ninety per cent. The latter is probably an exaggeration, except perhaps in instances of traveling colonies, or new settlements not fortified against the violence of the elements peculiar to the ranch regions. It would seem from experiences like this, and which in approximate forms are of annual recurrence, that those who voluntarily abandon the milder and more genial latitudes in persuit of sudden wealth in the Western and Northwestern States and Territories assume greater risks, if men in ordinary circumstances, and submit to greater sacrifices than the delusive prize could be worth, even if they should reach it before being frozen or disabled.—Ex.

PUNISHING CRIME.

The House of Representatives at Frankfort last Tuesday discussed bills which have an important relation to the prevalence of crime in Kentucky.

According to the existing law a grand jury is composed of sixteen men, and it takes only twelve of the sixteen to return an indictment. In order, therefore, to prevent an indictment by the grand jury room, the man charged with the crime must secure five votes in his behalf.

The bill amending this law passed the House by a vote of 53 to 20. The amendment reduces the number of members of the grand jury to fourteen, but it still requires twelve affirmative votes to secure an indictment. Under the old law five men were required to defeat an indictment, under the new, three men can accomplish this work.

This change still further strengthens the power of the criminal class, and makes it more difficult to enforce the law. What we need is greater vigor and sternness, greater zeal, greater desires to protect the lives and property of our citizens. Instead of meeting this requirement, instead of upholding the hands of the officers of the law, this amendment increases the difficulties which embarrass them, and will embolden the violators of the law.

The same committee which thus strengthened the case of criminals reported adversely a bill which provides that in felony cases the accused shall have only ten peremptory challenges and the Commonwealth the same number. It is difficult to imagine the reasons for such a report. The change is needed in order to secure fair trials. Each man charged with crime is entitled to a fair and speedy trial. He can object for cause to every man summoned for jury service; in addition he is now allowed twenty peremptory challenges. The State is allowed five. When her challenges are exhausted the accused has still the right to reject fifteen competent jury-men, There is no reason in this. The reasons against it are manifest. It makes it possible to secure a jury whose verdict carries the weight, or which is competent to reach an intelligent verdict. It gives an overwhelming advantage to the accused at the very beginning of the trial, and to it is due much of the contempt into which jury trials have fallen. This report is set for discussion and we trust that the subject will receive that thorough consideration to which it is entitled. The hands of the State are tied, and in order to see that crime is punished, the State's Attorney must have a part in the selection of the jury. The peremptory challenges should be equal.

There is no disposition anywhere to undue severity in the execution of the law. No one would urge the abolition of any provision which protects one innocently accused from unjust punishment, but there is pressing need, especially here in Kentucky, for changes in our criminal laws, which will make it possible to punish murder or assault without appealing to the spirit of a mob. We should read anew these laws in the light of the burning Court-house at Cincinnati.—C.-J.

THE TAX ON LEAF TOBACCO DEALERS.

There is a law of the United States which requires every dealer in leaf tobacco—the country buyer or dealer, the commission merchant who receives from the country dealer or the planter, the person who buys on the markets for his own account or on commission, and the manufacturer—to keep two books, in each of which he shall enter all the tobacco handled by him. and what disposition is made of it.

The country dealer must enter in each of these books every crop of tobacco bought from the planter, the name of the person from whom it was purchased, and the number of pounds in each crop purchased. This much is entered on one page of each book. Then on the opposite page he must enter every pound sold to any one, or if he prizes it in hogsheads and ships it to any one of the markets for sale, must enter each hogshead separately, with the gross and net weight, and the name and place of business of the commission merchant to whom it is consigned.

The commission merchant who receives the tobacco from the country dealer or planter must enter on one page of each of his books each hogshead or package, the gross and net weight, and the name and residence of the person from whom it was received; then on the opposite page he must enter separately each hogshead sold, the gross and net weight, and the name and residence of the person to whom it is sold.

The purchaser, who buys for his own account, or as a broker on commission on the interior markets, must enter separately, on one page of each book, each hogshead purchased the gross and net weight, and from whom bought. On the opposite page he must enter, separately, each hogshead shipped or sold, the gross and net weight, and the name and residence of the person to whom shipped or sold. If the buyer on the interior markets ships to a commission merchant at the seaboard markets for resale, the seaboard merchant must take the same entries, and so with the manufacturer.

Thus it will be seen that this law imposes an almost interminable labor in connection with every hogshead of tobacco prized by the planter of the country dealer.

Now, we submit to our worthy law makers at Washington that this is an imposition and an outrage upon every one that handles tobacco, whether planter, dealer or commission merchant, and is a burden that is composed upon no other product of the soil in this broad land—a discrimination against tobacco as compared with other agricultural products, and that, too, when the Government receives a greater revenue from this than any other staple,

The law requires that two books shall be kept, and identically the same entries shall be made in each book—one book to be retained by the dealer or commission merchant and the other to be turned over on the first day of January in each year to the revenue collector of the district.

Now, if we admit that there is necessity, in connection with the working of the revenue department, for the keeping of such a record by every one that handles tobacco, will any one tell us why such a record should be kept in duplicate? Certainly no advantage results to the Government, for one of these books must be purchased by the dealer or handler, in his own private property, over which the Government has no more control than other private books, and it is never called for by officials. The buyer or seller derives no benefit from the duplicate he is required to keep, because he must necessarily make identically the same entries in his own private day book, journal and ledger. Who, then. is benefited? and why should this additional labor be imposed?—Spirit of the Farm.

CARRYING THE MAIL.

The first trace of mail transportation in America was a line 'to go monthly' between New York and Boston, established by Governor Lovelace, of the New York Colony, in the year 1672. This service is presumed to have been satisfactory, as there is no record to the contrary; or, possibly, the early Bostonian was less interested in the prompt receipt of his letters than in securing a reduction in the tax on his teas.

The stage coach was introduced from England in 1785, and used for carrying the mails between larger towns. Up to this time mail had only been carried on horseback.

At least one satisfactory feature of service by both post rider and stage coach, is the stereotyped 'failed to get to the door in time,' 'did not hear signal,' or 'ran by,' do not seriously interfere with the regular exchange of the mails.

Steamboats came into use for transporting mails in 1813, and until largely superseded by railroads, were used wherever possible.

The transportation of mails by railroad was begun in 1834, when there were but seventy-eight miles of railroad in the country. The distribution of mails in transition railroads was not made to any considerable extent until the introduction of the Railway Post-office in 1864.

The growth of this branch of the service has been remarkable, reaching as it does at the present time one hundred and fifty-two million miles per annum, at a yearly expenditure of twenty millions of dollars, and employing nearly four thousand five hundred clerks.

At a meeting of the Democratic Executive Committee of Boone county, held in the Court-house in Burlington, Ky., on Monday, December 7th, 1885, it was ordered.

That a Democratic primary election be held in the several voting precincts in Boone county, on the first Saturday in April 1886, between the hours of 8 o'clock a. m., and 7 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating Democratic candidates for Circuit Clerk, County Judge, County Clerk, County Attorney, Assessor, Jailer, County Superintendent, Surveyor and Coroner.

That the qualification of voters shall be the same as those specified in the call of the district committee, which is as follows: "That no one shall be eligible to vote at said election except those who are and will be entitled to a vote at the August election 1885, according to the laws of the State, and who are identified with the Democratic party, and who if voting at the November election, 1884, voted for the Democratic Electors for President and Vice-President."

That the Democratic voters of the county may have the privilege in voting for the county offices alone, to to express a first and second choice when there are more than two candidates for one office, so that before the board to count the votes the hindmost candidate shall be dropped and those votes cast for said hindmost candidate expressing a second choice, said second choice shall be counted as first choice for the candidate so named.

That the clerks of the several voting precincts together with the chairman of the Democratic County Committee shall constitute a Board to compare poll-books and count the vote, and shall, upon ascertaining who has received a majority of the votes cast for the respective offices, declare said candidate the regular Democratic nominee for said office. Said Board shall meet at the court-house in Burlington, at 1 o'clock the following Monday, April 5, 1886.

That the clerks appointed in the several precincts, prepare the poll-books to include both district and county candidates, and at the close of the polls, shall duly certify seal and deliver to the chairman of the Executive Committee of the county, on the day named in sec. 4.

That a list of the officers of the election shall be published in the Boone County RECORDER the first week of said paper's publication after the first Monday in March, 1886, and said officers shall consist of two judges and a clerk, and in case of anyone failing to serve who has been selected any good Democrat present may be selected to fill the vacancy.

THE COMBINATION FENCE

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more,

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

S. D. Hoshal, Hebron, Ky.

In this issue G. M. Riley the present incumbent announces himself a candidate for re-election to the office of Assessor. He has made an efficient officer and if elected again will fill the office in a like acceptable manner.

Morgan Academy has been secured by L. M. Whitehead for a spring school of three months beginning about the first of March. He will visit the people of Burlington and vicinity before school opens, soliciting patronage.

If the ground hog story be true, we are to have six weeks more of winter. Since we set the two first lines of this item, we have been trying to think whether or not the ground hog saw his shadow yesterday or not. Who knows?

By arrangements made with the Auditor and Sheriff the County Superintendent of schools expects to be able to pay to the teachers entitled, 40 per cent. of the school funds now due them. This arrangement will be a great accommodation to the teachers

Remember that Geo. Huschart & Co. of Lawrenceburg, Indiana, can always give satisfaction both as to price and style of work, so when you want to buy a tombstone or a monument go to their yard or call on John Beall, of Hebron, Ky., their agent.

In token of the appreciation of their brother, the members of Viola Lodge, No. 278 I. O. O. F., presented Mr. Frank D. Kirkpatrick an elegant silver water pitcher and goblet as a bridal present. The presentation speech was made by Dr. Furnish in his usual happy style.

Died—On Saturday morning the 3rd. ult., at 6 o'clock after a lingering illness of several weeks with pneumonia, youngest daughter of James T. and Lizzie Gaines at their home near Gainsville. They have the sympathy of the entire community in their sad affliction.

Considerable tobacco has been sold in this county at prices ranging from 2½ to 8 dollars. The best price we have heard of was $8 all round for which one of the Hoard boys in the Southern part of the county sold. B. H. Stephens, on Riddell's Run claims for his son the finest crop of tobocco in the county.

Robert L. Graves, son of the late Rev. R. K. Graves, at one time a citizen of this place, died at Somerset one day last week. He was returning from California, where he had been for the benefit of his health. Mr. Graves had been living in Covington previous to going to California in search of health.

I am a candidate for Clerk of the Boone Circuit Court, against W. L. Riddell and J. W. Duncan. I don't care anything about the salary of the office, but just the honor that's in it. None of the Turner family have ever been clerk, and I think now is the time to put in a man who can run the office without price or pay.

J. M. Turner.

One day last week a little boy seeing a stranger on horseback approaching a tobacco barn where several persons were stripping, started at the top of his speed to impart the information that a tobacco buyer was coming. He beat the supposed buyer to the pen, and almost exhausted, cried out, "a tobacco buyer is coming." You can imagine the disappointment when only a candidate rode up.

If the company which is arranging telephone facilities for Petersburg will allow us to make a suggestion it will be this: Run the line down the pike via Constance, Hebron, Bullittsville and Gainesville to Petersburg, and construct a branch line from Bullittsville or Hebron to Burlington. There are several reasons why the above route is preferable to following the river on the Kentucky side.

Monday evening about 5:30 o'clock Jno. M. Finch and Henry Hall engaged in an altercation in the pike near the Baptist church, resulting in Finch getting an ugly gash across his throat from a knife in the hands of Hall. Hall was arrested and lodged in jail to await an examining trial. Finch was taken to the Boone House where his wounds were dressed. There are conflicting statements about how the trouble originated. No one was present when the men met.

Probably very few are aware that the popular Ben Davis apple is a native of Owen County, Ky., but such is the fact. The original tree, from which this variety sprung may yet be seen in the orchard of Benj. K. Davis, living on the Sparta pike, two miles from Owenton, and it bears fruit every year. This apple is the favorite of Kentucky farmers, and especially suitable to this climate, bringing large returns by a careful system of cultivation.—So says the Winchester Democrat.—Milton Press

The following is the business done in the county court Monday:

Joseph Hunt granted license to keep hotel in Florence upon his paying State tax and executing bond.

G. W. Weaver's will was probated.

Mrs. E. V. Grant was granted license to keep hotel in Florence, upon paying State tax and executing bond.

A. Skirvin granted license to keep hotel in Florence.

Thos. Watts resigned as Constable in the Taylorport district.

Wm. W. Goodridge was released from paying poll tax.

As announced last week, Frank D. Kirkpatrick and Miss Clara B. Clore were married at the residence of Elder W. S. Keene in Covington. After the ceremony they, accompanied by Mr. Hal Blanton and Miss Jennie Mitchell, returned to the residence of Mr. Lystra Aylor near Hebron, where an elegant supper was given them and a number of invited guests. Thursday Mr. and Mrs. Jessie Kirkpatrick, father and mother of the groom, gave him and his bride and some of their numerous friends a reception—Frank is quite a favorite among his acquaintances and he and his wife have the best wishes of all who know them.

Several days since Jo C. Revill received a notice from the Ludlow express office that a package with 25 cents charges due awaited his order. Having received two or three notices, and his curiosity being wrought up to the highest notch he finally succeeded in getting it brought out. Jo's astonishment was complete when upon opening the box he discovered a companion in office, in by-gone days, in the shape of the old candle stick which served him in the Circuit Clerk's office at Owenton, and had been expressed to him by some friends in Owenton. The unexpected meeting was a very happy one, and the old companion and servant was provided with a safe lodging place for the future with a view of being preserved as a memento of the past.

A sad accident occurred Friday night on the Ohio River, near Anderson Ferry. The boat, City of Madison, which had left Cincinnati at five o'clock, had landed at Anderson's Ferry, and was in the act of backing out stern upstream, when the wheel struck a skiff with three occupants: Thomas Myers, Henry Williams and Lincoln Franklin. The skiff immediately capsized, and Myers and Williams, who were struck by the wheel and stunned passed under the boat and were drowned, Franklin, to escape injury from the wheel and to avoid drowning, instantly dived deep into the water, passed under the boat, and came up and caught hold of a cake of floating ice. He held on till he attracted the attention of an officer on the boat, when a yawl was lowered, and he was rescued, placed on board the boat and brought to Lawrenceburg.

E. L. Riley's school at this place closed Tuesday.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

GAINESVILLE.

News—Scarce.

Weather—Snowy and cold.

Mr. R. H. Moreland has returned to his brother's after a prolonged stay in Ind.

Mr. Thos Whittaker was the happy recipient of the top buggy given by the Commonwealth as a prize.

Mr. and Mrs. James Gaines' infant child died Saturday morning and was put in the vault Sunday morning at Bullitsburg.

In reading the news in the Lawrenceburg Register we saw the name, Brother Charlie, we wonder if he is married, if so was he married in church?

FLORENCE.

Father Burke has the most reliable time piece in town.

Mrs. Virginia Conner will soon occupy her residence in Florence.

James Osborn wears a cute little wonder—a changeable watch chain.

William Goodridge while out hunting one day last week, killed a very large wild goose.

John Aylor, of Gunpowder, sold to butcher Meyers, four hogs that weighed 2,000 pounds.

Florence will furnish several candidates for county offices, County Attorney, Coroner, &c.

Geo. Hoover while on his way to the depot, one day last week, was thrown from his wagon and badly hurt.

John Goodridge has returned from Florida. He did not like the country, and says he would not give one acre in old Boone for the State of Florida.

Mr. John Weigh, one of our most enterprising citizens has started a coal yard at this place, which has long been needed. Florence would be a town if we had a few more men like Weigh.

UNION.

The public school will close on Friday the fifth.

Miss Sarah Bannister is in Covington the guest of May Duffie.

Fifty loads of tobacco were received at the warehouse last week.

M. C. Weaver will shortly move into the new house recently built by Mr. Harter.

H. G. Blanton was in Covington last week, a guest at the Kirkpatrick-Clore wedding.

W. O. Harter and family moved to Covington last week, and Mrs. Burkitt has moved into the house occupied by Mr. Harter.

After a pleasant visit of several week with friends here, Miss Jennie Crouch will return to her home near Warsaw, this week.

The famous literary club, known as the Cyclone, was pleasantly entertained by the Misses Dickey last Friday evening. Owing to the wonderful energy and farsightedness of the secretary, J. M. Lassing, the club is rapidly improving.

BELLEVUE.

Rev. Fullilove and family have moved in the Parsonage here.

Prof. Kelsey, of Indiana, was visiting this neighborhood last week.

We have found nearly all peach buds killed that we have examined.

Proff. O. Snyder and wife, of Petersburg, were visiting here last Saturday.

The ice houses in this section of country have been filled with a fine article of ice.

B. F. Rogers and Jas. M. Thompson shipped about 20 hogsheads of tobacco from here last week.

Job Morrison has taken charge of the McVille blacksmith shop. James Green retiring from the firm.

Our merchants have been able to replenish their stock of goods which had run down considerable since the close of navigation.

The weekly spelling matches here are creating a livelier interest than the literary. It is not patronized by our young folks as it should be.

Seborn Berkshire and family moved to his farm, near the mouth of Middle Creek last week. L. W. Kautz and family have moved into the house vacated by Mr. Berkshire.

The heavy ice that has been floating down the river for several weeks past has thined out sufficiently for the boats to resume business again. They are making regular trips.

The warehouse in our city has received nearly 100,000 pounds of tobacco, for which prices were paid not exceeding $6 around. A great deal of damaged tobacco is found in the crops.

We are having some genuine winter weather at present, the ground being covered with about four inches of snow. We saw several sleighs bobbing around through our streets last Sunday.

Quite a number of our young folks have formed a company for an entertainment, to be given here in about four or five weeks. They have secured the services of Professor Joe Reed to conduct the rehearsals, and the entertainment.

PLATTSBURG.

Tuesday was ground hog day.

Capt. George Terrill lost a valuable brood mare one day last week.

Congress meets at the Woolper Store every day at 9 a. m. John Stith speaker of the house.

The most of our citizens pass away the time reading the humorous paragraphs in the patent medicine Almanacs.

Mr. Georgie Piper, one of the cleverest little men in Burlington, made our town a very pleasant call one day last week.

Will Botts and Ernest Grant will ship their tobacco to the Louisville market. They will have about seventy thousand pounds.

Col. Tom Dickerson, of North Vernon, Indiana, was in Petersburg several days last week. He reports Bessie G. and Grafton all right.

John W. Berkshire has bought about two hundred thousand pounds of tobacco in the last two weeks, paying six all round for the most of it.

Billy McMurry raised twelve thousand pounds of tobacco this year and sold it for six and a quarter cents per pound, the best sale we have heard of.

Clarence Graves and James M. Brunson have started a cigar factory at Petersburg. Clarence is an expert at the trade and is making a fine lot of Havanas.

Mr. Morgan Davis is home from Lexington and has a stable of trotters in his care. Morgan is a good driver and has some fast trotters to hold the strings over.

George Voshell gets possession of his newly purchased farm between the first and tenth of March next. He now has the best improved farm in this end of the county.

Miss Mary Klopp, age sixteen, daughter of Jacob Klopp, died after a short illness one day last week. Her funeral was preached by Rev. Froh, after which the remains were burried in the Petersburg Cemetery.

The Debating Society meets at Ashby Fork every Thursday night. The question discussed last meeting night was, affirmed that Whisky must go. Mr. Richard Gove made a brilliant effort in behalf of prohibition.

John S. Gaunt is the only candidate that has struck our town. He delivered himself of a considerable amount of political gas and gave us a few pointers as to how Judge Mack instructed a jury while on the bench.

Ben Sturgeon gathered up all the eggs he could find—his wife packed the butter in a basket last Sunday morning, and Ben started for Petersburg on double quick time for some groceries thinking it was Saturday. When he arrived in Petersburg the church bells were tolling, the business houses were closed and Ben was at a loss to know what was up. The first person Ben came in contact with was Dick McWethy, who was dressed up in his Sunday best on his way to church. Ben inquired of Dick if there was a funeral in town, the reason they were closed up. Dick told him no, and that they usually closed their store on Sunday. This was an eye opener for Ben and he began to realize the situation he had gotten himself into. Dick took the marketing in, exchanged for groceries and when Ben started he told him to take an Almanac along with him so he could tell when Sunday came.

WALTON.

The sermons of Revs. Sam Jones and Small are highly commented upon and eagerly sought as they come to us daily through the medium of the Cincinnati Enquirer, and many of our residents, both ladies and gentlemen, have listened to his earnest appeals as they fall red hot from the lips of the great Evangelist of the 19th Century.

Last Wednesday night, as per announcement, a Cheyenne Indian delivered a very interesting lecture at the Baptist Church at this place. His subjects were well chosen and highly entertaining, Missionary works, the war of the Black Hills, war of the Ute Indians and war of the Modocs, and Trouble with the Cherokee Indians at present, where his themes of discussion Notwithstanding the inclemency of the evening a goodly number were present and were delighted with the lecture. He appeared before the audience in that peculiar raiment usually adorning a Indians person, and the small boy, with his limited and prejudiced ideas of Indians was there in numbers. The principal object of his mission amongst us is to expose the frauds perpetrated upon the different Tribes by the Indian Agents, and it is evident that they are many.

Esq. Curley viewed the photograph of the alleged Jesse Conley, and recognized a striking resemblance of the aforesaid criminal and murderer. No report has been heard from Mr. Robinson who has gone to the scene of action, but we have anticipated a slow return to the general public. The supposition being prevalent here that the matter will be kept as quiet as possible on account, perhaps, of our craving appetites for a tableau or pantomime. The long, tedious, wearisome ride from this place to Burlington in this bleak, biting atmosphere, and the manner in which we guard the health of our officers, is a consideration, that has figured largely in our previous record, but now he is strong and robust and has become the fortunate possessor of a good beast, we no longer feel the necessity of rigid discipline we are comparatively tame now and hope if Cooly should come into our midst again that the usual courtesy shown a prisoner will be extended.

FASHIONS IN GLOVES.

The Swede Mousquetaire to Be the Favorite This Summer.

"The fashionable style in gloves changes to a certain extent every season," remarked a large importer and manufacturer of gloves on Broadway, and he stretched a number five kid to fit a number eight hand.

"What causes the changes?"

"The style of dressing has all to do with it. For instance, this summer the close-fitting, tailor-made suits for ladies, from the length of the sleeve and its pattern, require a five-button glove. The glace kid is the most popular for these suits. Six and eight-button gloves were often cut down to five buttons to meet the demand. As long as these close-fitting suits are worn the five-button gloves will be in vogue. It is the rage in Paris, and New York does not remain long behind that city of fashion."

"What style of glove will be worn by the ladies this summer?"

"The old style, Swede mousquetaire, will still be worn and in a great measure supplant silk gloves. For dress occasions the Swede glove in light tan shades will be worn almost exclusively. It is rather strange that in the dead of summer kid should be preferable to silk. Well, the Swedish kid is light and cool and more dressy than silk. The most popular color is a subdued mouse color.

"The most expensive glove is the pink red. Indeed they are so high-priced that a very small and select stock only is kept on hand. When the famous pink parties came off during last year the gloves were generally made to order direct from Paris.

"A new style of glove which does not seem to become popular is the three-button kid, with black Spanish lace at the top. In the first place they are too expensive and then the three buttons are not enough to give them the style of five buttons with the lace."—N. Y. Mail and Express.

CRY OF THE FORESTS.

Save us! O, save us from the ruthless hands
That fain would lay us low!
Dry up our wholesome moisture from the lands,
And stop our streamlets' flow!

Save us! Ye know not what ye do, to kill
The life from which ye drain
Your health, your wealth, your soft spring showers that fill
The thirst of hill and plain.

Ye know not, while with murderous hand our ranks
Are hewn and thinned away,
How soon your rivers with their flowery banks
Will shrink to miry clay.

Save us! Our unsunned virgin solitudes
Have saved you from decay.
Behold, the dryads of the ancient woods
Lift up their hands and pray.

Would ye behold your fields to deserts turned,
Kissed by no winding river?
In the fierce August sun your meadows burned
To arid sands forever?

O, save us! We your saviors fain would be;
For in our forests old,
Mid murmuring boughs we hold a treasury
More rich than gems and gold.

Here in our mountain wilderness we keep
Our unregarded state,
With ministries as soft as love and sleep,
Early we watch and late,

To send from granite cliffs and caves the drops
Of heaven in fountain rills
Through avenues of pines and beechen copse
And gorges in our hills.

Save us! We dryads of the western world,
We nereids of the streams
From our abodes mid ferns and mosses curled,
Wake from our summer dreams,

And start to hear the woodman's echoing axe
Far through our cloistered shades;
And weep to see the scathed and blighted tracks
Far down the forest glades.

We lift our hands, and pray to mortal men,
We bodiless, woodland elves,
To spare the all saving forests; for ye then
Will save us—and yourselves!

IT WAS EXPLODED.

Mr. Windsor's Theory That "A Man Is a Fool to Marry."

"A man is a fool to marry."

"Yes?"

"Beg your pardon, Brigham, I had forgotten you are so recent a Benedick."

"Yes?" again with an upward inflec[illegible] see, I was thinking of St. Leger. A man of his years, his absolute freedom—rich, handsome, gay—to tie himself down to the caprices of a woman! Of course, I don't expect you to pass an opinion, but can you explain it?"

"I will answer your question by asking another. Have you seen the woman?"

"Yes; she is everywhere, is she not?"

"She is pretty," said Brigham.

"Y-e-s. Yes, no doubt she is very pretty. That's but a small reason, however, for a very great—sacrifice."

"Marriage is one of the things inexplicable to all except the married."

"But St. Leger didn't need a wife. No man ever needed one less. She is pretty, but there is a perceptible shade of provincialism about her—don't you think so? She is too happy; enjoys her carriage too much; smiles too readily; and blushes—heavens, such a color! I believe that can be done to order, though, like stage tears."

"You are a cynic, Windsor, the worst of cynics. You go so far in it that you destroy your influence."

"Well," leaning back, and languidly resuming his cigar, "perhaps I do."

Then suddenly rising, as if impelled by a new idea, Windsor burst out:

"Yes, and already the country relations have begun to visit Bob. I presume the young madame has as many sisters as Tommy Traddles' wife—as Sophy. I thought Bob looked very like Traddles this morning when he announced to me that he was going to the train to meet his wife's sister. He was quite eager about it, and felt called upon to say: 'She's a sister worth having, Adolphus.' H-m-m! He's bewitched—a positive dotard."

"You miss Bob, Windsor?"

"Yes, I miss him. I never supposed he would serve me this way. I believed him a fellow of sense—good, hard sense. But it sometimes seems as if those were the very ones to fall most headlong into the trap—positively to go out of their way to put a noose about their own necks that, soon or late, is sure to strangle all good-fellowship in them."

"You were born for an orator, Windsor," said Brigham, dryly. "Have another cigar?"

"No," rising to go. "I see I haven't the sympathies of my audience. You barely tolerate my opinions now-a-days."

"Don't go," protested Brigham, suppressing a smile. "I enjoy what you say. It is—it is really very amusing."

"You are sneering inwardly. You don't indorse me. You are also married and—incredulous. Good morning."

"Wait a minute, Windsor," said Brigham, laying a detaining hand on his arm; "my wife is going to have a few friends to-night—wholly informal, you know—and she wants you to join us. It is high tea, or something of that sort; only about twenty. St. Leger and his wife will be there, and perhaps this new sister-in-law, if she comes as expected. Mrs. Brigham is very fond of Mrs. St. Leger."

"Thank you—but——"

"There, you are not ready-witted, old fellow. It takes too long for you to invent an excuse. Say you'll come. We shall expect you."

"But really, Brigham——"

"We shall expect you," said Brigham, peremptorily, as he turned to his desk, virtually dismissing his visitor.

This conversation took place in Tom Brigham's down-town office. He was a hard worker in a way—quite the only one in his set who found it necessary to look sharply after the dollars and cents. The bulk of his patrimony had vanished round a "corner" just after his marriage to the lovely and merry Diana Smith. Since neither of them had practiced economy before marriage they made a double failure of it afterward. And Brigham was working all the more strenuously now to keep his small but sumptuous establishment going. His friend Windsor chose to ignore the lard deal as a factor in this domestic problem, and persistently recurred to Tom's marriage as the beginning of adversity.

The other mutual friend, St. Leger, who had followed Tom's fatuous example by marrying, was the gayest of bachelors until a sly, gray-eyed, country-girl snared him. He had been on his usual summer fishing trip and met her at some rural picnic; straightway went wild over her; made desperate love; was refused as a suspicious character by a grim Scotch father, who relented, however, when St. Leger's fine credentials were shown. The lady was not rich, either in purse or worldly wisdom, but only sweet, ingenious and beautiful. St. Leger's pride in this unexpected bride bordered on folly—a folly he took no pains to conceal from the world at large. He lavished everything upon her that his cosmopolitan taste could suggest or money procure. And she accepted his homage with a happiness so exuberant and naive that, critic as he was, he was wholly obtuse to the unsophisticated flavor in her his friend was so quick to detect. Soon enough, no doubt, the bloom would be brushed from her fair nature by the world's rude handling.

She entered upon her city life with a piquant enjoyment that drew continuous attention to her. The gala times were child's frolic to her. But if only Grizzie were there! If only Grizzie could see this, wear that, hear the other! This was her secret cry wherever she went, whomever she met. Grizzie was her sister, her dearest companion, left in the little up-country village, and the dazzle and delight of her new life could not wholly make up to her the loss.

"Write to Grizzie, then," her husband said, "and have her come. She is such a blossom as this black city has not seen for many a day—except you, dear."

"O, may I write? How lovely it would be to have her with me when you can't go, Robert!"

"Very well added, you transparent little flutterer. I've heard nothing but 'Grizzie' ever since we began housekeeping. I have known all along I am only secondary."

"O, Robert, it isn't that—really it isn't. But Grizzie is so fond of life, and has such a quick taste for everything fine. She is much better fitted for a grand lady than I," stealing to his side and finally perching upon his knee.

So the letter to Grizzie—Scotch for Grace—was sent, and the invitation met a ready acceptance. Unaffectedly glad was she of the chance to come, and in no way backward in saying so.

The morning of her arrival, as St. Leger was on his way to the train to meet her, he had encountered his old boon companion and chum, Windsor. What a strange sort of pity he felt for Windsor. He looked back at the old days with him, which had seemed rather gay at the time, as a period of wasted and misguided existence compared with the present Eden of a home of his own and a bona fide, beautiful wife. Windsor was sensible of this patronizing pity, and never more so then when St. Leger mentioned the sister-in-law, as he afterward detailed it to Brigham.

And it seemed Brigham echoed St. Leger in everything. Windsor was infuriated by it. As he left that gentleman's office after the effort to unburden himself he muttered under his breath: "I don't propose to make myself one of a silly rabble, training idiotically in the wake of a pretty woman! Put myself out of the way to pay court to an up-country girl who probably nibbles slate-pencils in the intervals of angling for a lover!"

Nevertheless, the evening found him a guest in the Brighams quaint and pretty parlor. He had argued to himself that he wouldn't go, and then, to convince himself that he was superior to small prejudices he had gone.

The only strange face there was that of a girl of twenty years. Windsor set her down at once as the sister-in-law, Grizzie Maxwell. Beauty? That was an open question.

She crossed the room. Tall and slim, pliant as a whip, full of movement, hair dark and eyes "as gray as glass," as Chaucer has it—these were the features revealed at the first glance. Would the face and figure bear scrutiny? It mattered little. Windsor felt a tremor at his heart—scarcely more than a vibration and yet a real physical sensation. Let him go the world over and meet all the women therein, it is doubtful if he could ever again experience a like flutter; this was the first.

Miss Grizzie was not a silent goddess. She talked continuously.

"A flippant little thing," whispered Reason in Windsor's ear; "pretty to the eye, but empty to the brain."

The eye, however, decided that as well might one try to determine the colors on a humming-bird's neck as to define her ever-shifting, ever-varying expression; and as well try to be indifferent to that glancing fragment of rainbow as to ignore her particularly radiant personality.

Presently in all her titter and chatter she made a stroke of wit—the happiest hit of the evening—in a kind of rhyming game they were playing, and which was now about concluded.

"Oh, Grizzie," laughed Mrs. St. Leger, so fond of this sister, "you always do the best!"

"Diana," said Brigham, in an aside to his wife, "Windsor has not been presented to her, has he?"

"Ah, no; how heedless in me. Mr. Windsor," in a lone tone to him, "let me introduce you to Miss Maxwell."

That lady was sitting in a corner, with a group of gentlemen about her "three deep," as Brigham said. At the sound of her name she rose from her chair. At nearer range she deserved a better term than "pretty;" she was more expansive, more flexible, more lambent of glance than would suffice to make up the soul of that shallow adjective.

She did not at first catch Windsor's name, and blushed in the half-breath interval required to have it repeated.

"Jacqueminot roses for color" thought the waiting Squire.

At the sound of his name a surprised look dilated her eyes an instant. It was that insuppressible, heat-lightning flash of recognition that will come into the most stolidly well-bred face before good-breeding can say coldly "Down!"

"Mr. Windsor used to be Robert's best friend," said innocent little Mrs. St. Leger, in an effort to ease along this apparent hitch and to restore Grizzie's usual savoir-vivre.

"Yes," said Windsor, with a low bow, "until Mrs. St. Leger usurped my place."

"Is this really Mr. Windsor?" asked Miss Maxwell, with a half shy hesitation whether to bring out her recognition boldly or to send it peremptorily back into the dark closet of her own soul.

"That is my name," smiled the gentleman, enjoying this prolonged introduction.

"Perhaps not Mr. Adolphus Windsor, though? That is the name I have in mind."

"I am the only one to my knowledge who has borne that euphonism into mature life."

"Then I think I am not at fault in claiming a previous introduction."

The really imp of Reason hissed into his ear again, "Coquet! Claiming acquaintance for the sake of more easily establishing a real one."

Luckily for Love, Reason must mostly take it out in hissing. Few men listen.

"I am sorry, but I certainly do not remember you," he said. "Where have I had the honor?"

"No doubt you have forgotten. But you are little changed."

"Is it so long ago, then, that change must be expected?"

"Our meeting was in Geneva, Switzerland."

"I have been there—in my youth."

"In my youth, also," with a twinkle of mischief. "You once dragged a little girl out of the water? It is hard to confess that she was a hoiden, perverse and disobedient."

"I remember a little girl who certainly did not behave too well."

"Her heedlessness probably distressed you. You remember warning her not to lean too far over the pier? I believe she was looking for the houses of the lake-dwellers or for a mermaid."

"I really had forgotten the child," smiling as his memory wakened. "She was Grace Glendenning. Ah, I do know what a witch she was!"

"Mrs. Glendenning was my aunt. She took me with her over Europe in gypsy fashion for many years."

"But you would not have me believe you are that child?"

"A Mr. Adolphus Windsor certainly fished me out of Lake Geneva."

"It would require more of an effort to do a like service for you now."

"Yes, it might. And I presume you would want to shake me as heartily as you did then."

"Did I shake you?"

"I remember the sensation perfectly. I thought you very severe."

"Let me see; that was—how long ago?"

"It was eleven years ago. I was eight years old."

Windsor was about to add: "And I was twenty-one," but refrained.

"I remember you wrapped a shawl over my wet clothing."

"And I carried you onto the boat, and—I held you in my arms until we reached the landing. You see, after the ducking, and the—shaking, you had need to go to sleep. You were a sound sleeper, too, for my arms ached before we reached the pension."

"I did not disobey you again. I was more heedful after that," deprecatingly.

"Ah, did you not?" cried Windsor, captivated with his own reminiscences. "Did you not persist one day in patting that strange dog contrary to my wishes?"

"That must have been—some other child."

"No, indeed! It was a lost dog, you know, and had a mild, hungry, dangerous look. I told you to take care. There was danger that he should bite you. But you straightway put your arms about his neck."

"O, Mr. Windsor, your memory is supernatural."

"As I could not persuade you," he went on, regardless of her interruption, "I picked you up—you were little then—and carried you up to the first floor veranda to Mrs. Glendenning."

She laughed gayly. "I am sorry I claimed acquaintance with you, you remember so much."

"Have you outgrown your perversity?"—he had almost said bad temper.

"I think I am much the same," she said, quietly.

Their host, feeling that Windsor monopolized, intruded with an irrelevant question. He had twice to repeat it.

"Miss Maxwell and I find ourselves old acquaintances," explained Windsor, as an excuse for his non-attention. "What did you say, Brigham?"

"I have been rehearsing a single unimportant question for the last five minutes," said that gentleman, with severity.

It was Windsor's turn for embarrassment.

As St. Leger passed Brigham's seat in a sofa corner the latter whispered: "Windsor has lost head, heart and all his senses, to judge by appearances."

So it did seem. The supper was going the rounds—sandwiches, an oyster salad, coffee. Windsor remained a fixture at Miss Maxwell's elbow. He kept up a running fire of reminiscences. How amusing and beautiful seemed all those long-forgotten trifles in the light of the present.

When the hour for leave-taking came Windsor again explained his long-standing acquaintance with Miss Maxwell. St. Leger said aside to Brigham: "Windsor rails so at women—is such an incorrigible bachelor—let's watch him! Grizzie will lead him a dance before he has done, I'll warrant."

Following this party came a series of pleasures more or less ceremonious. Windsor seemed to have gone back on his record utterly, for he warmed into the most genial and devoted of attendants upon the ladies; came out of that surly shell of cynicism and took to trifles and gallant speeches with the zest of a novice. Brigham and St. Leger exchanged much hearty mirth over him. "Benedick right over again," Brigham said, and St. Leger, slyly: "This can be no trick."

And Grizzie—the Beatrice? The perturbation did not reach her; in no way did she betray a knowledge of the undercurrent of the comedy in which she played her graceful part. Never having railed at marriage, she had no retractions to make. She saw it all, without doubt, but with such gay abandon that St. Leger, closely as he watched, believed her both blind and indifferent.

As the two month's of Grizzie's stay came to an end it became evident to all that Windsor was a changed man. He even grew pale, as a hero should, and lost much of his nonchalance and all his captious philosophy. His devotion to Grizzie was open and unchallenged and his docility to her spirited whims quite pathetic. She remained blooming and heedless, getting good out of everything in her buoyant way. All the interested ones felt sure the crisis had not been reached. Windsor called the evening before the morning set for her departure. But there were other visitors who outstaid him.

"It's all up!" sighed St. Leger, as he witnessed the leave-taking. Windsor extended his hand with more than his usual urbanity and Grizzie hers with frank friendliness.

Mrs. St. Leger returned with her sister for a brief visit to the old home. To beguile the loneliness of her absence her husband resumed somewhat his club habits. He met Windsor frequently and poured out his uneasiness and homesickness to him unreservedly.

Finally Windsor disappeared. A letter from Mrs. St. Leger gave news that he was there—in the little up-country town. Grizzie, it seemed to her, was more tormenting than she had ever known her.

Not many days elapsed, however, before Windsor suddenly reappeared. He entered Brigham's office one morning in search of St. Leger, for whom he had a message.

Brigham was preoccupied, nervous; he looked worn and harried; he paced restlessly up and down with his hands in his pockets and his eyes bent upon the floor.

"Windsor," he finally broke out, "I suppose you've heard?"

"No. What?"

"My home must go! It's all up!"

"What do you mean?"

"It's all up, I say. I've done what I could to weather the storm. 'Twas no use—no use."

"Why, Brigham, old fellow, why didn't you come to me?"

"No—no! I can't receive favors."

"I'm thunderstruck!"—though he wasn't; all Brigham's friends had foreseen this. "And Mrs. Brigham—how does she bear it?"

"Why, Windsor, she's all the comfort I have. She positively makes holiday out of it—talks of light housekeeping in two rooms, and of—giving art lessons. She has all the pluck! I am the baby," and he quite broke down.

Others coming in interrupted. When once more alone Windsor began with a somewhat awkward hesitation.

"Brigham, you know I've always said—said a man was—was a fool to marry! I——"

Brigham interrupted him with a flash of anger. "See here, Windsor, I want none of that! If you have any of your cursed philosophy to apply to this case please bestow it on the man who, from the first, deliberately and persistently and with full knowledge lived beyond his income!"

"But—but," protested Windsor.

"You've always croaked, Windsor. You set me down as a fool, and St. Leger down as a fool. I bore it as long as it seemed only ludicrous, but now that it is insolent I don't propose to bear it any longer!" And bang went a ledger, while Brigham turned from red to white and from white to red.

"But," stammered Windsor, "you quite misunderstand me. You won't listen. I mean quite another thing—let me tell you! I was only going to confide in you something regarding myself. I wanted to say—hold on, Brigham," as the wrath showed signs of further effervescence.

Brigham shut his lips with a black scowl. Windsor continued: "I wanted to say that, though I have railed a good deal about women—about marriage—I am—well—I am, that is, I propose to marry myself."

Brigham stopped short in his excited pacing; his face relaxed, broke into a wondering smile, and then into broad laughing—in short, into a genuine, hearty, old-fashioned guffaw. St. Leger, happening just then to push open the door, come upon an errand of condolence, was amazed. It took some time before Brigham could find voice to say:

"St. Leger—think of it! O, Jove! what a state of things!" Then more laughter.

"Are you demented, Brigham? Your troubles have turned your head."

"No, I'm not demented. There's the demented man—Windsor—he's—O, St. Leger—he's going to be married!"

They surrounded Windsor; they flung his old saws at him; they looked lugubrious; they laughed.

But Windsor! He was married to Grizzie the next June.—Chicago Tribune.

PRACTICAL LESSONS.

What Experience Has Demonstrated in Regard to Cooked Feed for Stock.

The real value of the experimental work that is going on in the United States lies in the fact that it becomes of practical utility in actual farm operations. The question of feeding stock is one of great importance in an economical point of view; by injudicious feeding there can be a great waste of available food material, and up to a comparatively recent period feeding was left wholly to the good judgment of the feeder, without any reliable information further than the results following any particular course pursued. In Europe, with the establishment of experimental stations, the question of cattle feed and the manner of feeding became one of study, and as a result tables of the relative feeding value of different products were made, which were being studied and made applicable to produce in this country so far as was practicable, and, since the establishment of stations in this country, the study of the question has been one of deep interest. And so, right in the line of experimental work, has come in the question of value of cooked food when brought in direct comparison with uncooked food. About the time of the introduction of the Prindle steamer, there was raised a great cry regarding the value of cooked food over that which was uncooked, and many well-to-do farmers at once set about introducing some sort of apparatus that would serve to cook animal food. Reports of astonishing results followed, but, like many other new things, after a little time the enterprise was abandoned for some reason or another, and steamers and boilers went out of use, and with the light of further facts, some of the more enthusiastic of days gone by, who approved of steaming or cooking, now make the startling claim that it did not pay to cook food. But such a conclusion was hardly satisfactory to the spirit of progressive inquiry that agriculture was encouraging, and hence, as indicated, the matter has been pursued in a thorough experimental manner.

The New York Experiment Station carried out an investigation in the interest of determining the effect of cooking food for cattle. In the first place a chemical examination was made by the station of clover hay and corn meal, which showed an actual loss of nutritive material by the process of cooking; this was chiefly in that portion of the food denominated the albuminoids or nitrogenous material. This was a result that might have been expected, taken in connection with a statement made at a meeting of the Connecticut Board of Agriculture, in which it was stated that albuminoid material was rendered very much more difficult of digestion by being cooked. In connection with the chemical examination, digestion experiments were carefully carried on in duplicate trials for the purpose of eliminating so far as possible any liability of error, and as a result the following table was formed in which is shown the amount of digested albuminoids

PER CENT. OF ALBUMINOIDS DIGESTED.

	In raw food.	In cooked food.
Clover hay	67.65	53.27
Corn meal, fresh	68.63	60.53
Corn meal, old	72.58	61.17

While the experiments showed an actual loss of albuminoids by cooking, the above table shows a much less digestible condition for being cooked, and will be better understood from the following table, based upon one hundred pounds of food:

ALBUMINOIDS DIGESTED.

	Pounds per 100 lbs. of the food.
	Raw.	Cooked.	Loss by cooking.
Clover hay	9.831	7.641	2.19
Corn meal, fresh	8.47	6.81	1.66
Corn meal, old	7.362	6.236	1.126

In these trials artificial digestion was employed, and it might be claimed that actual digestion might give different results, but a comparison with the average results of the German feeding trials shows that the artificial digestion trials are worthy of confidence.

Again, it may be stated that for a period of nine years experiments were carried on at the Maine State Agricultural College with pigs, and the result of these experiments was that cooked corn meal was not as good for growing or fattening pigs as the raw. Bearing upon this same point we have also a series of experiments that during the past ten years have been carried on at the Ontario experimental farm at Guelph, Can., where the daily increase per head of cattle has been determined for twenty different kinds of food in different combinations; and it is a very noticeable result that while cooked hay, roots and bran, with a mixture of uncooked grain, gave a daily increase (these results are an average of many hundreds) of 1.80 pounds, the same mixture uncooked gave an increase daily of 2.60 pounds.

The above fact comes more closely to the real wants of the farmer. In certain directions and among a certain class of farmers there exists a strong prejudice that savors of scientific agriculture, and what comes from a scientific source, or emanates from a scientific institution, is looked upon with suspicion, but in the case of the Ontario farm there has been a continual trial of ten years' duration in just the way any farmer would go to experiment for himself, and the general average upon hundreds of animals is as stated above. The fact that there is so great an advantage of uncooked over cooked food should be fully understood by farmers, so that they may not be led into the use of steamers or cookers at a heavy price. The past few years has witnessed rapid strides in the line of experimentation, and of that character that arrives at results that the farmer of to-day need have no suspicions of. Strange as it may seem, the United States is becoming one immense field of experimentation, the benefits of which will be largely felt in the future.—Boston Globe.

JUST AS BAD AS PAINTED.

Widespread Commotion Caused by the Terrible Confession of a Physician.

The story published in these columns recently, from the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle, created a deal of comment here as it has elsewhere. Apparently it caused even more commotion in Rochester, as the following from the same paper shows:

Dr. J. B. Henion, who is well-known not only in Rochester, but in nearly every part of America, sent an extended article to this paper a few days ago which was duly published, detailing his remarkable experience and rescue from what seemed to be certain death. It would be impossible to enumerate the personal inquiries which have been made at our office as to the validity of the article, but they have been so numerous that further investigation of the subject was deemed necessary.

With this end in view a representative of this paper called on Dr. Henion at his residence on Andrew street, when the following interview occurred: "That article of yours, Doctor, has created quite a whirlwind. Are the statements about the terrible condition you were in, and the way you were rescued, such as you can sustain?"

"Every one of them and many additional ones. I was brought so low by neglecting the first and most simple symptoms. I did not think I was sick. It is true I had frequent headaches; felt tired most of the time; could eat nothing one day and was ravenous the next; felt dull pains and my stomach was out of order, but I did not think it meant anything serious. The medical profession has been treating symptoms instead of diseases for years, and it is high time it ceased. The symptoms I have just mentioned or any unusual action or irritation of the water channels indicate the approach of kidney disease more than a cough announces the coming of consumption. We do not treat the cough, but try to help the lungs. We should not waste our time trying to relieve the headache, pains about the body or other symptoms, but go directly to the kidneys, the source of most of these ailments."

"This, then, is what you meant when you said that more than one-half the deaths which occur arise from Bright's disease, is it Doctor?"

"Precisely. Thousands of diseases are torturing people to-day, which in reality are Bright's disease in some of its many forms. It is a hydra-headed monster, and the slightest symptoms should strike terror to every one who has them. I can look back and recall hundreds of deaths which physicians declared at the time were caused by paralysis, apoplexy, heart disease, pneumonia, malarial fever and other common complaints, which I see now were caused by Bright's disease."

"And did all these cases have simple symptoms at first?"

"Every one of them, and might have been cured as I was by the timely use of the same remedy. I am getting my eyes thoroughly opened in this matter and think I am helping others to see the facts and their possible danger also."

Mr. Warner, who was visited at his establishment on North St. Paul street, spoke very earnestly:

"It is true that Bright's disease had increased wonderfully, and we find, by reliable statistics that from '70 to '80, its growth was over 250 per cent. Look at the prominent men it has carried off, and is taking off every year, for while many are dying apparently of paralysis and apoplexy, they are really victims of kidney disorder, which causes heart disease, paralysis, apoplexy, etc. Nearly every week the papers record the death of some prominent man from this scourge. Recently, however, the increase has been checked and I attribute this to the general use of my remedy."

"Do you think many people are afflicted with it to-day who do not realize it?"

"A prominent professor in a New Orleans medical college was lecturing before his class on the subject of Bright's disease. He had various fluids under microscopic analysis and was showing the students what the indications of this terrible malady were. 'And now, gentlemen,' he said, 'as we have seen the unhealthy indications I will show you how it appears in a state of perfect health,' and he submitted his own fluid to the usual test. As he watched the results his countenance suddenly changed—his color and command both left him and in a trembling voice he said: 'Gentlemen, I have made a painful discovery; I have Bright's disease of the kidneys.' And in less than a year he was dead. The slightest indications of any kidney difficulty should be enough to strike terror to any one."

"You know of Dr. Henion's case?"

"Yes, I have both read and heard of it."

"It is very wonderful, is it not?"

"No more so than a great many others that have come to my notice as having been cured by the same means."

"You believe then that Bright's disease can be cured?"

"I know it can. I know it from my own and the experience of thousands of prominent persons who were given up to die by both their physicians and friends."

"You speak of your own experience; what was it?"

"A fearful one. I had felt languid and unfitted for business for years. But I did not know what ailed me. When, however, I found it was kidney difficulty I thought there was little hope and so did the doctors. I have since learned that one of the physicians of this city pointed me out to a gentleman on the street one day, saying: 'There goes a man who will be dead within a year.' I believe his words would have proved true if I had not providentially used the remedy now known as Warner's Safe Cure."

"Did you make a chemical analysis of the case of Mr. H. H. Warner, some three years ago, Doctor?" was asked Dr. S. A. Lattimore, one of the analysts of the state board of health.

"Yes, sir."

"What did this analysis show you?"

"A serious disease of the kidneys."

"Did you think Mr. Warner could recover?"

"No, sir. I did not think it possible."

"Do you know anything about the remedy which cured him?"

"I have chemically analyzed it and find it pure and harmless."

Dr. Henion was cured five years ago and is well and attending to his professional duties to-day, in this city. The standing of Dr. Henion, Mr. Warner and Dr. Lattimore in the community is beyond question, and the statements they make can not for a moment be doubted. Dr. Henion's experience shows that Bright's disease of the kidneys is one of the most deceptive and dangerous of all diseases, that it is exceedingly common, but that it can be cured if taken in time.

A CURIOUS CASE.

It Proves Conclusively the Truth of Two Ancient Legal Maxims.

The French papers have been full of a case which junior members of the criminal bar would do well to take a note of. A woman was put on her trial for strangling her baby, and at the preliminary examination she confessed her crime. At the trial medical evidence was heard, and the doctor told the judge he did not believe the woman was the culprit. The finger marks were fresh on the victim's throat when he made his examination, and the marks were singular. He examined the woman's hands and found her fingers long, slender and well-shaped, but the marks were of a short-fingered hand, stumpy, and misshapen, and one of the fingers—the first—was abnormally short. On this the prisoner burst into tears, said she was fond of the child, had not destroyed it and mentioned in her excitement the real culprit. He was a man of better class of life, with whom she had lived as domestic servant. His arrest followed, and the doctor pointed out that the prisoner's hands were formed as he had described, and, more over, that the first finger was with out a nail and almost deficient of a joint. On this evidence the jury convicted. The case is interesting—first as showing—what our own books also afford an illustration of—that a prisoner, though innocent, may confess guilt and secondly that circumstantial evidence may be almost absolutely conclusive.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Young evergreens in the forest get this protection naturally from the shade of trees, and through a large proportion of all that start fail, enough are left to reach maturity.—N. Y. Times.

SHEEP HUSBANDRY.

A Business That Requires Continual and Honest Study.

It is the reading man who makes the best success in life, for he keeps up with the progress of the times. In the papers he finds the steady record of all that is being done or learned in raising sheep and growing wool. It is not an uncommon experience to find inexperienced flockmasters in the midst of a dilemma to them, which is no dilemma to others; and it ought to be a fact recognized by everybody who is engaged in the business of raising sheep and growing wool, or who contemplates engaging in it, that there are some intricacies about it. The idea is too prevalent that sheep will take care of themselves. Years gone by they were largely left to do so, and as we have often remarked, they will probably do better with less care than any animal on the farm. But if sheep husbandry is to be made a really profitable business, it must be understood and have intelligent and industrious attention. And this, of course, must begin with the breeding.

But while the flockmaster can learn much by reading with reference to this, he can not learn everything, and it is as important for him to know this as it is to know that he would be benefited by reading. There is a great deal that can only be learned by experience in almost every business. But in sheep husbandry there is conspicuously such a thing as natural adaptability, and unless a man is naturally fitted for the business he will never be be a successful flockmaster. One writer says that "it is a gift of nature," and he is largely right. But with this "gift" an intelligent beginning will likely result favorably. To the vast majority of breeders sheep husbandry is not the nice art that it is to the originator of a breed. Sheep are kept for the money they bring in from year to year, and the highest aim is to keep the flock up to a standard, or to improve it to an ideal standard. Get such a ram, therefore, as you want, one that is strong, and of marked prepotency; and if you get a ram of that character, better keep him just as long as possible. You will then have a uniform flock, and know what you will have right along. If more than one is used, aim to strengthen the weak points of one by using the others according to a defined system. The subject of in-and-in breeding will likely present itself very soon to the intelligent, thoughtful breeder. If the system is followed to any extent, it must be with the utmost care.

In the selection of the ewe for breeding purposes, it will be well to select carefully if the flock furnishes the opportunity. When a flock is being bred up, there is often little to choose between the ewes. They may be all poor enough, and it is necessary to take such as we have. Short stapled, light shearers, of course, are to be rejected when there is a choice. Long necked, flat ribbed and leggy ewes are not fit to breed from if anything better can be had. Neither breed from one with a sharp rump. If you have a ewe whose hind quarters are very heavy as compared with the fore-quarters, she will make a good breeder.—Western Rural.

It expired in the Baltic on November 1st, having traveled 16,000 miles in thirty-six days. It was the first storm traced so far, day by day.

EPITHELIOMA! OR SKIN CANCER

For seven years I suffered with a cancer on my face. Eight months ago a friend recommended the use of Swift's Specific, and I determined to make an effort to procure it. In this I was successful, and began its use. The influence of the medicine at first was to somewhat aggravate the sore; but soon the inflammation was allayed, and I began to improve after the first few bottles. My general health has greatly improved. I am stronger, and am able to do any kind of work. The cancer on my face began to decrease and the ulcer to heal, until there is not a vestige of it left—only a little scar marks the place.

DEMONS' WORK.

Deliberate Attempt to Burn Seven Men Alive.

East St. Louis the Place of the Crime—Frightful Scene in the Night.

EAST ST. LOUIS, Feb. 5.—A terrible attempt upon human life was perpetrated last night. Shortly after 10 o'clock fire in a shanty near the railroad tracks was discovered. The glare of light attracted the attention of all the railroad men who happened to be out. They ran toward the place, and, as they did so, they heard shrieks, groans and cries, telling that human beings were held there in the fiery cage, unable to escape. There was a rush to the door, and it was forced in, when two men staggered out. Other men were dragged out unconscious. The faces of the victims were blackened, and long strips of flesh peeled off, presenting a horrid sight. There were seven men taken out of the building. They said they had strolled into the shanty in order to warm up, and were sitting around the stove talking, when suddenly the stove seemed to burst open and the flames went all about the room, enveloping the men before they could turn toward the door. They could only beat about with their hands and struggle with each other in the endeavor to get to the exit. They grappled with each other and thus impeded their escape, and it seemed an eternity before they heard the cries of those who came to the rescue. They remembered very distinctly that they smelled coal oil as the flames burst around them. The strange manner in which the fire started can only be accounted for on the ground that some wretch poured oil down the chimney to the stove. Near the back of the shanty, on the ground, was found a tin can, which had evidently contained coal oil. The names of the unfortunate men are: Morris McGlynn, James Donohue, Wm. Gilkie, Pat. Boyle, Scott Sanderson, Joseph McGee, Fred. Erickson. They are all fearfully burned, but whether or not any of them are necessarily fatally injured can not be known as yet.

FEAR KILLED HIM.

A Man Bitten by a Dog Six Months Ago Takes His Own Life.

NEW YORK, Feb. 5.—William J. Higgins, employed in the saloon of Thomas Eustace, No. 125 Water street, was bitten in the arm by a dog six months ago. The wound was severe and caused him much inconvenience and good deal of fright. The idea that he would go mad possessed him. He drowned the dog, but that did not allay his fears. Last evening Higgins sat by the stove talking with three men. As if casually, he got up and went out of the door into the street. The men by the stove heard three shots, fired in quick succession, and supposed that Higgins was shooting a dog outside. It was found, however, that he had shot himself twice in the breast, near the heart, and in the back of the head, with a Colt's 32-caliber pistol. He died almost immediately. The fear of hydrophobia killed him.

BURNED IN THEIR BEDS.

An Entire Family in Iowa Cremated in the Ruins of Their House.

MCGREGOR, IA., Feb. 5.—Albert Cooley, a farmer residing three miles from here, with his entire family, consisting of his wife, two boys and one little girl, were all burned to death in their house last night. Nothing definite is known of the horrible affair, except that the children had been sick and the parents had been up with them during the night. About morning Cooley took some coals from the stove, placed them in a shed adjoining the house and then retired. The shed took fire and finally burned the house and family. The house was a one-story log, with an attic.

Aged Lady Murdered and Burned.

MARTIN'S FERRY, O., Feb. 5.—Miss Betsy Joh, an eccentric lady eighty years of age, lived near Mount Pleasant, Jefferson County, almost all her life. She lived alone, and had no immediate neighbors, and always expressed herself as feeling secure in her isolation. Her house was discovered to be on fire yesterday morning, but too late to save it. When the fire had burned itself out, the remains of the old lady were found burned to a crisp. It is supposed that the house was burned by some one who had murdered and robbed the old lady, as she always kept large amounts of money about the place. An investigation is being made.

Sewell's Militia Bill.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5.—Senator Sewell's militia bill, which passed the Senate to-day, provides for an annual appropriation of $600,000 for the purpose of providing arms and ordnance stores, quartermasters' stores and camp equipage for the militia, the appropriation to be apportioned among the several States and Territories. No State, however, shall receive its share of the appropriation unless its militia force numbers at least one hundred men for each Senator and Representative to which it is entitled in Congress.

A Pullman Car Explodes.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5.—A curious accident happened to-day to a Pullman palace sleeping-car. The car, which is heated by steam, was standing on the track and was being heated prior to being sent out. The water in the pipes had frozen during the night, and when the fires were started this morning the apparatus exploded with a loud report, blowing out the entire end of the car. Some of the debris struck houses near by and damaged them materially. The damage to the car is estimated at $500.

A Murderer for Money Hanged.

DENVER, COL., Feb. 5.—Si Minich, one of the three men who murdered Samuel Baldwin, near Leadville, on October 18, 1884, for $1,700, was hanged in Leadville this afternoon. Up to yesterday evening Minich expected Governor Eaton to commute his sentence to life imprisonment. He ascended the scaffold with a cigar in his mouth, a smile on his face, and was launched into eternity denying his guilt to the last.

Forty Degrees Below Zero.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., Feb. 5.—The mercury was 40° below zero here this morning.

To Vacate the Bell Telephone Patent.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5.—Solicitor-General Goode is now engaged in the preparation of a bill to be filed against the American Bell Telephone Company to vacate and annul its patent. He says that the suit will be instituted as soon as the papers can be prepared, and that no decision will be reached in regard to the place of bringing it until all the papers are ready.

A DESPERATE AFFAIR.

A Pittsburgh Convict Who Nearly Killed Three of His Keepers.

PITTSBURGH, Feb. 4.—A serious affray occurred in the Riverside Penitentiary this morning, in which deputies McKain, Greaves and Edwards were injured, the two former dangerously. A prisoner named James Clark, who is serving a sentence of seven years for burglary, had been ordered to the dungeon for an infraction of the rules. McKain and Greaves repaired to his cell to escort him to the dungeon. He promised to go quietly, but in an unguarded moment he turned upon them with a huge knife which he had secreted in his coat. He first made a desperate lunge at McKain, and plunged the knife into his neck, and then stabbed him in the right temple. Turning from McKain he thrust the bloody weapon into Greaves' right shoulder blade twice. Deputy Edwards, hearing the noise, came to the aid of McKain and Greaves, but before he could render them assistance Clark felled him to the ground with a terrific blow, and, jumping on him, beat and kicked him in a frightful manner. By this time the guard had been alarmed, and Clark was overpowered and placed in the dungeon. The injured men were removed to the hospital. An examination of their injuries showed McKain to have been perhaps mortally wounded. Greaves and Edwards are seriously hurt, but will recover.

WANT GERONIMO HANGED.

But One Opinion Among the Settlers of New Mexico and Arizona.

EL PASO, TEX., Feb. 4.—Additional news from the seat of war confirm the report of Geronimo's unconditional surrender. The particulars in full will probably be out in a day or two. It has been in progress since May, 1885, and troops have been in the field since the 22d of that month. It has been one of the hardest wars on the regular soldiers that has ever occurred in the West. The feeling in New Mexico and Arizona is very strong in favor of hanging Geronimo and all his immediate followers. In fact, this feeling is rapidly growing into one general demand on the part of the settlers.

A Great Street Car Strike.

NEW YORK, Feb. 4.—The men on the Broadway, Fourth, Sixth and Seventh avenue struck to-day because of the refusal of the company to operate the road according to the recently adopted time-schedule. Six hundred drivers and conductors and 200 stablemen and hitchers employed by the Broadway and Seventh avenue Railroad Company quit work at midnight. The difficulty on the Fourth-avenue road was adjusted late in the afternoon. The company agreed to a fixed schedule of trips which will constitute a day's work, and the pay for which shall be $2 per day. Stablemen, hostlers and switchers are to work twelve and a half hours, with two hours for meals. Old employes will receive $12 per week, and new men $11.50 per week the first six months. The cars began running soon after 4 o'clock. During the afternoon the Broadway and Seventh-avenue line acceded to the demands of its men for $2.25 per day for twelve hours for drivers and conductors, and $12.25 per week instead of $11.50 for hostlers and stablemen. The cars began running about 2:30 p. m. These terms begin February 15.

Welsh Landlords Combine.

LONDON, Feb. 4.—The principal landlords in Wales have combined to resist the demand of the Farmers' League for a reduction of twenty-five per cent. in farm rents. In proclaiming their decision the landlords declare they regret that the Farmers' League has adopted the false assumption that there is a natural antagonism between landlords and tenants. The landlords add that, while they are willing to reduce individual rents according to the exigencies of each particular case, they are determined to absolutely decline to recognize the League.

The Ohio Senate.

COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 4.—The Ohio Senate has adopted a compromise measure respecting the contested seats. The present Committee on Privileges and Elections will be increased by the addition of two Republicans to be named by President Kennedy. This committee will appoint from its members a sub-committee of six (three Democrats and three Republicans) to take testimony in the contested cases and report to the Senate. The matter of allowing the Hamilton County members to vote on their own cases has not been settled.

The Origin of the Conscience Fund.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4.—There was laid before the Senate to-day a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in reply to a recent resolution of the Senate relating to the conscience fund. The "conscience fund," the Secretary says, had its origin in the popular belief that the donations of money received from persons unknown were because of money wrongfully withheld from the Government. The first item to the credit of the fund was made in 1842, and the fund now amounts to $220,000.

Killed by a Falling Gate.

EVANSVILLE, IND., Feb. 4.—A distressing accident occurred on the farm of W. F. Grady, situated on the Spotsville road, four miles from Henderson, Ky., in which Harvey Grady, aged eleven years, was instantly killed. The boy started from home on an errand, and in opening a large gate on the road the screws were drawn out of the post, which is considerably decayed, the gate fell on the boy's head in such a way as to break his neck, causing instant death.

Family of Eight Frozen to Death.

LINCOLN, NEB., Feb. 4.—Advices from Geneva state that the bodies of a man, woman and six children were found frozen stiff on the prairie, near Oberlin, Kas., yesterday. They are supposed to be a man named Lemmon and his family, who started in an emigrant wagon for Oberlin just before the recent blizzard, and have not been heard from since. A brother of Lemmon has gone to Oberlin from Geneva to identify the bodies.

The Hoisting of the German Flag.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 4—Captain Hensone who arrived at Legiep, one of the islands of the Marshall Group, yesterday relates, the circumstances of the seizure of Legiep by Germany last September. He states that the German Vice Consul, a captain and thirty armed men landed from a German warship, and raised the German flag, against the protest of Mr. C. H. Ingalls, an American, who is one of the three Caucasians engaged in business on the island. The party, after being on the island about forty-five minutes, took the flag down and returned to the warship, which proceeded to other islands in the group, and repeated similar demonstrations on each of them.

Lizzie May Ulmer Becomes Blind.

PITTSBURGH, PA., Feb. 4.—Miss Lizzie May Ulmer, who is playing in "Dad's Girl" at Library Hall, fainted last night after the close of the performance, and upon regaining consciousness was totally blind. She was confined to her room, in St. Paul, for six weeks with iritis, and this relapse is due to a severe cold and too early exertion.

Never Took Medicine.

NELSONVILLE, O., Feb. 4.—There died here yesterday, of old age, a remarkable old lady, Mrs. Abigail Craine, aged eighty-one. She had never taken a dose of medicine or been sick one hour in her life. She was one of the early pioneers of Hocking Valley, and universally esteemed.

Frightful Tobogganing Accident.

TORONTO, ONT., Feb. 4.—A toboggan, with a man and three women aboard, was started on its passage down the slide here yesterday before it was noticed that the gate near the bottom was closed. The toboggan struck the obstruction with terrific force. One woman's skull was crushed and the other women were frightfully cut about the head. The man escaped injury.

Arrested for Heavy Forgeries.

PITTSBURGH, Feb. 4.—Sheriff Kendall, of Greeley, Col., arrived here this morning, and left for home to-night with Captain A. C. Williams, who it is alleged, is wanted in Greeley, Denver and Como, Col., for forgery aggregating $10,000.

SAW SATAN.

Remarkable Story of the Experiences of a Party

Who Mocked the Lord's Supper—One Dies a Raving Maniac.

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—The following is published here this morning as a Harrisburg (Pa.) special to the World: News of a strange and mysterious occurrence at Millersburg, Dauphin County, has been received here. On Thursday morning there was a jovial crowd in a hotel at that place, and while they were imbibing Samuel Motter entered. Motter was well known throughout the county as a patent medicine peddler, and was about fifty-five years of age. His wife died in the Alms House some time ago, and since then he has been living near this place. Shortly after Motter entered, a discussion on religious subjects arose. The sacrament of the Lord's supper was talked about. Motter became very earnest in his talk, and finally dared the men to indulge in an imitation of the Lord's supper. They agreed to have it with beer and bread, and accordingly a glass was filled with that beverage. They then knelt in mock humility and with the beer in one hand and bread in the other, Motter went along distributing a bit and a sup to each. Suddenly when he was about half through, a strange noise was heard and looking up the men saw a sight that "made their blood run cold and froze the marrow in their bones." As near as the scared man could describe it, they declare that it was an immense, illformed and foul beast, with great cloven feet, painted horns and eyes that flashed fire. With wild yells the men rushed out into the open air and scattered in every direction. Finally all of them reached home, except Motter, who was away for a long time, and at last he arrived a maniac. He was put to bed and physicians sent for, but they could do nothing for him. He raved, howled and prayed, declaring he had seen the Evil One and that he was lost. His torture was terrible, but nothing could be done to relieve him and he died in the wildest agony. The death bed scene is said to have been full of horrors that can hardly be described.

ENGLISH RIOTERS.

The Carlton House and Pall Mall Gazette Office Bowldered—Several Streets Looted.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—The meeting of unemployed workmen in Trafalgar Square to-day was the largest of its kind ever held. The estimates as to the number of participants vary, but good judges say that fully 100,000 were present. On dispersing the crowd smashed the windows of the Carlton and other clubs, and also those of the Pall Mall Gazette office. It is believed that the smashing of the windows was the work of foreigners. The workmen, after the meeting in Trafalgar Square had broken up, formed in a body and marched through Piccadilly, Regent and Oxford streets, smashing the windows of the houses along the route. Arriving in front of the War Office, some of the leaders made a rush, as if to enter the building, but were deterred by the threatening attitude of the sentry stationed there, who brought his bayonet to a charge. Several shops along the line of march were looted by the mob, and the windows of the Devonshire Club, the houses of Mr. Arnold and Mr. John Morley, the new Chief Secretary for Ireland, and other private dwellings were smashed. Peaceful citizens sought refuge from the mob by fleeing into the stores and houses. The police appeared to be utterly powerless. Several of their number were severely handled by the rioters. The mob came to a halt at Hyde Park, where another meeting was held. Socialists and other speakers addressed the meeting, using the most violent and abusive language against the Government.

WITHOUT A HISTORY.

A Female Swindler Who Puzzles the Philadelphia Police—Her Great Success.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 8.—The police have captured a female swindler who puzzles them. Lottie Swiegart, a young and pretty girl, who has victimized scores of store-keepers in this city, has been representing herself as an actress, but she has been leading a desolute life in this city for a long time. Although the girl has been so successful, she is said to be a novice, and has never before been arrested. She is totally unknown to the police, and all that is known of her history is furnished by Mrs. Nickerson, with whom she boarded, at No. 868 North Tenth street, who states that the girl claimed Louisville, Ky., as her home, and that her father was a famous cattle breeder and stock raiser in that State. The money furnished for her support, she told Mrs. Nickerson, came from her grandfather, who lived in Germantown, but whose name she refused to disclose. She is in jail unable to secure $2,500 bail.

A Monster Mining Enterprise.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 8.—A mining company, with a capital of $5,000,000, has been incorporated at Helena, Mont. It will contain thirty-seven gold and silver lodes sixteen miles from Helena. Some of the principal moneyed men of Helena, St. Paul and Minneapolis are among the incorporators, and the property includes the famous North and South Pacific lodes, the Mammoth American Flag and others of the Russell group of mines.

A Chicago Boy's Fatal Play.

CHICAGO, Feb. 8.—The dead body of Mark Jadman, twelve years old, was found buried under a "snow building" in the back yard by his mother. She quickly summoned a physician, but life had been too long extinct for the service to avail. The supposition is that Mark while playing jumped into a portion of the snow structure, head first, and was too exhausted to extricate himself.

Whole Family Down with Small-Pox.

CHICAGO, Feb. 8.—Six cases of small-pox were reported to the health department today. They were discovered at 2545 Archer avenue, in a German family named Weitsel, Jos. Weitsel, the father, Catherine, his wife, and four children—two boys and two girls, whose ages range from five to nineteen years—are all attacked with the disease.

Workmen Killed by an Explosion.

PITTSBURGH, TEXAS, Feb. 8.—Near Carson eight miles east of here, last night the boiler of a pile-driving engine exploded with great force, killing engineer Martin and severely injuring several other workmen, some of whom were blown twenty feet away. Many bones were broken, and it is feared the majority of the injured men will die.

—"See here," said the managing editor to a head-liner employed on the paper, "haven't you made a mistake in the heading to this article?" "How so?" inquired the youth, anxiously "You say that the members of Congress will attend a 'horse circus.' The word 'horse' is superfluous, is it not? All circuses are horse circuses, I believe." "You think, sir, it would have been better to have omitted the word 'horse?'" "Decidedly." "It would have been all right then?" "O, Yes." "But the proof-reader is to blame. I wrote it 'house caucus.'" "Oh!"—Traveler's Magazine.

—First Boston tourist (amateur) to Southern hotel clerk—"I say, can't you put me in a front room first floor?" Hotel clerk—"No. Only room left is on fourth floor, rear." Second Boston tourist (professional) to Southern hotel clerk—"Why, Colonel, howdy-do. How's the lady and little ones—well? Glad to hear it. Come join in a 'nip' —ah, by the way, mark me a room and send my traps up." Hotel clerk to assistant—"Mark Major Brown, of Boston, to No. 2, first floor."—Macon Telegraph.

GETTING RID OF CHINESE.

A Mob in Oregon Attempting to Clean Out a Town.

PORTLAND, OREGON, Feb. 7.—To-day, as if by programme laid out, the Chinese are being driven out of Seattle. It is understood that the Knights of Labor are at the head of the movement. The Chinese are marched to the steamer Queen of the Pacific, lying at the wharf, and the rioters pay steerage passage to San Francisco for each Chinaman put aboard. The steamer plies regularly between San Francisco and Puget Sound. At this hour (2 p. m.) about one hundred have been put aboard. The Mayor of Seattle and other prominent citizens have telegraphed to Vancouver Barracks asking General Gibbon, commanding the Department of Columbia, for troops. General Gibbon has telegraphed the War Department. Chief Justice Green, of Washington Territory, has telegraphed Attorney General Garland, urging him to use his influence to have troops ordered to Seattle. About 5 p. m. the militia marched down to Chinatown and took possession. It was thoroughly deserted, except by a few merchants who had been allowed to remain temporarily. At 6 p. m. a writ of habeas corpus was issued charging that the Chinamen were illegally restrained of their liberty on board of the steamer. The writ was made returnable at 10 o'clock this evening. In the meantime the steamer was enjoined from sailing. The situation at this hour (9 p. m.) is uncertain. A dismal rain is falling, and the mob has largely dispersed. The Chinamen who are not on board the steamer are huddled together on the ocean dock. Two companies of militia are patrolling the streets. The Oregon Improvement Company also has eighty men guarding its docks and warehouses. The authorities are determined that no Chinaman shall leave unwillingly. Every effort will be made to avoid bloodshed, but the most determination is expressed on this point. The troops at Port Townsend and Vancouver are ready to move, and are only awaiting orders from Washington. Much surprise is expressed that the movement was arranged so quietly. The city is full of strangers, and it is hard to tell whence they came. It is believed that the plans were made in Tacoma, as many prominent agitators from that place, as well as reporters of both Tacoma papers arrived here yesterday. Mayor Weisbach, of Tacoma, is also here, and it is freely asserted that he is engineering the movement. The report that the Knights of Labor headed the mob to expel the Chinese seems to have no foundation. While members of that organization were in the mob, there is no evidence whatever that the Knights as an organization were connected with the measure.

THROUGH THE ICE.

An Unfortunate Affair Near Graham, Tennessee—Three Persons Drowned.

NUNNELLEY, TENN., Feb. 7.—The news reached this place to-day at noon that Mrs. Slater, wife of Fred Slater, was drowned in Millcreek, near Graham Station. Mr. Slater, who is employed by the Warner Iron Company to run the pump which conveys water to the Nunnelley Mines, had taken his family, wife and two little children, and gone out on the ice. He had his wife and two children on a small sled, and was carrying them up the pond on the ice and the colored girl was walking close behind the sled. They had ascended the pond about three-quarters of a mile, and finding the ice rapidly melting they decided to return home, but this conclusion was reached too late. Just as the sled stopped, the ice gave way and the unfortunate family went under. The colored girl, seeing the ice sinking, rushed for the sled, and she too was carried beneath the ice. Mr. Slater, after many unsuccessful attempts to rescue the wife and children from the water, which is about ten feet deep, cried for help and was heard by two gentlemen, who reached him just in time to save him and the oldest child, about two years of age. The wife, colored girl and baby, eight months old, were drowned. The baby was found a short time afterward, and Dr. Thompson was called in, but reached the baby too late to restore life. The other two bodies were found this evening.

Frightful Runaway.

BOSTON, Feb. 7.—About seven o'clock this evening Joseph Aronson and his niece, while driving, turned from Beacon street into Tremont. The sleigh runners scraped the car tracks and made a noise which frightened the horse, the cutter was overturned and Aronson and neice thrown into the street. The horse ran up the sidewalk through a dense crowd of people who were gathered at the door of Tremont Temple, another crowd in front of Horticultural Hall, and a stream of people turning into Bromfield and Winter streets to go to the sacred concert in Music Hall, scattering them right and left. Many people were thrown into the street, while others narrowly escaped by jumping into doorways. About fifteen people were injured, and a large number fainted.

Rabid Dog and a Well-Directed Shot.

AUGUSTA, GA., Feb. 7.—A terrible scene was witnessed at the corner of Reynolds and Forsythe streets last evening, when a huge bull-dog grasped a boy named Jimmy Gallagher. Catching the boy up in his mouth the dog shook him like a rat as he ran down the street. Crowds collected, which maddened the animal. A shot-gun was brought into play, when the dog dropped the lacerated child and dashed into the crowd, biting left and right. Another shot blew the dog's brains out. The child can not live.

The Whipping-Post and Pillory.

NEWCASTLE, DEL., Feb. 7.—Harrison and William Rothwell, John Peacham and George Norris, all colored, and Frank Playford, were publicly whipped on their bare backs in the Newcastle jail-yard yesterday morning, receiving from five to twenty lashes each. Edwin J. Hollingsworth was confined one hour in the pillory. The thermometer was near zero, adding naturally to the legal punishment and greatly aggravating the process of torture.

Woman Found Murdered.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 7.—Mrs. F. Lippert was found last night by her husband at Millstadt, Centreville, seven miles south of Belleville, Ill., in an unconscious condition. An examination of her body showed that she had been struck on the temple with a rock, and had sustained a fracture of the skull, which resulted in her death at 3 o'clock this morning. The person who threw the stone is unknown, as is also the cause of the assault.

Greece.

ATHENS, Feb. 7.—Greece has informed the Porte that she has no intention of attacking Turkey.

Recruiting for Texas.

FORT WORTH, Feb. 7.—A company of United States soldiers came in yesterday en route for Fort Concho, Tex. They are fifty in number and are from the barracks at Columbus, where they had been recruited. Several of the soldiers stated that recruiting officers had been instructed to enlist all the available men at once, and it was reported that trouble with Mexico on the border was a possibility at no distant day.

Cholera.

MADRID, Feb. 7.—Several deaths from cholera are reported at Tarifa.

A Suicide Successful in Another Way.

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 7.—The body of a man was found in Pleasant Run, near the city, this afternoon. He had attempted to commit suicide by hanging himself from a tree overhanging the stream. The rope broke and he was precipitated to the bed of the creek. He was about twenty-five years old, and his name is supposed, from papers found on his person, to be Johannes Abe.

A Filibustering Expedition.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—A filibustering expedition, consisting of twenty-five men, which sailed from New York, is reported to have gone to reinforce the revolutionary movement in Honduras.

XLIXTH CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—SENATE.—Several petitions were presented and measures reported. Among the latter a joint resolution by Mr. Blair for a constitutional amendment extending the right of suffrage to women. Mr. Riddleberger offered a resolution defining the Senate's prerogative, and explained his desire was to bring up for debate the subject of calling on the President for reasons. Its consideration was objected to, and it went over. The Utah resolutions appointing commissioners were referred to the Judiciary Committee. The bill for the retirement of Colonel G. W. Getty with the rank of Brigadier General went over at Mr. Logan's suggestion. Mr. Pugh submitted a substitute for Mr. Riddleberger's resolution, which Mr. Hoar characterized a stump speech. The Electoral count bill was then debated, and a motion to recommit resulted—yeas 30, nays 22. There was no political division in the vote. The Dakota bill was placed before the Senate, but an executive session was agreed to, which lasted from 4:35 p. m. to 5:35 p. m., when the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—Immediately after the reading of the journal, Mr. Holman, of Indiana, offered the following resolutions: "Resolved, That the House has received with profound sorrow the intelligence of the death of Thomas A. Hendricks, late Vice President of the United States. Resolved, That the business of the House be suspended in order that the eminent services and private virtues of the deceased may be appropriately commemorated. Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to communicate these resolutions to the Senate." Eulogisms were given by Messrs. Bynum, McCreary, Long, Throckmorton, Browne, Randall, Springer, Geddes, Lowry, Hell, Kleiner and Holman. The resolutions were unanimously adopted, and the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 3.—SENATE.—The Chair laid a letter before the Senate from the Attorney General asking an additional appropriation of $50,000 for jurors and $150,000 for witnesses of U. S. Courts. Referred. A resolution was reported in opposition to a joint fisheries commission. The Riddleberger-Pugh resolutions were then taken up, discussed and laid on the table. They were again called up by Mr. Riddleberger and finally referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The Dakota bill was debated by Messrs. Logan and Morgan, and at 4:50 p. m. the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—An investigation was ordered in reference to the misapplication of appropriations by the Signal Corps. Mr. Bland's resolution in relation to silver circulation and the policy of the Treasury Department was adopted by a vote of 168 to 88. A number of bills were reported, after which the bill to abolish certain fees for official service to American vessels was considered in committee of the whole. Pending action on the bill, the committee rose at 3:30 and resolved itself into committee on the bill relating to taxation of fractional parts of a gallon of distilled spirits. Without action the committee rose, and at 5:15 the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4.—SENATE.—In the Senate Executive communications, petitions and memorials were read. The bill providing for a new Assistant Secretary was called up and discussed until 2 p. m., when it went over. The Dakota bill was then considered, Senator Harrison speaking at length. The report of the Directors of the Union Pacific was received from the President, and at 4:30 p. m. the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—In the House, the call of committees brought no bill of importance. Bills were passed to divide the Eastern Judicial District of Arkansas, to rearrange certain counties in Texas in judicial districts, and to regulate the taking of depositions. The bill to secure the payment of State claims was discussed, without action. At 1:30 p. m. debate on the Dingley shipping bill was resumed, and the measure passed. An attempt to fix a day for the consideration of the Fitz John Porter bill failed, and at 4:20 p. m. the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5.—SENATE.—Senator Sewell's bill relating to the annual appropriation for the militia was passed. The bill for the admission of Dakota was debated by Butler, Logan, Morgan, Plumb, Edmunds, Beck and Call, and was passed by a vote of 32 yeas, 22 nays. The credentials of re-election of Senator Sherman were presented by Mr. Payne. Senate adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE.—Messrs. Culbertson, of Texas, and Hammond, of Georgia, were appointed to fill vacancies on the Committee of American Shipping Interests. Mr. Randall, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the pension appropriation bill which appropriates $75,754,000, an increase of $15,000,000 over last year. The Fitz John Porter bill was made a continuing special order from Thursday, February 11, until Thursday, February 18, and the House adjourned till Monday.

IN COMMITTEES—The Senate Committee on Education has reported a bill for the appointment of five commissioners to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic. The House Committee on Military Affairs decided to report favorably the bill for the protection of the people of Arizona and New Mexico, which provides for the organization of a regiment of volunteer cavalry in each Territory for a year's service.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—SENATE.—The Committee on Privileges and Elections reported a bill fixing the time for the meeting of Congress in 1887, and every second year thereafter, on the first Monday in October, and in 1886, and every second year thereafter, on the second Monday in November. The Committee on the Library reported a resolution providing that marble busts of the Vice Presidents of the United States shall be placed in vacant niches in the Senate Chamber. Mr. Ingall's offer a resolution looking to the requirement of the issue of one and two dollar United States notes. There was a lively discussion of a resolution of inquiry offered by Mr. Eustis, in relation to an alleged discrimination against silver by the Assistant Treasurer at New Orleans. Mr. Blair tried to get up the educational bill, which was the regular order, and Mr. Hoar gave notice that he would afterwards call up the Bankruptcy bill. A bill was passed providing for the sale of certain property in Chicago to the Chicago and Great Western Railroad. The Eustis resolution was again taken up, the Educational bill going over as unfinished business. Mr. Teller spoke against the policy of the Secretary of the Treasury with regard to silver. Mr. Gorman defended the Administration. Mr. Sherman, in defining the duties of Treasury officials, was turned to a vigorous discussion of the Senate's inquiry for "reason" from the Executive Departments by an observation of Mr. Morrill's. Messrs. Pugh and Morgan joined in the debate, which closed at 4:10 p. m., and the resolution of Mr. Eustis went over until to-morrow. After an executive session, which lasted until 6 p. m., the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—There was the regular call of the States for the introduction of bills. The Committee on Accounts reported adversely a joint resolution abolishing all mileage fees and authorizing each member of Congress to employ a clerk. It was placed on the calendar by request. The Committee on Labor reported a resolution calling on the Postmaster General for information in regard to the eight-hour law and the letter-carriers. The same committee reported a bill constituting eight hours a day's work for all laborers employed by the United States. The House at 4:10 went into committee of the whole on the fractional gallon liquor tax bill. No action was reached, when the committee rose and the House adjourned.

No Parade St. Patrick's Day.

CHICAGO, Feb. 8.—St. Patrick's Day will not be celebrated in Chicago with a parade. The subject has been largely discussed in Irish circles. A majority oppose it, giving as a reason that the money expended could be placed in the Parnell Fund for the relief of the poor and oppressed in Ireland. The Irish clergy universally oppose street parades at the present time. Different Irish societies will hold meetings on the 14th inst., at which time the subject will be discussed.

Proceedings of the Legislature.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 30.—SENATE—In the Senate the Committee on the General Statutes reported favorably on a bill providing for recording attachments in certain cases, but it was recommitted to the same committee. The Judiciary Committee reported favorably on the bill making seduction a felony, with amendments confining the provisions of the act to unmarried women. On account of the presence of a number of ladies further discussion of the bill was postponed. The same committee reported favorably on a bill to repeal the act providing for the State geological survey. The bill was debated for some time. The vote was finally taken, and the bill was passed by a vote of 20 to 5. Senator Hill's resolution, introduced yesterday, that Messrs. Mason, Ford & Co. be released from their contract to work convicts outside the penitentiary, was called up. There was very little discussion over the resolution. Senator D. H. Smith moved that it be laid upon the table. The vote was taken and resulted as follows: Yeas 17, nays 6.

HOUSE—The House did nothing of importance and adjourned until February 2.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 1.—SENATE.—House bill 196, relating to making seduction a felony, with amendment, was called up. Objection being made to its consideration. It fell into the orders of the day. A communication from the Governor was received and read. The document relates to the management of the penitentiary, and advises that legislative remedy for certain hurtful contingencies which threaten be provided. Inclosed with the communication was one from the Mason-Ford Company, asking release from their contract as lessees of convict labor, and the reply of the Directors of the Penitentiary refusing to cancel the contract, and a supplemental letter from the lessees notifying the Directors that on the 1st day of March next they would throw up their contract with the State. Communication of the Governor and accompanying documents were ordered printed, and were referred to the Committee on Penitentiary. Mr. Boles offered a joint resolution calling for all information in regard to convict labor contracts from May 3, 1880, up to the time of the present contract. Rules suspended and resolution adopted. The bill to amend Section 2, Article 31, Chapter 29, General Statutes, title "Crimes and Punishment," relating to Judges of Circuit and Common Pleas and Chancery Courts, and their connections with guardianships and administratorships, etc., was taken up. Mr. Hill moved to amend so as to allow a judge to act as guardian for his own child. Adopted. Mr. Martin moved to amend so as to allow him to act as guardian for his own family. Adopted. The bill as amended was passed.

HOUSE.—Not in session.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 2.—Nothing of importance was transacted in either house.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 3.—SENATE—The bill making seduction a felony, which had been passed by the House, was taken up for consideration and was passed without much opposition. The Senate took up the special order of the day, a bill that proposes to give the quarterly courts of this State concurrent jurisdiction with circuit courts in suits involving under $50. Mr. J. R. W. Smith offered as an amendment that the City of Louisville be excepted. His motion was agreed to. Several other amendments were offered and rejected, and Senator Feland moved that the bill and amendments be laid upon the table. This motion was lost by a vote of 19 to 11. Nearly every Senator then wanted to amend the bill by excepting his own counties. They were recommitted to the Committee on Courts of Justice. The high-license bill was taken up and, on motion, was considered in Committee of the Whole. The bill was referred to the Committee on Judiciary to examine its constitutionality.

HOUSE.—Bills introduced: Providing that no person shall be eligible for the office of County Superintendent of Schools unless he has a first-class certificate from a County or State Board of Education; also, that no County Superintendent shall either directly or indirectly act as the agent of any publishing house. Providing that the County Superintendent shall serve four years, and to be eligible must have certificates from the County Judge, County Clerk, and County Attorney, who shall form a Board of Examination. To repeal the law which allows $75 per year for the maintenance of each pauper idiot.

FRANKFORT, Feb 4.—SENATE.—The bill to prohibit the sale of deadly weapons passed. The bill to make gambling a felony was made the special order for next Tuesday.

HOUSE.—The pleuro-pneumonia bill was debated all day, but without conclusion.

FRANKFORT, KY., Feb. 5.—SENATE.—The Senate did practically nothing so far as reaching results is concerned. W. F. Neat, of Adair, (Republican) offered the following joint resolution, which under the rules lies over one day: "Whereas, Grave and serious charges are being made through the public press of the State against Hon. Thomas Henry, Clerk of the Court of Appeals, to the effect that he is guilty of conduct unbecoming an officer, and has virtually vacated and farmed out his office. Therefore that justice may be done Mr. Henry, and the people of the State may know, as they have a right to know, whether said charges are true or false. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky: That a committee of two Senators and three Representatives be appointed by the Speaker of each house respectively, who shall have the right to summons and examine witnesses, the summons to be executed by an officer of this State, to whom directed and having power to execute same, and report to this Assembly as early as practicable as to said charges, and if true what steps should be taken in the matter by the General Assembly."

HOUSE.—The House continued the discussion of the pleuro-pneumonia bill until 3:30, when a vote was reached, resulting yeas 47, nays 42, and the bill was lost, not having received the constitutional majority of 51 votes necessary to pass a bill appropriating more than $100. The friends of the measure will fight for a reconsideration and another vote.

Miscellaneous Items.

COVINGTON wants a good water supply, independent of that furnished by Newport.

THE State Senate has passed the bill prohibiting the sale of certain deadly weapons in this State. It provides that any person who shall hereafter sell a pistol, bowie knife, dirk-knife, brass-knucks or slung-shot, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $25 nor more than $100, or imprisonment from ten to thirty days, or both fined and imprisoned, in the jury's discretion.

ANOTHER ARMY BILL.

A Useless Proposition from a Republican to Further Drain the National Treasury.

The success of the army in procuring a law for the compulsory retirement of officers on reaching the age of sixty-four seems to have over-stimulated ingenuity in devising schemes for further swelling the retired list.

One of these projects appears in the bill of Senator Cullom, which declares that any officer now on the active list of the army who served in the war of the rebellion, either in the volunteer or regular forces, shall, on his application to the President, be put on the retired list with the rank and retired pay of the grade next above the one which he holds at the time of his application.

This is an extraordinary measure, and its necessity is in no respect obvious. If full advantage should be taken of it, the entire military establishment would go to pieces. Every general officer in the service, every Colonel commanding a regiment and nearly every field officer served in the civil war, and hence would be able to demand retirement. The war ended only a little more than twenty years ago, and it is therefore evident that a very large part of the higher officers of the army would be included in the privileges of this bill, and nearly all those occupying the most responsible positions. The only officers who could not retire under its authority would be the younger ones, who have taken part in no war on a large scale. Undoubtedly such a scheme would increase the flow of promotion, but it would make no account of the interests of the country.

It may be said that there would be little anxiety to give up full pay and active service for three-fourths pay and retired service, and that this bill is only designed to open the retired list, now limited by law, for the benefit of a small number of officers. But it really does much more. It offers a premium on applications for retirement. It gives the applicant the pay of the grade above his own. There is much complaint of the length of time that elapses, during peace, between one promotion and another. Hence there is good reason to suppose that while an officer who is within a few years of an expected advancement in grade might prefer to wait for it, officers who have just received a promotion may be glad to take three-fourths of a rate of pay higher than the one on which they are likely to remain for years, especially as they would get this pay with absolute freedom from active duty, and the full command of their time. Thus each set of promotions might be followed by temptations to retire, and these, in turn, by others, so keeping the service constantly unsettled.

But even were as little advantage taken of the privileges of the scheme as its projectors seem to expect, it is none the less based on an unsound principle. Why should the most experienced officers in the service be invited to leave it, and be even tempted by the prospect of retiring on higher rank and pay? The knowledge gained by the actual command of large bodies of troops in a long war will disappear from the service fast enough by natural casualties and by the enforced retirement for age. There are many officers in the army only a little more than forty years old, who served during the civil war, and are now in the prime of life. Being thus full of the possibility of usefulness for many years to come, and in sound health, such officers apparently should not be allowed to step aside, enjoying three-fourths of an increased pay through the remainder of life, even should they desire to do so.—N. Y. Sun.

AN UN SHING STATESMAN.

John Sherman Makes Statements Which Ought to Make a Cucumber Turn Crimson.

Senator John Sherman, when addressing the Ohio Legislature the other day, was kind enough to speak well of the New York election laws as safeguards against fraudulent voting. He held up the New York system as an example for Ohio to imitate. The purity of the ballot, he thinks, is not sufficiently protected in Ohio:

> "The time has arrived when both political parties should address themselves to this question, and prevent fraudulent voting. For myself, I could never see in State affairs that politics should be brought into play. It is different with great National questions. In State affairs you should be patriotic, regardless of political affiliations, and regard this question from the same standpoint. It is apparent that there ought to be a general revision of the election laws. The purity of the ballot is dependent upon single districts and small voting precincts. The occurrences which have happened recently should convince men of all political opinions that a radical change should be made."

This plea for honest voting, for the purity of the ballot, for additional safeguards against fraud in elections, sounds strange enough from the lips of the statesman who was the chief promoter in Louisiana of the fraud by which the vote of that State was stolen ten years ago, and who received as his pay the office of Secretary of the Treasury. But Sherman did not blush.

Then the unblushing statesman went on to compliment the man whom he helped to defraud:

> "I invite your attention to the example set by the great State of New York. In that State, in 1868, great frauds were perpetrated by a man whose name will be repudiated by any party—Boss Tweed. Then it was that men of both political parties went to work and reformed their election laws. If it had not been done civil war would have been inevitable. Men of both parties resolved upon reformation, and it resulted in the best election law in the world. In the dispute, last fall, over the election, they awaited the official vote, and the matter was ended. One of the most distinguished men to bring about this reform was Samuel J. Tilden, and I am glad to speak of it here."

At this point the Ohio legislators burst into applause. Perhaps it was the name of Tilden that provoked the demonstration. Perhaps it was the statement that elections are purer in New York than in Ohio or Louisiana, for example. Perhaps it was the consummate audacity which enabled John Sherman to keep his blood in his heels while awakening memories shameful enough to have made a cucumber turn crimson. He never blushed.

Did any man or woman living ever see the color of conscious guilt come into John Sherman's cheeks?—N. Y. Sun.

Its Policy Fixed.

The decision of the House Committee on Civil-Service Reform to report adversely Mr. Seney's bill for the repeal of the reform law will probably end the idle chatter about doing away with that measure. While there has not been a time since its passage when a proposition to wipe it out stood any prospect of adoption, so many threats have been indulged in that the unanimous action of the House committee, composed of stalwart Democrats as it is, will have the effect of quieting all agitation of the subject.

To the extent that Civil-Service reform has been embodied in law, it meets the general approval of the people. It has been applied as yet to not more than fifteen per cent. of the employes of the Government. Beyond these nothing but the promises and the policy of the President prevent a clean sweep at any time. With the law in force certain faithful employes are secure in their positions during good behavior, no matter which party may be in the ascendancy, and the political managers are powerless to blackmail them for campaign purposes. The repeal of the law, even if it could be effected, would not change the policy of the present Administration in the least, and it would fix on the party responsible for it a stigma which could not easily be removed.—Chicago Herald.

GOVERNMENT WAGES.

A Suggestion That the Remuneration Should Not Be Higher Than If the Employes Were "Private Individuals."

There was force in the suggestion of the printers employed in the Government Printing Office at Washington that they were as well entitled to higher wages than were paid to printers in private employ as the clerks in the departments are to higher salaries than individuals and private corporations pay for the same kind of work. The force of the suggestion is not of a kind to strengthen the demand of the printers. It does not show or tend to show that they should receive higher wages for their work because they are in Government service than they would for the same work in private employ. But it does show that the Government clerks should be governed by the same rule.

It is not surprising that honest artisans and workingmen in the service not only of the United States but of the State and the city, should have their attention called to the fact that Government clerks are better paid than clerks in private life. Nor is it very surprising that they should conclude that they should receive similar consideration. But the true remedy for the irregularity is not in making the workingmen employed by Government a favored class. It is in putting the clerical force upon a proper basis in the matter of wages.

There is no sound reason why the Government of the Nation, the State, or the city, should pay any more for the service it requires than a private individual would have to pay for the same service. And if it were not for the spoils system any overpayment of public employes would be condemned so strongly and generally that it could not possibly be continued. But for that system, indeed, the notion of such overpayment could never have got itself established in practice. If it had never come to be regarded as necessary that a Government servant should bear a particular party label, or that his employment should depend upon considerations wholly distinct from his capacity or fitness, the idea of paying him any more than a private employe would never have been entertained for a moment.

If the civil service ever reaches the point—as it one day may—of absolute divorce from politics and the spoils system, this discrimination between public and private employment, which is one of the worst effects of the system, will be wiped out. A government wholly free in the manner of selecting its employes will not consent to pay more for service rendered than private employers do.—Detroit Free Press.

A Radical Change.

The people of the United States hardly understand, we should say, the magnitude of the change which came over the country with the election of Mr. Cleveland in regard to one very important matter. Indeed, the change is of such a character and has taken place so completely that the people have adjusted themselves to it and do not perceive the evidences of it without some effort. We refer to the practical disappearance from our politics of what was known as the Southern question. The first year of the new Administration has not yet passed. The Cabinet, with its two prominent "rebel Brigadiers" and the Delaware statesman who was charged to the Confederate account, has been unchanged. Congress has met and reorganized. The public offices have undergone a considerable change. The South has had full opportunity to assert that aggressive spirit which was supposed to be ready to break out as soon as the reins in the hands of Republicans were relaxed, and yet the old questions regarding the war and the fruits of the Union victory are to all intents and purpose not heard of. For Mr. Boutelle's ill-advised attempt to receive the dead sectional issue was met with such spirit and skill and good sense on the Democratic side that it may be regarded as but a momentary and wholly unsuccessful appeal to the old passions. The business of the country is going on, not as well as we could wish, certainly, but with no check and and no disturbance that can be attributed to the change in the Government and none that any intelligent person thinks of attributing to the influence of the South.—N. Y. Times.

Those Land Rulings.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office has written the following letter to W. R. Green, a banker at Bangor, D. T.:

> "In reply to your letter of the 8th instant, desiring to be informed as to my 'aims and purposes' in my late rulings, you are advised that I propose to execute the laws as they stand. Entry men of public lands are required to comply with the conditions prescribed by law. Their entries must be confirmed by this office before patents can issue. The action of the register and receiver in accepting proofs and issuing certificates is preliminary only, not final or conclusive, but subject to review and final action by this office and department. Conveyance after final entry and issue of receivers' receipt are allowable and legal as between the parties, but a purchaser before patent takes his own risk. The Government has the right and may cancel the entry for fraud, illegality or non compliance with law. These are not 'innocent purchasers,' and have never been so treated in the practice or decisions of this department or by the courts. For your further information on this point you are referred to the decision of Secretary Teller, in the case of C. P. Cogswell, 3 Ld., 23. I do not propose to confirm fraudulent entries if I know them to be so, and I do propose to find out those which are honest and to separate them from those which are found to be otherwise, and to have the honest entries patented and the fraudulent canceled."

Mr. Carlisle seems to stand at the head of his party in point of ability and statesmanship, and, though extremely modest himself, there now appears to be a power among the Democratic masses of the country that will likely result in his nomination for President the next term and his elevation to that office. Such would not at all be a result to be wondered at.—State Journal.

RARELY does a Legislature hold its session without an effort being made to create five or six new counties, and the present is no exception. Mr. Thorne, the chairman of the Committee on Propositions and Grievances, has a long petition, asking that a new county be made out of portions of Lewis, Elliott and Carter counties. Many reasons are assigned why a new court-house ought to be built and county officers elected in this district. It is proposed to call the new county Hindman, in honor of the present Lieutenant Governor. A remonstrance of exceedingly voluminous proportions has been sent in against the petition. The second proposed new county is to be created out of portions of Lawrence and Johnson counties. The third county is to be made by dividing Ballard in half, and one of the halves to be called Carlisle.

IF there is anything in God Almighty's world that I despise it is a man with a little cotton string for a backbone, with a couple of ribs sewed to it. Judas Iscariot betrayed his Master for thirty pieces of silver, but there are men to-day who will do it for nothing and board themselves."—Sam Jones.

THE Louisville wist may cut up monkey shines about Judge Mulligan's bill to move the Capital to Lexington, but they must not fail to remember that Lexington is the place for the seat of Government and it will be as sure to come here as the sun is to shine. The people of Kentucky are determined to have the Capital in easy reach of all sections of the State, instead of having to be side-tracked in some little out of the way place.—Transcript.

MR. NEALE's bill to regulate the fees of pro tem Commonwealth's Attorneys, is intended to remedy a great wrong and drain upon the treasury. Under the law, as it is now, the courts are in the habit of allowing all the way from $20 to $100 a day to such attorneys, which must be paid out of the State treasury. Under the bill proposed by Mr. Neale the courts are restricted to an allowance of $7 a day for such attorneys, but the bill also allows the pro tem attorney one-half the fees and commissions of the regular attorney on all judgments rendered by the State while the pro tem attorney is acting. This will pay the pro tem attorney amply, while the taking of half his fees and commissions will stimulate the regular attorney to attend to his business. These allowances cannot be taken out of the salary of the regular attorney, as the Court of Appeals has often decided.—Capital.

A NUMBER of circumstances have conspired of late to put the Legislature in a bad humor, and agitate that aged question, the "Capital removal." It is not the Capital newspaper, or the Capital Brewery or the Capital Hotel, or the Capital Photograph Gallery, but the Capital City, that they talk about removing. The proposition has received more favor this winter than ever before, because as friends of the removal state, the present accommodations for legislative work are wholly inadequate, and will never be replaced by better ones, as long as the seat of Government remains where it is. The difficulty that lies in the way of moving the Capital is a financial one. The State cannot afford the expense incident to such an undertaking, at this time. In answer to this it is urged that either Lexington or Louisville will undertake the entire expenses of removal, or of providing suitable buildings and donate, besides, the ground to the State. The present Capital is a disgrace to the State, and a number of Legislators have patriotically announced that they will vote for anything proposed, rather than consign themselves or their successors to another term within its walls.—Frankfort Capital.

The Gambling Bill.

The following is full text of Senator D. H. Smith's bill making gambling a felony.

Be it enacted: Section 1—Whosoever, with or without compensation shall aid and assist in setting up, carrying on or conducting, a keno bank faro bank or other machine or contrivance used in betting, whereby money or other things may be won or lost, or whosoever shall for compensation, percentage or commission set up, conduct or carry on a game of cards, whereby money or other things is won or lost, or shall without compensation, percentage or commission aid in setting up, conducting or carrying on a game so set up, carried on or conducted for compensation, percentage or commission, shall be fined $500 and cost, and confined in the penitentiary not less than one nor more than three years. He shall be deemed infamous after conviction, and be forever thereafter disqualified from exercising the right of suffrage and from holding any office of honor, trust or profit, whether it be state, county, city or municipal, and shall not be competent to testify in any case or proceeding, civil or criminal. The judgment of conviction shall in every case recite such infamy and disqualification, and shall not be valid without such recital.

Sec. 2. Change of name of any of games, tables, machines, or contrivances included in this act shall not prevent the conviction of any person violating the provision thereof.

Sec. 3. An indictment for violating any of the provisions of this act may charge the accused in one count with the commission of any or all of the offenses set forth in this act.

Sec. 5. Procedure in causes arising under this act, shall be the same as prescribed by the Criminal Code in other cases of felony, except that in no case shall bond for appearance of the accused be for less sum than $500.

Sec. 5. Prosecutions for violations of this act may be had within five years after the commission of the offense, but not later.

Sec. 6. All acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Sec. 7. This act shall take effect from its passage.

About 80 head of cattle at Lancaster on court day, and selling at 4½ cents.

In Barren county R. F. Wood sold to Wm. Beard a pair of large mules for $300.

The distillers at Lexington are purchasing large quantities of corn at $2 a barrel.

Three saloon-keepers were fined $200 each at Owensboro for permitting dice throwing on their counters.

The Henderson Journal says that the wheat crop looks fresh and beautiful, and promises an abundant yield.

Two editors, a preacher, a lawyer and a candidate for coroner were all working at one wood pile at the Paul House Monday.—Mt. Olivet Democrat.

Good tobacco lands in Central Ky. readily rent for $8 to $12 per acre. There will be a large crop pitched again this season—Farmers Home Journal.

Maj. J. F. Maury, jailer of Bath county, died last week. J. T. Kimbrough has been appointed to fill the vacancy, and has consented to give the salary to Miss Mary Maury, sister of the deceased.

The announcement is made that Major T. J. Megibben, of Cynthiana, Ky., is to sell his entire racing establishment at the Madison Square Garden, in New York, during the last week of February.

The clerk of the Boyd county court recently recorded a deed for 38,000 acres of land in that and Greenup counties. The land consideration was $280,000. The deed covered over forty pages of the record book.

Col. John T. Hughes, of Lexington, sold to J. G. Harvey, a banker of Baltimore, Md., a pair of 16 hands, closely matched, extra fine bay harness geldings for $1,500. Also to some party a single harness gelding for $350.

On last Monday the fire was lighted under eight boiling furnaces preparatory to manufacturing iron nails in part at the Norton Iron Works. This gives employment to about thirty hands who would otherwise be idle.—Boyd county Enterprise.

The council of Mt. Sterling, levied a tax of $20 on each insurance company doing business there, and the State Board of Underwriters has ordered ten cents to be added to each $100 insured in that place, which will cost the citizens $1,200 a year to increase the revenue $270.

The breeders of horses of all kinds so they are good horses of their classes, are doing better than farmers in any other branch of farming. Prices are good, for good horses, and the demand is good. The main point is to produce and raise good ones, and they easily find purchasers.—Farmer's Home Journal.

The Stanford Journal records that the people of the McKinney neighborhood of Lincoln county, had been suffering largely from thieves and burglars and some of them getting good information of the perpetrators, called others together, when a posse was formed for the purpose of bringing the criminals to justice. This body of men equipped and ready went to the house of a suspect, and taking him out to a neighboring tree threatened to hang him if he did not disclose his accomplices. On his testimony about ten men and one or two women were arrested, a large amount of stolen goods found and the parties landed in jail. The Journal states that the 30 armed citizens escorting their prisoners into Stanford was a remarkable sight.

Last Monday afternoon about half past twelve o'clock, a personal difficulty which came near proving fatal to two of our most prominent citizens, Judge R. A. Burton, Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue and Samuel Avritt, Esq., a prominent, member of the Lebanon bar. Judge Burton received a cut directly across the throat, passing through the "Adam's Apple." The gash was about six inches long and an inch deep. It made a ghastly looking wound, but by reasons of its location not a dangerous one. The windpipe was not cut, nor internal jugular veins. The anterior or external jugular vein was severed, which caused the loss of considerable amount of blood. Mr. Averitt received several blows over the head with a heavy piece of iron, which cut through the scalp in several places; but, as the skull escaped injury his hurts were likewise not dangerous.—Lebanon Times.

Ches. Chambers on trial last week at Bloomington, Ind., for the express robbery, was given two years in the penitentiary and fined $100.

CARRYING THE MAIL.

At a meeting of the Democratic Executive Committee of Boone county, held in the Court-house in Burlington, Ky., on Monday, December 7th, 1885, it was ordered.

That a Democratic primary election be held in the several voting precincts in Boone county, on the first Saturday in April 1886, between the hours of 8 o'clock a. m., and 7 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating Democratic candidates for Circuit Clerk, County Judge, County Clerk, County Attorney, Assessor, Jailer, County Superintendent, Surveyor and Coroner.

That the qualification of voters shall be the same as those specified in the call of the district committee, which is as follows: "That no one shall be eligible to vote at said election except those who are and will be entitled to a vote at the August election 1886, according to the laws of the State, and who are identified with the Democratic party, and who if voting at the November election, 1884, voted for the Democratic Electors for President and Vice-President."

That the Democratic voters of the county may have the privilege in voting for the county offices alone, to to express a first and second choice when there are more than two candidates for one office, so that before the board to count the votes the hindmost candidate shall be dropped and those votes cast for said hindmost candidate expressing a second choice, said second choice shall be counted as first choice for the candidate so named.

That the clerks of the several voting precincts together with the chairman of the Democratic County Committee shall constitute a Board to compare poll-books and count the vote, and shall, upon ascertaining who has received a majority of the votes cast for the respective offices, declare said candidate the regular Democratic nominee for said office. Said Board shall meet at the court-house in Burlington, at 1 o'clock the following Monday, April 5, 1886.

That the clerks appointed in the several precincts, prepare the poll-books to include both district and county candidates, and at the close of the polls, shall duly certify seal and deliver to the chairman of the Executive Committee of the county, on the day named in sec. 4.

That a list of the officers of the election shall be published in the Boone County RECORDER the first week of said paper's publication after the first Monday in March, 1886, and said officers shall consist of two judges and a clerk, and in case of anyone failing to serve who has been selected any good Democrat present may be selected to fill the vacancy.

Done by order of the committee.

Vanderbilt's Wealth.

Let us try and describ Mr. Vanderbilt's great fortune in terms of linear, square and cubic measurement and the weight. Every body understands these terms, and they make a definite impression on men's minds.

If this sum of $200,000,000 was in standard silver dollars it would present such a feature as this:

Put lengthwise, dollar after dollar, it would stretch a distance of 4,671 miles, making a silver track from New York across the ocean to Liverpool.

Piled up, dollar on dollar, it would reach a height of 355 miles.

Laid flat on the ground, the dollars would cover a space of nearly sixty acres.

The weight of the mass of silver would be 4,170 tons.

To transport it would require 358 cars, carrying twenty tons each (this is the capacity of the strongest freight cars) and making a train just two and one half miles long.

On an ordinary grade it would require twelve locomotives to haul the train. On roads of steep grades and sharp curves, fifteen or twenty locomotives would be needed.

In $1 bills this two-hundred-million fortune would assume such shapes as this:

The bills stretched lengthwise would extend 23,674 miles, or nearly the circumference of the earth at the equator.

Spread out on the ground they would cover 746 acres, or nearly the whole surface of Central Park, including ponds and reservoirs.

A safe deposit vault to contain these bills would require to be twenty three feet long, twenty-two feet wide and twenty feet high.

THE State Senate passed Senator Bush's bill prohibiting the sale of certain deadly weapons in this State It provides that any person who shall hereafter sell a pistol, bowie-knife, dirk-knife, brass-knucks or slung-shot, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $25 nor more than $100, or imprisonment from ten to thirty days, or both fined and imprisoned, in the jury's discretion. Dealers over the way in Indiana and Ohio will doubtless be pleased to see this bill become a law.

The Courier-Journal (HENRY WATTERSON Editor-in-Chief) is the acknowledged Representative Newspaper of the South, is Democratic in politics, and first, last, and all the time is for a reduction of the War Taxes as levied on the people by the tariff now in force.

The Weekly Courier-Journal

is the best weekly newspaper published in the United States, and for the quantity and quality of matter that appears in each issue of it, it is the CHEAPEST. Its telegraphic news facilities outclass any other paper, and it has the services of the ablest writers and correspondents in the country. It presents the news of the week from every section of the World. It gives to its readers throughout the year a greater number of Serial and Short Stories by prominent and popular writers than any of the high-priced magazines. It is in every respect a Model Political and Family Paper.

The Weekly Courier-Journal has by far the Largest Circulation of any Democratic Newspaper in America.

It is acknowledged by press and people throughout the United States to be a great paper; great in size; great in enterprise; great in ability; great in its correctness of information; great in variety; great in every sense of the word. It is the paper that everybody should have. To be without it is a great opportunity lost. Those who once take it are not willing to be without it in their homes.

THE COMBINATION FENCE

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

The groundhog winter has been a success so far, and it is to be hoped that it will continue uninterruptedly until the cold weather in store is exhausted, when it will give way to gentle spring.

Viola Lodge No. 278, I. O. O. F., at their regular meeting last Saturday night, confered the First and Initiatory degrees on two different candidates, and have two candidates to be initiated next Saturday night, and Viola intends to keep the ball rolling.

Remember that Geo. Huschart & Co. of Lawrenceburg, Indiana, can always give satisfaction both as to price and style of work, so when you want to buy a tombstone or a monument go to their yard or call on John Beall, of Hebron, Ky., their agent.

Several days since Everett Walton sent from Missouri to his grandfather Benjamin Rouse and his Uncle W. I. Rouse, each a jack rabbit skin. His grandfather stuffed the one sent him, and it is quite a curiosity to those who never saw a rabbit of that kind.

Several days since C. L. Hensley, who lives near Ashby Fork school house, bought a cow and drove her home, and when he and his wife went into the stable to milk her, she became furious, and attacked them, knocking Mrs. Hensley down and injuring her quite severely. Mr. Hensley escaped with less severe injuries. It is a wonder that the cow had not killed them both.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

LIMABURG.

Ezra Aylor who has been very low with rheumatism is convalescing.

Jack Baker has the sympathy of the neighborhood in the loss of his youngest child.

Mr. Aylor, who has had so much sickness in his family, has the sympathy of his many friends.

Mr. Everett Dixon and Miss Octava Rouse made Miss Eldora Rouse and sister a pleasant call last Sunday evening.

W. S. Cole's five months school will close on Thursday the 11th inst., and at night there will be a spelling match, and a prize given to the best speller. Everybody is invited to attend.

Last Saturday evening the doors of the hospitable residence of Mr. Jerry Beemon were thrown open, with a "welcome come in," to the young folks of the neighborhood, and every one present had a pleasant time.

FLORENCE.

Our town is in quite an uproar over the license question.

It appears that the sermons and prayers of Sam Jones are playing as the magnetic needle upon the minds of the people of Florence.

A quite little wedding took place at Henry Tanner's last Wednesday eve. The contracting partie were Miss Cora Tanner and Martin Blankenbecker, of Indiana.

The calves are still blating for their necessary sustenance, and they should have it to strengthen them to brace through the March winds. The city Dads met last Friday night to settle the question, but were scared out by the "Salvation Army," which was composed of twelve ladies, and headed by Col. Richardson, a very prominent lawyer, who held a petition from the ladies. He also addressed the Dads with a short and forcible speech, that, if they should grant license, for them to compel them to live up to the law. When the petition was handed in by the ladies it was called an instrument, we supposed a musical one, but, if all the notes in it could be sounded it would make ones hair stand up. Some of the citizens claim that the ladies have no voice in the matter, but when an estimate of the valuation of property was made, it was found that over thirty thousand dollars worth was owned by ladies, which is over two-thirds of the population.

WALTON.

Mr. A. M. Edwards, well known to the travelling public, we are sorry to say, is making preparations to emigrate to Delaware, where he expects to enter largely upon a prosperous business already established.

Old Aunt Kitty Anderson (colored) an applicant for the charity of the Poor-house, before all things for her removal were completed, was claimed by the avenging hand of death, and now quietly sleeps in slumber. No more a beneficiary of man, but transfered her appeal to a higher tribunal.

A petition, numerously signed, has been forwarded to our Representative at Frankfort, asking for an enactment to forever banish from this Magisterial District the sale of all intoxicating drinks. This, if passed, will reduce the Revenue of county funds to some extent and lessen the fees for the prosecution of criminals. On the other, choose, you this day which will you take.

At the quarterly conference of the Methodist Church held at this place last Saturday and Sunday, presided over by Elder Dr. Taylor and Brother Penn, at the close of the services on Sunday, a letter was read from Bro. Bristow, now confined by sickness at his home in Covington, Ky. The old veteran has spent 40 years of his life in the ministry and looks to the brethren of his circuit for maintenance. After the letter was read a collection was taken up and about $50 realized for his benefit.

Mr. M. P. Richey, a well known farmer, also known in your vicinity, as it was near Burlington, 23 odd years ago, he courted and married his bosom companion, then a blooming maiden honored and esteemed by all who knew her. Her maiden name—was Mary Bruce, is past fading away—with that dread disease, consumption. From the robust man of former days, his emaciated form of to-day is a striking contrast.

LATER—Since the above was put in type Mr. Richey has died.

FRANCISVILLE.

Old Aunt Betsy Hayes is convalescing from a sever attack of bad cold.

The tobacco crop of this vicinity is mostly sold at prices ranging from 3 to 6 cents. Dr. Jonas Terrill being the principal buyer.

Preparations are being made by those having sugar camps (as soon as the weather will premit) to extract the sweets there from.

Fox hunting, notwithstanding the inclement weather, is the order of the day, and quite a number of our young nimrods engage in the sport daily.

Billy Hayes is still in the stock and poultry business. His last dicker was with Mr. Plummer, trading a Plymouth Rock roosters for a sheep and other considerations.

We regret to say that of the many candidates in the field none have put in their appearence here yet. Gentlemen are you aware that we have never been disfranchised.

Parties desiring a sled for farm use, or an all purpose sled, would do well to call on neighbor Scothorn at this place. He has just completed one of the most substantial sleds in our judgment, that we ever saw.

Mr. Harry Kilgore, Miss Emma Graves and Miss Sallie Goodridge, of this place, are visiting Mr. James Davis in Cincinnati, this week. They will attend the Sam Jones protracted meeting during their stay.

There is some talk of building a vault in Sand Run cemetery at this place next summer. The cemetery is beautifully located and a vault would add materially to the looks as well as the convenience it would afford.

Quite a strange looking vehicle with horse attached was driven through here the other day. At first sight we immagined that an agent had struck the town selling clothes-baskets and clothes-pins combined, but on its coming to a halt, we discovered our mistake. It was Mike Moats in his new willow sleigh bed.

The silver question being the National topic at present, and as several ideas have been suggested pro and con we feel as though we have a right to express our views on the subject, notwithstanding we are denied the privieges of discussing them in the halls of Congress. We heartily endorse Senator Beck's views, consequentally we are a friend of the dollar of our daddies and our only regret is, that we have not got more of them. We could give several reasons why the silver dollar is preferable as a circulating medium, but as our space is limited we shall give but one instance where the silver dollar is much more preferable than the paper or gold dollar either, and for the life of us we can not see why any fair minded person could well help but coincide in our views. A person may go to Brownsville Texas, or any other town on the Mexican border, stop at a hotel call for a ten cent drink throw kown an American dollar for pay. you get your drink an a Mexican dollar in change, cross over into Mexico stop at a hotel call for another drink there you throw down the Mexican dollar, get your drink and and an American dollar back in change. thus you see a man could keep pretty how come you so all the time and still have the dollar left simply by crossing backwards and forwards from one State to the other We are not paid for this illustration to encourage emigration there, but gentle reader but if you have any doubts as to this being a fact, we ask you to go and be convinced, and do likewise.

On The Wing.

My Dear Recorder.

Since my dismounting at Marion, two RECORDER issues past, I have been side-tracked by home duties and snow bound by accumulated professional duties; but now having cleared this track with the snow-plow of determined effort, I resume my "Westward ho" At Marion I first had occasion to meet and know the county officials of Lynn county, Iowa, and to become acquainted with their system of records—the officials, I found capable, obliging and intimate with every detail of duty and courteous up to the full measure of severest demand of expectation of the most critical. I give no excess of praise to the (recorder) clerk or auditor or treasurer. I found each a friend in need. Indeed these genial traits in these officials I found remarkable characteristic in all Iowa officials with whom I came in contact. I was a stranger and yet they took me into their fellowship and good will, ligthened and shortened my labors all they could, and made my short stays at my various destinations oases in the desert of a strange land. Many, largely the majority, told me that they had consecutively held office from 6 to 20 years.

Again astride the iron horse, with head to the East, I spur me on to Dubuque, to take an unneeded and unwelcomed rest, and four days halt, under the arbitrary orders of a Western blizzard, and snow-bound. You see when an invincible army of snowflake, ordered on a double quick—charge by old blizzard commanding precipitated down on just one small Kentuckian in the prairie land of Lynn, I did not do as Elijah said certain sinners of old did, viz: "Halt between two opinions" in this Prairie—carmel but like Texas cattle, stampeded to another ranch that of Dubuque.

Well, Dubuque is an old town of 30,000 that backs away from the Mississippi up to and over her hills muchlike Cincinnati away from the Ohio and not like that suburban town of Cincinnati, Covington lazily retreating towards her hills. And yet Dubuque, speaking the language of the general—spirit of the West, is a half century out of time, and far, far in the rear of the western army of progress. Her Court House is not superior to Boone's, and no wonder, therefore, that citizens of Dubuque, refuse to point it out to strangers or apologize for its unenticing and unkept front and rear. But a new 'suspension bridge is to span the "Father of waters" here—and the ever willing fraternal hands of commerce will give Iowa and Illinois a newer pride, and Dubuque of the one and east Dubuque of the other, a more determined spirit of enterprize, and several new railroads making Dubuque an objective point, now contemplation or construction, will metamorphose Dubuque's into action—where she must, because of her location, and will for her own credit, leave the private ranks of apparent public—dis-spiritedness and attain to an enviable promotion of place and power in the onward and upward march of Western cities.

Diminutive Mammouth Caves abound all around and near Dubuque, and curious stalagmite a and staractite are common and attractive yard ornaments. Gen. Lewis, Recorder (Co. Clk.) in Dubuque and has been for almost ¾ of a century, himself an invalid his handsome and cultivated daughter performs its important duties. She is a Simon—pure—democrat, and is a relative of the Misses Lewis that formerly visited Gen. Wallace's family in Boone.

Having affected an arrangement with the Auditor allowing me to draw upon the Sheriff, for the January Draft I am therefore, by reason of this, prepared to pay the 40 per cent to the teachers of those districts having made report thereof on or before the 10th day of January, 1886. The teachers of the following districts are entitled; to-wit: Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 11, 13, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 31, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 43, 44, 45, 40, 49, 50 and 51. Also the following colored teachers, Nos. 1, 2 and 3.

Total amount for distribution $2,485 86. H. J. FOSTER, County Superintendent. Burlington, Feb. 8, '86.

Miss Laura Bruce, daughter of John L. Bruce, won the music box on exhibition at Piper Bro's., by guessing nearest to the number of beans contained in the vase. She guessed 4,500 and the count showed that there were 4,483. Many different plans had been conceived by which to arrive at the number of beans, but none of them were as successful as the off-hand guess.

USEFUL AND SUGGESTIVE.

—Give the boys good tools if you want them to keep up with able-bodied men.

—Some authorities consider potash the most essential food for all vegetables.

—In a general way it may be said that appearance, quite as much as quality, sells fruit.

—Indian meal will remove spots of grease or oil from carpets. Rub this on the place to be cleansed until the meal is discolored; brush it off and repeat the process with more meal until the spot has disappeared.—Indianapolis Journal.

—A delicate potato cream soup is made as follows: Make a puree of potatoes, thin it with boiling water and pass it through a sieve; add the yolk of six eggs, mix well and add a little finely minced parsley and chervil. Serve with croutons.—The Household.

Milking should be done at the regular hours if possible, winter and summer, and the same rules should be observed as to feeding. The cows do not have watches, but they know when the business hours come around and are fretful if the business does not go on.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—Do not neglect your dry cows just before calving time, as it is then that they need especial attention and care. They should be well and judiciously fed so as to keep them in good condition, for when poor and thin in flesh they can not digest as much food and will not be strong and thrifty.—Prairie Farmer.

—The business all over these United States depends to a great extent upon the success the farmer meets with each year. The success of the professional man, the merchant or mechanic—in fact, the success of the entire country depends, to a great extent, upon the prosperity or adversity of the farming world.—Western Plowman.

—Around almost all old saw-mills there is an immense accumulation of old rotten sawdust. This sawdust, after it becomes well rotted, makes the very best of fertilizer for the vegetable garden, and especially for onions and potatoes, but it is also excellent for any farm crop, and will pay well for hauling on the fields.—Toledo Blade.

—Good Molasses Cake: Put good teaspoonful baking soda in coffee-cup and heaping tablespoonful of shortening, then add four tablespoonfuls boiling water; stir; then fill up with molasses. Add spice or not, as you wish: thicken with good cupful of flour: bake quickly. A few raisins or currants are an addition to those who favor fruit.—Boston Budget.

—Stuffed Ham: Select a nice ham and boil; when done let it get cold before you skin and trim it. Prepare a stuffing of bread crumbs, butter, pepper, parsley, thyme and celery. Begin at the hock and make incisions with a large knife about an inch apart, and put in the stuffing as you draw out the knife. Rub a smooth paste of flour and water together and spread thickly over the top, put the ham in the oven and let it brown well, but slowly. To be eaten cold.—Household.

EARLY ENGLISH AGRICULTURE

The Alternations in the Price of Farm Products During the Early Centuries.

Nothing is more characteristic of the infancy of farming than the violence of its alternations. When roots and grasses were unknown there was no middle course between incessant cropping and barrenness. The fallow was "un veritable Dimanche accorde a la terre." As with the land, so with its products. Feasting trod on the heels of famine. In the graphic language of ancient chroniclers, parents in 1270 ate their own children when wheat rose to 336s. a quarter at the present value of money. Except in monastic granges no quantity of grain was stored; a corn dealer was the "caput lupinum" of the legislature. Few remembered to eat within their tether or to spare at the brink and not at the bottom. In August, 1317, wheat was 80s. a quarter; in September following it fell to 6s. 8d. Equally variable were the employments of agriculture. Months of indolence passed suddenly into intense labor. Harvesting in the Middle Ages meant the return of plenty. On 250 acres in Suffolk, toward the close of the fourteenth century, were grown wheat, oats, peas, barley and bolomong, a mixture of peas or tares and oats. The crops were cut and housed in two days. On the first day appeared 30 tenants to perform their "bederepes," and 241 reapers. On the second the 30 tenants and 239 reapers, pitchers and stackers. Many of this assembly were the smaller peasantry on the manor. The rest were wandering bands of "cockers," or harvesters. A cook, brewer and baker were hired to supply dinner at nine and supper at five. Barley and oats, as well as peas and beans, were generally mown; rye and wheat were reaped. But the harvest, as in Roman times, consisted of two operations: The first was to cut the ears, the second to remove part of the straw for thatching: the rest of the stubble was either grazed, or burned, or plowed in. The crops were wheat, rye, oats, barley, beans, peas, and, in smaller quantities, flax and hemp. Of grain crops, rye was the chief: it is the hardiest, grows on the poorest soils, makes the toughest straw. Rye was then the breadstuff of the peasantry. It was generally mixed with wheat flour. Bread so made was called maslin. Wheat and rye were often sown together. Tusser condemns the practice, "lest rye tarry wheat till it shed as it stand," but it prevailed in Yorkshire in 1797 as a cure for mildew. By itself wheat was seldom sown. Barley was the drink-corn, as rye the bread-corn, of the Middle Ages; drage was the commonest and best sort for malting. Oats were extensively cultivated in the North, but they were gray-awned, thin and poor. Little manure was used. In inclosed farms all the dung produced was thrown on the "infield;" the "outfield" was neglected. Horses were rarely used in agriculture. Oxen [illegible] are shod only on the fore feet, only on hilly ground; their gear and their keep is less expensive: they are man's meat when dead, while the horse is carrion."—Quarterly Review.

The old Pine tree which stood so many wintry blasts in the yard of the Old Hamilton Homestead is now no more, having grown so tall that it became dangerous to the residence, and necessitated felling.

The latest social "racket" at dinner parties is thus described: The ladies assemble in one room, and the gentlemen in another. In each room there is a basket of flowers, and the ladies are asked to choose a flower from the basket, the flowers being all different. The gentlemen go through a similar proceeding in their room. When the ladies enter the drawing room each gentlemen seeks the lady who has a flower like his own; and she becomes his companion for the rest of the evening.

Among the cattle weighed here yesterday was a cow sold by B. R. Gaines that weighed 1,690.

One of His Rules.

It happened at a ball at Fort Worth. A fashionable young lady, who was very homely, was speaking to a female friend about a rich young gentleman, who was also at the ball, and who was considered quite a catch.

"He is such an intelligent and charming young man. He promised to dance the first dance with me, and he kept his promise like a gentleman," remarked the homely lady.

"Yes," responded her friend, yawning. "I heard him say that it was one of his rules of life, when he had anything disagreeable to do, to go at it as soon as possible, and be done with it."

The young ladies have not been seen arm-in-arm on the street since.—Texas Siftings.

MY GARDEN GATE.

Stand back, bewildering politics!
I've placed my fences round,
Pass on, with all your party tricks,
Nor tread my holy ground
Stand back—I'm weary of your talk,
Your squabbles, and your hate;
You can not enter in this walk—
I've closed my garden gate.

Stand back, ye thoughts of trade and pelf!
I have a refuge here,
I wish to commune with myself—
My mind is out of gear.
These bowers are sacred to the page
Of philosophic lore;
Within these bounds no envies rage—
I've shut my garden door.

Stand back, Frivolity and Show,
It is a day of Spring;
I want to see my roses blow
And hear the blackbird sing.
I wish to prune my apple trees,
And nail my peaches straight;
Keep to the causeway, if you please—
I've shut my garden gate.

I have no room for such as you,
My house is somewhat small;
Let Love come here, and Friendship true—
I'll give them welcome all;
They will not scorn my household stuff,
Or criticise my store.
Pass on—the world is wide enough—
I've shut my garden door.

Stand back, ye Pomps! and let me wear
The liberty I feel.
I have a coat at elbows bare—
I love its dishabille.
Within these precincts let me rove
With Nature, free from state,
There is no tinsel in the grove—
I've shut my garden gate.

What boots continual glare and strife?
I can not always climb,
I would not struggle all my life—
I need a breathing time
Pass on—I've sanctified these grounds
To Friendship, Love and Lore;
Ye can not come within the bounds—
I've shut the garden door

SHE GAVE HIM "GENTIAN."

Which Caused Trouble Between Lucy and Her Husband "Alferd."

It had been raining hard all night; when the sky dawned clear everything looked vivid and unnatural. The wet leaves on the trees and hedges seemed to emit a real green light of their own; the tree trunks were black and dank, and the spots of moss on them stood out distinctly.

A tall old woman was coming up the street quickly. She had on a stiffly starched calico gown, which sprung and rattled as she walked. She kept smoothing it anxiously. "Gittin' every mite of the stiff'nin' out," she muttered to herself.

She stopped at a long cottage house, whose unpainted walls, with white window-facings, and wide sweep of shingled roof, looked dark and startling through being sodden with rain.

There was a low stone wall by way of fence, with a gap in it for a gate.

She had just passed through this gap when the house door opened, and a woman put her head out.

"Is that you, Hannah?" said she.

"Yes, it's me." She laid a hard emphasis on the last word; then she sighed heavily.

"Hadn't you better hold your dress up comin' through that wet grass, Hannah? You'll git it all bedraggled."

"I know it. I'm a-gittin' every mite of the stiff'nin' out on't. I worked half the forenoon ironin' on't yesterday, too. Well, I thought I'd got to git over here an' fetch a few of these fried-cakes. I thought mebbe Alferd would relish 'em fur his breakfast; an' he'd got to have 'em while they were hot; they ain't good fur nothin' cold; an' I didn't hev a soul to send—never do. How is Alferd this mornin', Lucy?"

"'Bout the same, I guess?"

"Ain't had the doctor yit?"

"No," She had a little patient, pleasant smile on her face, looking up at her questioner.

The women were sisters. Hannah was Hannah Orton, unmarried. Lucy was Mrs. Tollet, Alfred was her sick husband.

Hannah's long sallow face was deeply wrinkled. Her wide mouth twisted emphatically as she talked.

"Well, I know one thing; ef he was my husband he'd hev a doctor."

Mrs. Tollet's voice was old, but there was a childish tone in it, a sweet, uncertain pipe.

"No; you couldn't make him, Hannah; you couldn't, no more'n me. Alferd was allers jist so. He ain't never thought nothin' of doctors, nor doctors' stuff."

"Well, I'd make him take somethin'. In my opinion he needs somethin' bitter." She screwed up her mouth as if the bitter morsel was on her own tongue.

"Lor'! he wouldn't take it, you know, Hannah."

"He'd hev to. Gentian would be good fur him."

"He wouldn't tech it."

"I'd make him, ef I put it in his tea unbeknownst to him."

"Oh, I wouldn't dare to."

"Land! I guess I'd dare to. Ef folks don't know enough to take what's good fur 'em, they'd orter be made to by hook or crook. I don't believe in deceivin' generally, but I don't believe the Lord would hev let folks bed the faculty fur deceivin' in em ef it wa'n't to be used fur good sometimes. It's my opinion Alferd won't last long ef he don't hev something pretty soon to strengthen of him up an' give him a start. Well, it ain't no use talkin'. I've got to git home an' put this dress in the wash-tub agin, I s'pose. I never see such a sight—jest look at that! You'd better give Alferd these cakes afore they git cold."

"I shouldn't wonder ef he relished 'em. You was real good to think of it, Hannah."

"Well, I'm a-goin'. Every mite of the stiff'nin's out. Sometimes it seems as ef thar wa'n't no end to the work. I didn't how how to git out this mornin', anyway."

When Mrs. Tollet entered the house she found her husband in a wooden rocking-chair with a calico cushion, by the kitchen window. He was a short, large-framed old man, but he was very thin. There were great hollows in his yellow cheeks.

"What you got thar, Lucy?"

"Some griddle-cakes that Hannah brought."

"Griddle-cakes!"

"They're real nice-lookin' ones. Don't you think you'd relish one or two, Alferd?"

"Ef you an' Hannah want griddle-cakes, you kin hev griddle-cakes."

"Then you don't want to hev one, with some maple merlasses on it? They've kept hot; she hed 'em kivered up."

"Take 'em away!"

She set them meekly on the pantry shelf; then she came back and stood before her husband, gentle deprecation in her soft old face and in the whole poise of her little slender body.

"What will you hev fur breakfast, Alferd?"

"I don' know. Well, you might as well fry a little slice of bacon, an' git a cup of tea."

"Ain't you 'most afeard of—bacon, Alferd?"

"No, I ain't. Ef anybody's sick they kin tell what they want themselves 'bout as well's anybody kin tell 'em. They don't hev any hankerin' after anythin' unless it's good for 'em. When they need anythin', natur gives 'em a longin' arter it. I wish you'd hurry up an' cook that bacon, Lucy. I'm awful faint at my stomach."

She cooked the ham and made the tea with no more words. Indeed, it was seldom that she used as many as she had now. Alfred Tollet, ever since she had married him, had been the sole autocrat of all her little Russias; her very thoughts had followed after him, like sheep.

After breakfast she went about putting her house in order for the day. When that was done, and she was ready to sit down with her sewing, she found that her husband had fallen asleep in his chair. She stood over him a minute, looking at his pale old face with the sincerest love and reverence. Then she sat down by the window and sewed, but not long. She got her bonnet and shawl stealthily, and stole out of the house. She sped quickly down the village street. She was light-footed for an old woman. She slackened her pace when she reached the village store, and crept hesitatingly into the great lumbering, rank-smelling room, with its dark, newly sprinkled floor. She bought a bar of soap; then she stood irresolute.

"Anything else this mornin', Mis' Tollet?" The proprietor himself, a narrow-shouldered, irritable man, was waiting on her. His tone was impatient. Mrs. Tollet was too absorbed to notice it. She stood hesitating.

"Is there anything else you want?"

"Well—I don know; but—p'rhaps I'd better—hev—ten cents' wuth of gentian." Her very lips were white; she had an expression of frightened, guilty resolution. If she had asked for strychnine, with a view to her own bodily destruction, she would not have had a different look.

The man mistook it, and his conscience smote him. He thought his manner had frightened her, but she had never noticed it.

"Goin' to give your husband some bitters?" he asked, affably, as he handed her the package.

She started and blushed. "No—I—thought mebbe some would be good fur—me."

"Well, gentian is a fust-rate bitter. Good morning, Mis' Tollet."

"Good-morning, Mr. Gill."

She was trembling all over when she reached her house door. There is a subtle, easily raised wind which blows spirits above like leaves, and she had come into it with her little paper of gentian. She had hidden the parcel in her pocket before she entered the kitchen. Her husband was awake. He turned his wondering, half-resentful eyes toward her without moving his head.

"Where hev you been, Lucy?"

"I—jest went down to the store a minit, Alferd, whilst you was asleep."

"What fur?"

"A bar of soap."

Alfred Tollet had always been a very healthy man until this spring. Some people thought that his illness was more alarming now, from its unwontedness and consequent effect on his mind, than from anything serious in its nature. However, that may have been, he had complained of great depression and languor all the spring, and had not attempted to do any work.

It was the beginning of May now.

"Ef Alferd kin only git up May Hill," Mrs. Tollet's sister had said to her, "he'll git along all right through the summer. It's a dretful tryin' time."

So up May Hill, under the white apple and plum boughs, over the dandelions and young grass, Alfred Tollet climbed, pushed and led faithfully by his loving old wife. At last he stood triumphantly on the summit of that fair hill, with its sweet, wearisome ascent. When the first of June came, people said: "Alfred Tollet's a good deal better."

He began to plant a little and bestir himself.

"Alferd's out workin' in the garden," Mrs. Tollet told her sister one afternoon. She had strolled over to her house with her knitting after dinner.

"You don't say so! Well, I thought when I see him Sunday that he was lookin' better. He's got through May, an' I guess he'll pull through. I did feel kinder worried 'bout him one spell—Why, Lucy, what is the matter?"

"Nothin'. Why?"

"You looked at me dretful kind of queer an' distressed, I thought."

"I guess you must hev imagined it, Hannah. Thar ain't nothin' the matter." She tried to look unconcernedly at her sister, but her lips were trembling.

"Well, I don't know 'bout it. You look kinder queer now. I guess you walked too fast comin' over here. You allers did race."

"Mebbe I did."

"For the land's sake, jest see that dust you tracked in! I've got to git the dust-pan an' brush now an' sweep it up."

"I'll do it."

"No; set still. I'd rather see to it myself."

As the summer went on Alfred Tollet continued to improve. He was as hearty as ever by September. But his wife seemed to lose as he gained. She grew thin, and her small face had a solemn, anxious look. She went out very little. She did not go to church at all, and she had been a devout church-goer. Occasionally she went over to her sister's, that was all. Hannah watched her shrewdly. She was a woman who arrived at conclusions slowly; but she never turned aside from the road to them.

"Look-a-here, Lucy," she said one day, "I know what's the matter with you; thar's somethin' on your mind; and I think you'd better out with it."

The words seemed propelled like bullets by her vehemence. Lucy shrank down and away from them, her pitiful eyes turned up toward her sister.

"Oh, Hannah, you scare me; I don't know what you mean."

"Yes, you do. Do you s'pose I'm blind? You're worrying yourself to death, an' I want to know the reason why. Is it anything 'bout Alferd?"

"Yes—don't, Hannah."

"Well, I'll go over an' give him a piece of my mind! I'll see—"

"Oh, Hannah, don't! It ain't him. It's me—it's me."

"What on airth hev ye done?"

Mrs. Tollet began to sob.

"For the land sake, stop cryin' an' tell me."

"Oh, I—give him—gentian."

"Lucy Ann Tollet, air you crazy? What ef you did give him gentian? I don't see nothin' to take on so about."

"I—deceived him, an' it's been 'most killin' me to think on't ever since."

"What do you mean?"

"I put it in his tea, the way you said."

"An' he never knew it?"

"He kinder complained 'bout its tastin' bitter, an' I told him 'twas his mouth. He asked me ef it didn't taste bitter to me, an' I said 'no.' I don' know nothin' what's goin' to become of me. Then I had to be so keerful 'bout putting too much on't in his tea, that I was afraid he wouldn't git enough. So I put little sprinklin's on't in the bread and pies, an' everythin' I cooked. An' when he'd say nothin' tasted right nowadays, an' somehow everything was kinder bitterish, I'd tell him it must be his mouth."

"Look here, Lucy, you didn't eat everythin' with gentian in it yourself?"

"Course I did."

"Fur the land sake!"

"I s'pose the stuff must hev done him good; he's picked right up ever since he begun takin' it. But I can't git over my deceivin' of him so. I've 'bout made up my mind to tell him."

"Well, all I've got to say is you're a big fool if you do. I declare, Lucy Ann Tollet, I never see sech a woman! The idee of your worryin' over sech a thing as that, when it's done Alferd good, too! P'raps you'd ruther he'd died?"

"Sometimes I think he'd 'most ruther."

"Well!"

In the course of a few days Mrs. Tollet did tell her husband. He received her disclosure in precisely the way she had known that he would. Her nerves received just the shock which they were braced to meet.

They had come home from meeting on a Sunday night. Mrs. Tollet stood before him; she had not even taken off her shawl and little black bonnet.

"Alferd," said she, "I've got somethin' to tell you; it's been on my mind a long time. I meant it all fur the best; but I've been doin' somethin' wrong. I've been deceivin' of you. I give you gentian last spring when you was so poorly. I put little sprinklin's on't into everything you ate. An' I didn't tell the truth when I said 'twas your mouth, an' it didn't taste bitter to me."

The old man half closed his eyes and looked at her intently; his mouth widened out rigidly. "You put a little gentian into everything I ate unbeknownst to me, did you?" said he. "H'm!"

"Oh, Alferd, don't look at me so! I meant it all fur the best. I was afeard you wouldn't git well without you hed it, Alferd. I was dretful worried about you; you didn't know nothin' about it, but I was. I laid awake nights a-worryin' an prayin'. I know I did wrong; it wa'n't right to deceive you, but it was all along of my worryin' an' my thinkin' so much of you, Alferd. I was afeard you'd die an' leave me all alone; an'—it 'most killed me to think on't."

Mr. Tollet pulled off his boots, then pattered heavily about the house, locking the doors and making preparations for retiring. He would not speak another word to his wife about the matter, though she kept on with her piteous little protestations.

Next morning, while she was getting breakfast, he went down to the store. The meal, a nice one—she had taken unusual pains with it—was on the table when he returned; but he never glanced at it. His hands were full of bundles, which he opened with painstaking deliberation. His wife watched apprehensively. There was a new tea-pot, a pound of tea, and some bread and cheese, also a salt mackerel.

Mrs. Tollet's eyes shone round and big; her lips were white. Her husband put a pinch of tea in the new tea-pot, and filled it with boiling water from the kettle.

"What air you a-doin' on, Alferd?" she asked, feebly.

"I'm jest a-goin' to make sure I hev some tea, an' somethin' to eat without any gentian in it."

"Oh, Alferd, I made these corn cakes on purpose, an' they air real light. They 'ain't got no gentian on 'em, Alferd."

He sliced his bread and cheese clumsily, and sat down to eat them in stubborn silence.

Mrs. Tollet, motionless at her end of the table, stared at him with an appalled look. She never thought of eating anything herself.

After breakfast, when her husband started out to work, he pointed at the mackerel. "Don't you tech that," said he.

"But, Alferd—"

"I 'ain't got nothin' more to say. Don't you tech it."

Never a morning had passed before but Lucy Tollet had set her house in order; to-day she remained there at the kitchen table till noon, and did not put away the breakfast dishes.

Alfred came home, kindled up the fire, cooked and ate his salt mackerel imperturbably; and she did not move nor speak till he was about to go away again. Then she said, in a voice which seemed to shrink of itself: "Alferd."

He did not turn his head.

"Alferd, you must answer me; I'm in airnest. Don't you want me to do nothin' fur you any more? Don't you never want me to cook anything fur you agin?"

"No; I'm afeard of gittin' thing's that's bitter."

"I won't never put any gentian in anything agin, Alferd. Won't you let me git supper?"

"No, I won't. I don't want to talk no more about it. In futur I'm goin' to cook my vittles myself, an' that's all thar is about it."

"Alferd, if you don't want me to do nothin' fur you, mebbe—you'll think I ain't airnin' my own vittles; mebbe—you'd rather I'd go over to Hannah's—"

She sobbed aloud when she said that. He looked startled and eyed her sharply for a minute. The other performer in the little melodrama which this thwarted, arbitrary old man had arranged was adopting a role that he had not anticipated, but he was still goin' to abide by his own.

"Mebbe 'twould be jest as well," said he. Then he went out of the door.

Hannah Orton was in her kitchen sewing when her sister entered.

"Fur the land's sake, Lucy, what is the matter?"

"I've left him—I've left Alferd! Oh! oh!"

Lucy Tollet gasped for breath; she sank into a chair, and leaned her head against the wall. Lucy got some water.

"Don't, Lucy—there, there! Drink this, poor lamb!"

She did not quite faint. She could speak in a few minutes. "He bought him a new tea-pot this mornin', Hannah, an' some bread an' cheese and salt mackerel. He's goin' to do his own cookin'; he don't want me to do nothin' more fur him; he's afeard I'll put gentian in it. I've left him! I've come to stay with you!"

"You told him, then?"

"I hed to; I couldn't go on so no longer. He wouldn't let me tech that mackerel, an' it orter hev been soaked. It was salt enough to kill him."

"Serve him right ef it did."

"Hannah Orton, I ain't a-goin' to hev a thing said agin Alferd."

"Well, ef you want to stan' up fur Alferd Tollet, you kin. You allers would stan' up fur him agin your own folks. Ef you want to keep on carin' fur sech a miserable set, unfeelin'—"

"Don't you say another word, Hannah—not another one; I won't hear it."

"I ain't a-goin' to say nothin'; thar ain't any need of your bein' so fierce. Now don't cry so, Lucy. We shell git along real nice here together. You'll get used to it arter a little while, an' you'll see you air a good deal better off without him; you've been nothin' but jest a slave ever since you was married. Don't you s'pose I've seen it? I've pitied you so, I didn't know what to do. I've seen the time when I'd liked to ha' shook Alferd."

"Don't, Hannah."

"I ain't a-goin' to say nothin' more. You jest stop cryin', an' try an' be calm, or you'll be sick. Hev you hed any dinner?"

"I don't want none."

"You've got to eat somethin', Lucy Ann Tollet. Thar ain't no sense in your givin' up so. I've got a nice little piece of lamb, an' some peas an' string-beans left over, an' I'm a-goin' to get 'em. You've got to eat 'em, an' then you'll feel better. Look-a-here, I want to know ef Alferd drove you out of the house 'cause you give him gentian? I 'ain't got it through my head yet."

"I asked him ef he'd ruther hev me go, an' he said mebbe 'twould be jest as well. I thought I shouldn't hev no right to stay ef I couldn't git his meals for him."

"Right to stay! Lucy Ann Tollet, ef it wa'n't fur the grace of the Lord, I believe you'd be a simpleton. I don't understand no sech goodness; I allers thought it would run into foolishness some time, an' I believe it has with you. Well, don't worry no more about it, set up an' eat your dinner. Jest smooth out that mat under your feet a little; you've got it all scrolled up."

No bitter herb could have added anything to the bitterness of that first dinner which poor Lucy Tollet ate after she had left her own home. Time and custom lessened, but not much, the bitterness of the subsequent ones. Hannah had sewed for her living all her narrow, single life; Lucy shared her work now. They had to live frugally, still they had enough. Hannah owned the little house in which she lived.

Lucy Tollet lived with her through the fall and winter. Her leaving her husband started a great whirlpool of excitement in this little village. Hannah's custom doubled; people came ostensibly for work, but really for information. They quizzed her about her sister, but Hannah could be taciturn. She did their work, and divulged nothing, except occasionally when she was surprised. Then she would let fall a few little hints, which were not at Lucy's expense.

They never saw Mrs. Tollet; she always ran when she heard any one coming. She never went out to church nor on the street. She grew to have a morbid dread of meeting her husband or seeing him. She would never sit at the window, lest he might go past. Hannah could not understand this; neither could Lucy herself.

Hannah thought she was suffering less, and was becoming weaned from her affection, because she did so. But in reality she was suffering more, and her faithful love for her imperious old husband was strengthening.

All the Autumn and Winter she staid and worked quietly; in the Spring she grew restless, though not perceptibly. She had never bewailed herself much after the first; she dreaded her sister's attacks on Alfred. Silence as to her own grief was her best way of defending him.

Toward Spring she often let her work fall in her lap, and thought. Then she would glance timidly at Hannah, as if she could know what her thoughts were; but Hannah was no mind-reader. Hannah had no conception whatever of the plan which was all matured in her sister's mind when she set out for meeting one evening in May.

Lucy watched her out of sight; then she got herself ready quickly. She smoothed her hair, put on her bonnet and shawl, and started up the road toward her old home.

There was no moon, but it was clear and starry. The blooming trees stood beside the road like sweet white spring angels; there was a whippoorwill calling somewhere over across the fields. Lucy Tollet saw neither stars nor blooming trees; she did not hear the whippoorwill. That hard, whimsical old man in the little weather-beaten house ahead towered up like a grand giant between the white trees and this one living old woman; his voice drowned out all the sweet notes of the spring birds in her ears.

When she came in sight of the house there was a light in the kitchen window. She crept up to it softly and looked in. Alfred was standing there with his hat on. He was looking straight at the window, and he saw her the minute her little pale face came up above the sill.

He opened the door quickly and came out. "Lucy, is that you?"

"Oh, Alferd, let me come home! I'll never deceive you agin!"

"You jest go straight back to Hannah's, this minute."

She caught hold of his coat. "Oh, Alferd, don't—don't drive me away agin! It'll kill me this time; it will! it will!"

"You go right back."

She sank right down at his feet then, and clung to them. "Alferd, I won't go; I won't! I won't! You shan't drive me away agin. Oh, Alferd, don't drive me away from home! I've lived here with you for fifty year a'most. Let me come home an' cook fur you, an' do fur you agin. Oh, Alferd! Alferd!

"See here, Lucy—git up; stop takin' on so. I want to tell you somethin'. You jest go right back to Hannah's, an' don't you worry. You set down an' wait a minute. Thar!"

Lucy looked at him. "What do you mean, Alferd?"

"Never you mind; you jist go right along."

Lucy Tollet sped back the road to Hannah's, hardly knowing what she was about. It is doubtful if she realized anything but a blind obedience to her husband's will, and a hope of something roused by a new tone in his voice. She sat down on the door-step and waited, she did not know for what. In a few minutes she heard the creak of heavy boots, and her husband came in sight. He walked straight up to her.

"I've come to ask you to come home, Lucy. I'm a-feelin' kinder poorly this spring, an'—I want you ter stew me up a little gentian. That you give me afore did me a sight of good."

"Oh, Alferd!"

"That's what I'd got laid out to do when I see you at the winder, Lucy, an' I was a-goin' to do it."—Mary E. Wilkins, in Harper's Bazar.

HUMAN NATURE.

How It Looks When Observed in a Post-Office Lobby.

"It wasn't three days ago that I put three penholders and three blotting pads on this desk, and not one is to be found now."

It was a Post-office official, and he referred to the writing desk in the corridor.

"What becomes of 'em?" asked the reporter.

"Stolen."

"You don't mean to say that we have people mean enough to steal a half-penny blotting pad?"

"But I do. I see a dozen cases of it a week."

"Who are the thieves?"

"Women, mostly. And when it isn't a woman it's a business man. Now, I'm going to stock up the desk again, and you hang around here for awhile and see what you can see."

Three penholders, each supplied with a new pen, and three fresh pads of blotting paper were laid out, and the watcher took his seat on a window-sill. In about five minutes a young man with a brisk air rushed up to the desk, directed a postal card, and knocked one of the penholders off on the floor as he rushed off. The second comer was also a man, and he picked up the pen, directed a letter with it, gave a quick glance around him and pocketed one of the blotters. The third was a woman, who put on her glasses, wrote a postal, and cooly pocketed a penholder. Then a boy lounged up and stole another; and between two business men who used the other pen the second blotter was pocketed. This left only one penholder and one blotter. After seven or eight people had used them a woman with widow's weeds on directed a mourning envelope, stamped it, and rolled the penholder up in the pad and pocketed both, regardless of who might be watching. She was not yet out of the building when a man rushed up to the desk, found nothing to write with, and pounded the walnut with his fist and growled out:

"I'll be hanged if I wouldn't like to twist that postmaster's neck! This shows how little care a public official has for the convenience of the public!"

—A recent published statement of Rev. Dr. Barrows, of Reading, has been called in question—that the whole human race now alive, if divided into families of five each, could be located in Texas, with a half acre of land for each family. Dr. Barrows handles some large figures, but correctly, it is supposed, as to our extent of country. The estimated population of the world is 1,400,000,000, and the area of Texas is 262,290 square miles. The doctor will have 45,000,000 family lots more than will be called for.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE.

The Curability of This Painful and Dangerous Disease.

The prevalent notion that consumption is necessarily fatal has cost tens of thousands of lives, partly through its depressing influence on the mind, and partly through the consequent neglect of the means essential to a cure. We have before incidentally spoken of its curability. Its importance justifies a fuller reference to it. Dr. Austin Flint is one of the brightest medical authorities in America. A paper on this subject was lately read by him before the New York County Medical Association, on which other leading members freely expressed their views. He said it was a prevalent notion that the disease was equivalent to a sentence of death by a local tribunal. On the contrary, its progress might be arrested entirely; or be so slow that the patient might be comparatively free from danger; or it might continue indefinitely in about the same state, and so, under favorable circumstances, not prove fatal. If the kidneys were not damaged to an extent beyond one-half, and the other organs were in good condition, so as to supply the lack of the former, the person might continue to live in a fair state of health, provided he observed the laws of health in general. The object of treatment, in his view, was to prevent the further progress of the disease and to maintain favorable accessory conditions. Hence an early diagnosis is important. When the water is right in quantity and specific gravity, medicines to increase it or to promote the action of the skin, etc., only do harm. But even if the kidneys prove insufficient for their proper work of elimination, vicarious elimination—elimination by other organs—may take place. Even coma (lethargy) due to urea in the blood may be recovered from.

In the discussion of the paper, all the speakers indorsed the views of Dr. Flint, and gave signal instances in illustration from their own practice. Dr. George L. Peabody wished to emphasize the fact strongly, that the disease might continue indefinite without causing serious trouble in those whose condition in life was such that no stress was laid on any particular organ by their mode of living, and who could have all necessary care. Dr. Edward G. Janeway mentioned three cases in which the disease had lasted in one case five years, in the second eleven, in the third seventeen. When the last case came under his charge, five years ago, the prospect was very dark, but the patient had now, to a great extent, recovered. Dr. C. S. Wood gave the case of one sixty years old, who was apparently now as well as ever, though he had the disease at least four years. Dr. Quackenboss spoke of one, perfectly well now, who, when he first saw her, ten years ago, was so bloated that she looked like a piece of wax.—Youth's Companion.

THE RABIES.

An Impartial View of Pasteur's System of Inoculation.

Pasteur's system of inoculation by which he cures rabies, has brought to light the fact that hydrophobia is a much more common affliction than has been generally suspected. The great French savant has announced to the world that he will and can neutralize this dreadful poison without money and without price, whereupon literally hundreds of people from different parts of the world, bend their steps toward Paris. It is settled beyond all peradventure that there is no danger of hydrophobia if the bite of the dog is two years old, but there is no certainty within the two years. The incubation of the poison may take from one to six months, and this is why the afflicted hasten at once to France, and place themselves under the care of the man who has immortalized himself by discovering an antidote for hydrophobia. Curiously enough, this great discovery is meeting the fate of Jenner's cow-pox inoculation to neutralize the small-pox poison. Vulgar and ignorant people say it is flying in the face of Providence to attempt to cure this dreadful disease. Rochefort, the famous French Radical, is leading the attack on Pasteur and his hydrophobia remedy, but facts are stubborn things, and if those who are bitten by mad dogs are saved from rabies by Pasteur's discovery, it will redound to his glory, and the confusion of his enemies.—Demorest's Monthly.

THE ALPHABET.

A Survival of the Fittest in an Evolutionary Sense.

In the struggle for existence the Latin alphabet alone survived among its Italian compeers, and was carried by the extension of the Roman Empire through the length and breadth of Western Europe. Most of our modern European alphabets are its direct offspring. It is only in Eastern Europe, more especially in Russia, that its Greek mother and subsequent rival has stood its ground, and even the present century has witnessed the triumph of the Roman characters in Slavonic countries over alphabets of Greek origin. It is possible that a time will come when the Roman characters will triumph likewise even over alphabets which claim their descent from the Phoenician parent of the Greek alphabet itself. It is no longer doubtful that the immense majority, if not the whole, of the alphabets used in the East are descended, like the alphabets of the West, from the alphabet of Phoenicia. We can trace the successive gradations by which the letters of the inscriptions of Mesha or the Siloam tunnel became the flowing characters of Palmyrene epigraphy and the running hand of Aramaic papyri, and from the Palmyrene characters it is but a slight step to the Square Hebrew of the modern Jews. Even the Neskhi or Arabic alphabet, which, in spite of its manifold imperfections, has been made the vehicle of Persian and Turkish literature as well as of the thoughts of the vast Arabic-speaking world, can be shown to have the same origin, like the Syriac, which was the parent of the vertically written Mongolian and Mantchu. In fact, it is difficult to find any alphabet which can not be affiliated to the Phoenician, widely different as the two may have become both in the forms of the letters and in the values that they bear. Intermediate forms are continually being discovered, which bridge over the enormous distances and explain the transitions that time and space have effected. Even the Devanagari alphabet of Sanskrit, whatever disputes there may be as to its exact pedigree, is generally allowed to be of Phoenician origin. With the exception of the cuneiform alphabet of the ancient Persians and possibly one or two more which may yet lurk in obscure corners of the world, all the alphabets of which we know are derived, ultimately, from a single source. Utterly diverse as they are in their latest forms, the zealous enthusiasm of paleographists and inscription hunters has succeeded in restoring them to their earliest shapes, in filling up the intervals which separate them from each other, and in showing that they are all but the manifold developments of a single germ. The history of the alphabet, in short, like the history of its origin, is but an illustration of the doctrine of evolution on a large and easily tested scale. "Scientific palæography," to use again the words of Dr. Taylor, "rests on the assumption that no alphabetic changes are ever accidental or arbitrary, as was formerly assumed, but are the result of evolution taking place in accordance with fixed laws."—Prof. A. H. Sayce, in Contemporary Review.

A FRIEND INDEED.

How His Considerate Action Enabled a Bridegroom to Enjoy Liberty.

A novel mode of executing a warrant of arrest for debt was adopted by one of the bailiffs of the East Kent county court. The bailiff was in quest of a young man residing at Throwley, who had on previous occasions given a great deal of trouble, the bailiff being every time frustrated in his attempts to catch the debtor. Having heard the young man was to be married at Throwley Church, Croucher, the bailiff, betook himself to the sacred edifice, arriving there just after the bridegroom had entered to await the arrival of the bride. Croucher very considerately decided to await patiently outside until the marriage ceremony was over, and then to serve the warrant on the bridegroom as he came out of church. Meanwhile, however, a friend of the debtor came along, and, suspecting the nature of Croucher's mission, got into conversation with him, ascertained the amount that would satisfy his demands, and paid it on the debtor's behalf. The bridegroom was thus enabled to go on his honeymoon instead of passing the first few days of married life in her Majesty's prison at Canterbury.—Boston Truth.

—When the revolt broke out in Canada in 1837, a party of sympathizing Americans took possession of Navy Island, belonging to Canada, situated in the Niagara River about two miles above the great falls. They mustered about 700 men well provisioned and provided with twenty pieces of cannon. They had a small steamboat called the Caroline to ply between the island and Schlosser on the American side. On a dark night in December a party of Canadian royalists crossed the river, cut the Caroline loose from her moorings, and set her on fire. She went down the current and over the great cataract.

—In a recent lecture Prof. Fisher, of Yale College, said: "If you were to go into a public assembly in Italy to-day and sneeze, every hat would be lifted and every person present would offer you some expression of good will, such as 'God bless you.' The same custom is common in savage tribes, though but few know it. The origin of the custom was in the supposition that every time a man sneezed a spirit escaped from him. This is an excellent illustration of the theory which, though not commonly considered, is nevertheless true, namely, that men may have degenerated instead of having risen higher in the scale."

EXCITEMENT UNABATED.

Proof that that Physician's Terrible Confession is True.

Cleveland (O.) Herald.

Yesterday and the day before we copied into our columns from the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat and Chronicle, a remarkable statement, made by J. B. Henion, M. D., a gentleman who is well known in this city. In that article Dr. Henion recounted a wonderful experience which befell him, and the next day we published from the same paper a second article, giving an account of the excitement in Rochester, and elsewhere, caused by Dr. Henion's statement. It is doubtful if any two articles were ever published which caused greater commotion both among professionals and laymen.

Since the publication of these two articles, having been besieged with letters of inquiry, we sent a communication to Dr. Henion and also to H. H. Warner & Co., asking if any additional proof could be given, and here it is:

GENTLEMEN: I owe my life and present health wholly to the power of Warner's Safe Cure, which snatched me from the very brink of the grave. It is not surprising that people should question the statement I made (which is true in every respect) for my recovery was as great a marvel to myself, as to my physicians, and friends. * * * J. B. HENION, M. D.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan. 21.

SIRS: The best proof we can give you that the statements made by Dr. Henion are entirely true, and would not have been published unless strictly so, is the following testimonial from the best citizens of Rochester, and a card published by Rev. Dr. Foote. H. H. WARNER & Co.

To Whom it May Concern:

We are personally or by reputation acquainted with Dr. Henion, and we believe he would publish no statement not literally true. We are also personally or by reputation well acquainted with H. H. Warner & Co., proprietors of Warner's Safe Cure, (by which Dr. Henion says he was cured) whose commercial and personal standing in this community are of the highest order, and we believe that they would not publish any statements which were not literally and strictly true in every particular.

To the Editor of the Living Church, Chicago, Ill.

There was published in the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat and Chronicle of the 31st of December, a statement made by J. B. Henion, M. D., narrating how he had been cured of Bright's disease of the kidneys, almost in its last stages, by the use of Warner's Safe Cure. I was referred to in that statement, as having recommended and urged Dr. Henion to try the remedy, which he did, and was cured. The statement of Dr. Henion is true, so far as it concerns myself, and I believe it to be true in all other respects. He was a parishioner of mine and I visited him in his sickness. I urged him to take the medicine and would do the same again to any one who was troubled with a disease of the kidneys and liver.

It seems impossible to doubt further in the face of such conclusive proof.

—It is generally conceded, says the Carson Times, that five-cent pieces ought to be circulated in Nevada, and it is high time that measures were taken to demand the same. The buyer of small articles, such as a cigar or a glass of beer, has no right to pay fifteen cents when ten cents is the price of the article, and the same applies to all articles purchased in small quantities. Why a five-cent piece should be current in California, Oregon, Washington Territory, and in fact on the whole Pacific coast, and not in Nevada, is an enigma.

"As a Last Resort"

A Little Girl in Albany, N. Y., Terribly Afflicted, Wonderfully Cured.

One of the most remarkable cures of scrofula on record is that of the little daughter of Mr. M. J. Quinn, 286 First-st., Albany. She was afflicted with scrofula from birth, and physicians said it would be better for her if she was dead. Her father says: "She had 13 running sores on her body, besides being absolutely blind for months. She lost the use of her limbs and could not walk; in fact, was a mere skeleton wasting away. The smell from the sores was terrible. Seeing in a newspaper some cases of scrofula cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, I said to myself, 'I will try a bottle as a last resort.' When she had taken the first half bottle I could see a change in her, and when the whole bottle was taken the abscesses almost entirely healed with the aid of Hood's Olive Ointment, which I must say is the finest I ever used. I kept on giving her Hood's Sarsaparilla, till now she is well and healthy, running around. She has a splendid appetite. The neighbors don't know what to make of it."

HIGH WATERS.

The February Thaw Commencing its Work.

Considerable Damage Done at Trenton, N. J. and Other Places.

TRENTON, N. J., Feb. 12.—The rains of the past few days have caused the ice in the Delaware River to break at Yardleyville, Pa., and the lower portion of Trenton is submerged. On Fair and Bridge streets the water is even with the second stories of the houses, and the occupants have sought safety on the upper floors. The bridges across Assanpink have been carried away. The damage to furniture, residences and mills will be very heavy. Travel on the Pennsylvania railroad between this city and New York is suspended. Locomotives have been run on the bridges in order to prevent their being swept away. The residents paddle the streets in boats in the vicinity of Washington, Warren and Factory streets. Such a flood has not been experienced here since 1857.

PORT DEPOSIT, MD., Feb. 12.—About half past 4 o'clock this afternoon the ice in the Susquehanna river, just north of this place, broke and came down with a rush. The ice and water quickly rose over the tracks of the Columbia & Port Deposit railroad, and swept through the lower portion of the town, flooding the streets to a depth of three or four feet. The inhabitants were compelled to move promptly, leaving their houses and goods to the mercy of the floods. Subsequently the water found vent and receded, but left the streets blockaded with immense quantities of ice. The river is higher than for many years, and for more than a mile the railroad tracks are covered with water and ice, which is rushing down the grade with tremendous force.

READING, PA., Feb. 12.—The Schuylkill river at this point is ten feet above low water mark, and still rising at the rate of six inches per hour. An immense ice gorge formed about midnight at Shoemakersville, fifteen miles north of here. Large blocks of ice were piled many feet high, and when the water rose the ice was pushed on the adjoining lowlands, sweeping away trees, fences and small outbuildings, and flooded many farm-houses.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—A disastrous flood is feared here. There are two ice gorges above the city and one below. The Potomac is rising rapidly, and it is raining hard all along the line. Merchants in the lower part of the city are removing the goods to places of safety.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Feb. 12.—The Raritan river has overflowed its banks and submerged the lower part of the city. All business in the ship-yards and local yards along the river has been suspended, and the works of the New Jersey Rubber Company have been compelled to shut down.

DYNAMITE--KEROSENE--MULE

Two Workmen in a Shaft Have a Very Lively Time.

NEW YORK, Feb. 12.—Thomas Dean and John Gee, laborers on the aqueduct at Shaft No. 9, Sleepy Hollow, at daybreak, yesterday, undertook to convey to the heading of the shaft two cases of giant powder, each weighing fifty pounds. The explosive was on a car drawn by a mule. On the same car, although contrary to the orders given to the workmen, were several cans containing kerosene oil, and on one of the cans rested a lighted miner's lamp. Suddenly the mule balked and kicked and overturned the car. The lamp set fire to the oil, and Dean and Gee started for the heading of the shaft 1,000 feet distant. They had nearly reached the opening when the expected explosion occurred. Several cars were utterly demolished, and the air was filled with fragments of rock and timber. Neither of the men, however, was seriously injured. Gee was slightly bruised by some of the flying fragments, and also suffered somewhat from the concussion of the air. Dean was lifted off his feet and thrown up against the roof of the tunnel. He also received some bruises, but he suffered mainly from fright. The mule, as if aware of the serious results of its friskiness, kicked itself from its traces and imitated its drivers in taking immediate flight. Although the men had the mule handicaped by a good start it was a close race between the three to see which should reach the shaft first. The mule had a slight advantage, as the men were about as anxious to keep out of its reach as they were to get away from the dynamite.

A SERIES OF FRAUDS.

Remarkable Circumstances Developed by an Application for a Pension

SHELBYVILLE, ILL., Feb. 12.—A remarkable pension fraud has just been brought to light in this city. In 1862 Jacob Roellinger deserted from the French army and came to this country and joined the Union forces. Fearing that the French would aid the Confederacy, and that he would be captured and punished as a deserter, he deserted his New York company and enlisted under an assumed name in the Ohio Infantry. In the original command he was still accounted for, and was finally reported as taken prisoner. In the meantime he served out his time in the "Buckeye" company, was discharged and came to this city. About four years ago he applied for a pension giving his name as Carmon. The claim was pigeonholed until a few days ago, when a special agent dropped in to investigate the case, and made the following revelations: Fred Roellinger, of New York, is drawing a pension as the dependent father of Jacob Roellinger, who, it is alleged, died at Andersonville; another man claiming to be Roellinger drew his back pay and bounty and went to Europe, while a third named Cassidy is drawing a pension on his own name as Jacob Roellinger in another. Still a fourth, representing himself to be Roellinger, made application, but was apprehended and sent to the penitentiary, while a fifth applicant is now on file at the department for the alleged widow of the soldier in question. Notwithstanding all these complications, the case is now in a fair way to be cleared up, when the rightful soldier will receive his dues.

Wife Murderer Hanged.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Feb. 12.—Charles Hermann, the wife murderer, was hanged this morning. Hermann was a native of Prussia and forty-two years of age. He lived in Chicago for some time but came to Buffalo nine years ago. He clamed that a man named Christ. Ziegler is the cause of all his trouble, and that until Zeigler "came along," his wife and he lived happily together.

LASALLE, ILL., Feb. 12.—Two children of David Funk are dangerously ill from eating pork infected with thrichinae. Six other cases have been reported in this vicinity.

Vessel Bottom Up—All Hands Lost.

PORT TOWNSEND, W. T., Feb. 12.—The schooner Lizzie Merrill was discovered near Queets river, bottom up. All hands are supposed to be lost. It is thought she was boarded at sea, after she capsized, as several holes were found cut in her bottom. She was bound from this place to Guymas, with lumber.

Removed to New Graves.

LONG ISLAND CITY, L. I., Feb. 12.—Three hundred bodies of soldiers from the burying ground on Governor's Island were yesterday deposited in new graves in the National Cemetery, Cypress Hills, Newtown. Some of the remains were buried nearly one hundred years ago.

Hog Cholera Epidemic.

HILLSBORO, ILL., Feb. 13.—A virulent form of hog cholera is raging in this section. A farmer residing a few miles north of here has lost over eighty hogs out of a drove of 150 within a short time. He has tried every known remedy, but so far has failed to find anything that cures or prevents the disease. A large number of other farmers are also losing their hogs rapidly.

Silver Dollars in Circulation.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 13.—The United States Treasury has prepared a statement showing that the amount of silver dollars in circulation July 31 last was $39,284,433; December 31, $52,511,571; February 10, 1886, $51,7[illegible],826.

THE GREAT BOSTON FLOOD.

Nearly 1,000 Houses Submerged—Two Square Miles Covered With Water Ranging From Two to Eight Feet Deep.

BOSTON, Feb. 14.—The area at Roxbury flooded by the overflow of Stony brook is constantly increasing. The water has risen over a foot since yesterday, and through some streets the current rushes at the rate of ten miles an hour. Two square miles of the city is now under water from two to eight feet. The section covered is nearly oblong in shape, and is bounded by Norfolk House Hill on the southwest, Northampton street on the northeast, Shawmut avenue on the southeast and the B. & P. R. R. on the northwest. The source of the flood is the bursting of the confines of Stony brook, near Norfolk Hill. From that point the flood has steadily progressed toward the center of the city proper. It has passed Arnold street, the old Roxbury boundary, and has reached Northampton street. The cellars, and in some instances, the first floors of nearly a thousand houses are flooded. In low sections the houses are almost entirely submerged. Over 1,500 families are more or less affected, and a conservative estimate of the loss to buildings and stock is $500,000. The territory drained by Stony brook comprises many square miles in Jamaica plain and Roxbury and the lower and surface water on this section might all be added to the flood. At one point near Franklin park there is a lot of fifty acres covered with water three feet deep, all of which must flow off through Stony brook. The mayor, police commissioners and other city officials are at work establishing depots of supplies and arranging for the relief of the sufferers. A large part of the inhabitants living in the flooded district are still living in the upper stories of their houses waiting for the flood to subside. There have been many narrow escapes from drowning. Immense throngs of people have visited the flooded district to-day, and the streets in that vicinity have been black with humanity since early this morning.

TRIBUTE TO HANCOCK.

By Rev. Dr. John R. Paxton, of the First Presbyterian Church, of New York.

NEW YORK, Feb. 14.—In the first Presbyterian Church, in West Forty-second street, to-day, the Rev. Dr. John R. Paxton, at the close of his sermon, said: "They buried yesterday my old commander, the ideal soldier, the pure patriot, the noblest man, the stainless name, gentle as a woman, with a voice low and caressing as love in the camp and at the fireside, but heroic as Cid and with a voice of thunder in the battle to inspire and command. And I shall see his face no more. But while life lasts he will live in my memory, admiration and love as the grandest figure I ever saw. 'I once saw Washington,' said Chateaubriand, 'but that once was enough. The sight inspired me for life.' For three years I followed him from Fredericksburg to Appomattox, my hero lofty and superb. My heart is sad to-day. The world is emptied. The country is poorer in patriots, but richer in treasured memories and immortal names. Glorious Hancock, countryman, comrade in arms, I see you now at Gettysburg thrilling me with the accents of command. I see you in the Wilderness inspiring me with your dauntless courage. My romance, my hero, my leader, loved with a love passing that of woman, farewell. God rest his soul, and on his tombstone write, 'He did what he could for his country, his God and truth, and he died poor, but left to his country a stainless name, an unblotted record and immortal memory.'" Farmers Victimized by Swindlers.

PARKERSBURG, W. VA., Feb., 14.—Some time ago parties claiming to represent a hardware business house in Cleveland came into Wayne, and other counties of this State, to sell what they called grist-mills. Two farmers named Smith and Hatten, were induced to purchase, and gave their notes for $250 each. In course of time the mills came, and proved to be worthless pieces of machinery, which could be bought anywhere for a few dollars. The duped farmers tried to have their notes canceled, when they found they had been discounted at the banks, and that they had been swindled. No such firm as they were claimed to represent exists in Cleveland, and the innocent farmers would do well to fight shy of the sharpers.

Mormon Cannon Arrested.

SALT LAKE, UTAH, Feb. 14.—Geo. Q. Cannon was arrested Saturday afternoon at Winnemucca, Nev. No particulars have been received. To-day Marshal Ireland went to Nevada to receive Cannon from the Nevada Sheriff at Winnemucca. The U. S. Marshal had offered a reward of $500 for Cannon's arrest. He has been hiding nearly a year. He is regarded as the chief mind in the Mormon Church, and one whose authoritative voice from his retreat has caused the reported orders to the faithful to stand firm and uphold polygamy.

Big Steal and Light Punishment.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Feb. 14.—Ex-City Treasurer Joseph Bork, the great defaulter, who was pardoned from Auburn Prison last week by Governor Hill, said to-day that the convict contract labor system and the State account plan were failures. He believes in liberating first offenders after serving a quarter of their terms in solitary confinement on bread and water, holding the balance over their heads. Mr. Bork had a nice soft job in the prison office during the two years he served for stealing nearly $500,000.

Train Wrecked—Two Men Killed.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Feb. 13.—The night express which left Oswego last night at 8:45 on the Ontario and Western Railroad ran into a wash-out about a mile west of Liberty, Sullivan County, at six o'clock this morning. The engine, express car, baggage car and day coach were thrown from the track. George St. John, the engineer, and fireman A. L. Lewis were killed and three passengers were seriously hurt.

A Horrible Case of Suicide.

DANVILLE, IND., Feb. 13.—Mrs. Henry T. Kirk, living near Brownsburg, this county, committed suicide this afternoon in the most horrible manner. For some time Mrs. Kirk has been considered somewhat insane, but not serious enough to warrant her confinement. This afternoon she went to a shed near the house, and securing a can of coal oil, poured the contents upon her head and upon her clothes, then lighted a match and set fire to herself. She stood the flames without flinching, and her clothing and body continued to burn until neighbors, alarmed by the cries of her children, came to her rescue. Her body was completely roasted, and she survived the terrible agonies but a short time.

The Story of Lost Life Sensational.

TOPEKA, KAS., Feb. 14.—C. G. Conant, editor of the Garden City Daily Sentinel, states that the Leavenworth dispatch regarding losses by the recent storms is greatly exaggerated. The number of persons frozen to death within a territory 140 by 100 miles was sixteen. The losses of cattle, he thinks, were only one-quarter of the estimate cited.

Aged Lady Burned to Death.

ZANESVILLE, O., Feb. 14.—Mrs. Prescott, aged ninety-two years, living ten miles below here, fell in the fire to-day and was horribly burned. She died in a few minutes after being extricated.

Horatio Seymour's Funeral.

UTICA, N. Y., Feb. 14.—The funeral of ex-Governor Seymour will be held at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon from Trinity Church. Bishop Huntington will conduct the services, which will be very simple. No public services will be held at the house and the interment at Forest Hill Cemetery will also be private.

Embezzler Arrested.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 14.—John B. Mannix, ex-assignee of Archbishop Purcell and his brother Edward Purcell, of this city, has been arrested on a warrant charging him with the embezzlement of $350,000. Bail was fixed at $110,000, and the defendant went to jail.

TOO MUCH WATER

Causes Great Destruction in Massachussetts.

Some Details of the Immense Damage Wrought in Boston and Elsewhere.

BOSTON, Feb. 15.—At 1 o'clock this morning a tour of the flooded district at the Highlands showed that the water had receded twelve inches since 6 p. m. yesterday. The damage to property here is roughly estimated at $1,000,000. At Newton Upper Falls $38,000 worth of machinery and finished work was flooded, with great loss. At Malden the flood has abated eight inches and further damage is not feared. The water is flowing over Spot Pond dam at the rate of half a million gallons a minute. The total loss here approaches $50,000. At Maitfield the railroad bridge is down, and the Campello railroad is reported washed away. Several other bridges are down. The Muttock Dam broke yesterday, letting the contents of the mill pond down upon Warren's mill bridge, sweeping it away. The condition of affairs at Sprambetty, six miles from North Middleboro, is the worst in that part of the State. The Newmarket and Bridgewater rivers unite, forming the Taunton river, which drains twenty square miles. This is a roaring torrent, and its overflow in some places is a mile wide. The iron works settlement is submerged, and the smaller buildings are floating. At Taunton the total damage to the bridge, factories and residences approximates $150,000. From Providence it is reported that the loss to mills at Geneva is $26,000; at the Turkey Red Dye Works at Bellefont $50,000, and at the Atlantic Mills $30,000. At Taunton there has been a fall of twenty-one inches in the ponds. Business of all kinds is suspended. The damage at the Whittendon mill will be large, the wooden mill, known as No. 3, having fallen. The buildings on the east side of Weir street have settled three feet. The new iron bridge crossing Danforth street has fallen. Gas and water have been shut off in different parts of the city owing to broken mains. Horse cars are not running, the track having been destroyed. It is thought a number of buildings will fall when the water recedes, adding to the damage, which is already estimated at over $500,000. No New York mails have arrived in three days. In Haverhill, since yesterday morning the water has risen three feet, and is still rising. The damage in the four streets bordering on the river is very large. The total loss throughout the city is $50,000. When the ice in the river above gives way the destruction of property must be immense. The subsiding of the waters reveals the effects of the flood in sunken sidewalks, bulged foundations, and torn up streets. In many instances the current forced holes ten feet deep through the pavements to the foundations of dwellings.

FLEET DAMAGED.

The Ice in the Mississippi Causes Great Loss to the Government Fleet.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Feb. 15.—In addition to the damages sustained yesterday morning and evening to the shipping interests at that point, from the breakup of the ice gorge, it has just been learned that the Government fleet, which was anchored behind Cairo Island, has been injured, perhaps to a serious extent. The fleet is an extensive one, consisting of three steamers, forty barges and about twenty pile drivers, and was valued in all at about $200,000. The harbor where it was anchored was supposed to be the safest in this part of the river, but the great force of the floating ice caused all the boats to break from their moorings and float down the river. Major Ernest, of the corps of civil engineers, stated that he has received dispatches from Chester, Ill., to the effect that seven of the barges have been recovered at that point, all in good condition. Two of the steamers were under full pressure of steam when the fleet broke away, and he thinks they will sustain no damage of a serious nature. The fires of the third steamer, however, had been allowed to go out, as it was thought that the danger had passed. She may be seriously injured before recovered. No estimate of the total damage can be made, as only a few of the whole number of vessels have been heard from. No serious damage in this harbor has resulted in addition to that inflicted yesterday.

Still Another Mob.

BIRMINGHAM, Feb. 15.—A meeting of unemployed workingmen, held yesterday, was attended by 8,000 persons. The addresses delivered were of the most inflammatory nature and the assemblage degenerated into a mob, which attempted to run riot in the streets and pillage the shops. The police, however, were prepared, and succeeded in suppressing rioting and preventing any acts of pillage.

A Presumed Murderess Suicides.

BELLEVILLE, ILL., Feb. 15.—Mrs. Mary Wilkerson, of Lens Station, near this city, disappeared from her home yesterday, and was this morning found dead at the bottom of a well in her yard. It is probably a case of suicide from remorse and fear. It was generally believed that she was the murderess of Engineer Massey, who was shot in the back at Gartside's coal mines a few weeks ago.

Excess of Joy Kills an Old Soldier.

CENTRALIA, ILL., Feb. 15.—Frank Alexander, an employe at Sadler's Opera-house, dropped dead at Prill's Hotel last night, of heart disease. He had been a soldier, and had received notification that he would receive back pay in a short time.

Released on Bail.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 15.—The bail of John B. Mannix, late assignee of Archbishop Purcell has been reduced from $110,000 to $30,000. A bond for the latter amount was given and Mannix was released from jail. The charge against him is embezzlement.

John B. Gough Struck With Apoplexy.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Feb. 15.—John B. Gough, the renowned temperance advocate, was attacked with a stroke of apoplexy this evening while delivering a lecture. Late to-night his condition is pronounced serious.

Five Men Hurt.

NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—One of the walls of a cotton storehouse at Tompkinsville, S. I., which was burned two weeks ago, fell this morning, seriously injuring five men. A laborer named Bonner had his head crushed and will die.

Polygamists Fined.

SALT LAKE, Feb. 15.—P. R. Morris pleaded guilty to unlawful cohabitation, and was sentenced to-day to six months imprisonment and $150 fine.

—Opium eaters appear to be unfortunate in their attempts to find a royal road out of their habit. Those who sought a painless cure in cocaine found the cocaine habit worse than the opium, and quite recently a case is reported in Paris of a man suffering from "the paraldehyde habit," which he acquired while subduing his mania for morphine. Paraldehyde was introduced into medicine in 1883.—Chicago Herald.

—Crape scarfs in delicate colors are worn exactly as they were in the days of our grandmothers and great-great-grandmothers, tied around the shoulders with the ends falling on the skirt, and, in the old fashion, they have a fringe of sewing silk knotted into the ends.—Philadelphia Press.

—A doctor who has had much experience in treating laborers in gas-works says that persons who have become insensible from breathing illuminating gas will usually revive after the administration of a few drops of acetic ether in water.—Pittsburgh Post.

Proceedings of the Legislature.

FRANKFORT Feb. 8.—SENATE.—The Senate spent the day in passing a bill to prevent the playing of base ball on Sunday. Jefferson County alone was excepted.

HOUSE.—It was local bill day in the House, and they poured in at a lively rate. The only bill of importance passed requires counties to pay the expenses of transferring their criminals to jails of other counties when their own are insecure. The bill will save $20,000 a year if the Senate passes it.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 8.—SENATE.—It was leave day in the Senate, and a great many new local measures were introduced, none of them being important. The bills that were passed were equally unimportant, the only motions made that were of general interest being the following: Mr. Triplett moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill, in regard to ceding Green and Barren rivers to the General Government was passed. Adopted. The vote ordering to third reading was reconsidered. The bill was then amended and the amendment adopted. The bill was then put upon its passage and passed. Mr. Bryant moved to withdraw the Senate bill from the House relating to the sale of deadly weapons. Adopted.

HOUSE.—In the House the day was chiefly spent in filibustering over the bill to amend the charter of the Citizens' Gas-light Company, of Louisville. Owens, of Scott, seconded by Spalding, of Union, adopted a system of dilatory motions, calling for the yeas and nays on each motion. Finally the Speaker, claiming not to have heard a second to one of Owens' demands for the yeas and nays, put a vote to the House and announced the result. Owens insisted that his rights as a member were not recognized. The Speaker ruled that he was not in order, and directed him to take his seat. Owens refused, and the Speaker repeated the order, at the same time directing the Sergeant-at-arms to remove Owens from the floor of the House if he did not desist. Mr. Owens casually remarked that forty Sergeant-at-arms couldn't execute that order. The excitement was great for quite a time, Owens remaining on the floor after Colonel Corbitt, the Sergeant-at-arms, had mildly suggested in an official way the orders of the Speaker. Finally the roll was ordered by the Speaker to be called, and Owens sat down. In a few moments after the roll-call was completed he took the floor again to make a motion. The Speaker ruled that the motion was made for a dilatory purpose, and was therefore out of order. This created new excitement. Owens appealed from the decision of the Chair; but pending the drawing-up of his appeal the hour of 1:30 arrived, at which the House is adjourned by rule. The appeal will be the first business in order to-morrow.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 9.—SENATE.—The only important business in the Senate to-day was the bill declaring the keeping of a gambling-house a felony, punishable with confinement in the penitentiary for three years. The bill was passed by a vote of 28 to 6, and will go through the House with equal ease. There is a demand from all sections of the State for the passage of the bill.

HOUSE.—In the House everything was as quiet as a nunnery. Messrs. Owens and Spalding did not press their appeal from Speaker Offutt's decision, and the House proceeded to consider the bill amending the charter of the Citizens' Gas-light Company, of Louisville, over which the row started yesterday, and passed it by a vote of 81 to 6. This was the only measure of importance considered, and it was purely local, though vastly important to Louisville.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 10.—SENATE.—The Judiciary Committee reported that the Dixon high license bill should properly originate in the House, and it will accordingly be introduced in that body. Consideration of the bill to continue the Superior Court until 1890 was postponed until next Wednesday. The bill to grant the defendant the preparatory challenges in felony cases passed.

HOUSE.—Bills were introduced to regulate insurance risks and to tax sleeping cars from $300 to $500 annually. A resolution, with amendments, calling for Federal aid to lock and dam Licking, Green, Cumberland and Trade Water rivers and a number of small creeks, was cut off from discussion by the orders of the day. Both Houses adjourned as a mark of respect to the memory of General Hancock.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 11.—SENATE.—Bills passed: To investigate the working of the convicts in the mines; requesting Auditor to report the cost of the Superior Court; amending Section 601 of the civil code; to amend and reduce into one the several acts in relation to the town of Taylorsville; to repeal an act relating to the jurisdiction of Justices' Courts in Spencer County; to prevent the sale of liquors within one mile of any lock or dam in Kentucky under the control of the General Government; for benefit of School District No. 7 in Boyd County. Fixing Thursday, February 18, as the day for the election of Public Printer and Binder. To repeal the law regulating the sale of liquor in Magoffin County. Declaring Brush fork of Blaine creek, in Laurence County, a navigable stream. Incorporating Hopkinsville Branch railroad, with an amendment. Regulating appeals from inferior Courts—with Jefferson County excepted. Bill making wife-beating punishable with stripes on the back—no fine or imprisonment to be allowed. A substitute for the House bill repealing the fish law was passed. The substitute allows seining only in certain months.

HOUSE.—The pleuro-pneumonia bill came up in the House to-day on a motion to reconsider, which was carried. Mr. Tevis, of Madison, offered an amendment to reduce the appropriation from $5,000 to $3,000, which was adopted. The amendment and the efforts of Mr. Tevis saved the bill, and it passed by a vote of 54 to 35. The bill to repeal the act establishing a State Board of Equalization. Speeches against the repeal were made by Messrs. Winn and Worthington, and for the repeal by Messrs. Nesbitt, Mulligan and Bobbitt. Mulligan's speech was overflowing with satire and humor, and kept the house in an uproar for nearly an hour. The hour of adjournment arrived before a vote was reached.

FRANKFORT, Feb 12.—SENATE—The entire day was devoted to discussion of the bill to amend the charter of the Louisville Southern rail road. The Senate went into Committee of the Whole, and speeches were made by Colonel T. W. Bullitt, attorney for the Louisville Southern, and General B. W. Duke, attorney for the Louisville and Nashville railroad. The bill finally passed. It repeals so much of the charter of the Louisville Southern railroad as allows the city of Louisville and twenty-five or thirty counties in the State to vote money to aid in its construction. The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE.—In the House this morning the unfinished business of yesterday was reported—the bill to repeal the State Board of Equalization. The pending question was Mr. Meredith's motion for the previous question. The House refused to order the previous question, and debate on the bill continued. Messrs. Bullitt and Jackson spoke against the bill, and Messrs. Haydon and Denton in favor of it. Voting began at one o'clock. All the amendments were voted down and the bill passed by the following vote: Yeas, 51; nays, 34. The House then adjourned.

Miscellaneous Items.

DR. FRANK H. NOONAN, a prominent physician of Covington, died a few days since, of a disease of the stomach totally destroying the digestive power. About four years ago he contracted blood poisoning in the course of his practice as a physician, and since that time, to counteract that poison, he has, with occasional intermissions, taken medicines which necessarily had a destructive effect on the organ named.

THE Bank of Allen County, located at Scottville, has opened for business, with E. Scott Brown as President, John W. Starke, Vice-President, and R. S. Evans, cashier.

SULPHUR, an ambitious little Henry County town, is about to organize a salt works and natural gas company, in addition to starting a bank. An amendment to the town charter changing its name would seem the most appropriate thing to be done.

THE following fourth-class postmasters were appointed recently: W. A. Arnold, at Avonia, Harrison County; N. J. Pritchard, at Whitesburg, Letcher County.

RANDAL LITSEY, of Harrisburg, a Jersey breeder has assigned to T. H. Hardin. Liabilities, $9,000; estimated assets, $20,000.

MR. G. A. WHITNEY, a prominent farmer and mule trader, has sold his farm and stock at public auction. The farm lies on the Maysville pike, one-half mile from the court-house, Mt. Sterling, and is finely improved. The price paid was $110 per acre. It was bought by Mr. J. G. Trimble, President of the Exchange Bank, Mt. Sterling.

THE residence of Robert Wallace, situated between Midway and Versailles, burned the other morning. Mr. Wallace was in Chicago on a bridal tour, having married in that city. The burned property was owned by Rev. R. H. Kinnaird, of Midway, and was insured.

XLIXTH CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—SENATE.—A bill was reported and placed on the calendar to increase the efficiency of the army. A resolution was agreed to calling upon the Secretary of State for information in regard to the export and price of American cereals and cotton abroad. A number of bills providing for the erection of public buildings were passed. The educational bill was taken up and Mr. Blair made a speech. The consideration of public buildings bills was resumed, and Dayton and Zanesville, O., passed, appropriating $150,000 for each, and Newport, Ky., $100,000. The bill to provide for an Assistant Secretary of the Navy and an amendment for an Assistant Secretary of War went over. The educational bill was made the special order for 2 o'clock to-morrow.

HOUSE.—Executive communications in reply to resolutions of inquiry were presented by the Speaker. The bill to prevent the claim of war taxes being used as a set off against States having claims on the Government was considered. The bill to regulate the tax on fractional parts of a gallon of spirits was taken up and debated. Findlay, of Maryland, and Warner, of Ohio, made silver speeches. Pending action Mr. Morrison introduced a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for certain information in regard to customs dues.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—SENATE—A bill allowing discharged officers of the army one year's pay and allowances was reported adversely. Mr. Riddleberger's resolution was adopted directing the Committee on Public Buildings to report the aggregate amount of money to be expended this session on the recommendation of that committee. Mr. Hoar offered a resolution which was adopted, directing the Committee on the Library to consider the expediency of erecting a monument to General Hancock. Mr. Eustis' resolution in relation to discrimination against silver at the New Orleans sub-Treasury, was taken up and discussed. The Educational bill was made the unfinished business for to-morrow. Mr. Dolph submitted an amendment to Mr. Sherman's silver bill. At 4:15 p. m. the Senate went into executive session, and at 5:20 adjourned.

HOUSE.—Certain information called for in relation to the tariff was received from the Secretary of the Treasury and referred. Resolutions of respect to the memory of General Hancock were offered and adopted, and at 12:10 p. m. the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—SENATE.—An amendment to the Eustis resolution was submitted directing an inquiry into the recent loss of money at the New Orleans sub-Treasury, and its relation to the exchange of silver certificates for coin. A bill was introduced to repeal all treaties permitting the coming of Chinese to the United States. Bills in relation to Indian affairs were reported, and the bill to regulate the promotion of West Point graduates was discussed. The Blair education bill was taken up, Mr. Morgan supporting certain amendments until the Senate went into executive session.

HOUSE.—The Fitz John Porter bill was made the special order for the second morning hour on each day until next Thursday. A bill proposing a pension to the widow of General Hancock was objected to by Mr. Beach, of New York. The Indian appropriation bill was reported. The Judiciary Committee reported bills conferring and extending civil jurisdiction in certain cases in the Territories. The Delaware ship canal survey bill was reported. The bill to enable National banks to change their names was discussed and passed, but a motion to reconsider was pending when the morning hour expired. At 2 o'clock the Fitz John Porter bill was taken up and discussed until adjournment.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—After the reference of a large number of Senate bills to the appropriate committees, the Speaker proceeded to call committees for reports of a private nature. At the conclusion of the call the House went into committee of the whole, Mr. Hammond, of Georgia, in the chair, on the private calendar. At its evening session the House passed seventy-one pension bills, and adjourned until to-morrow.

COMMITTEE WORK.—The House Committee on Labor to-day agreed to report favorably Representative O'Neill's bill providing that no property shall be exempt from seizure and sale upon which an execution is made for personal services rendered by any mechanic, laborer or servant to an amount not exceeding $100. The Military Committee of the House decided to-day to recommend the construction of a Soldiers' Home west of the Rocky Mountains to cost $100,000. Major C. A. Storey, of Chicago, addressed the House Committee on Education to-day in behalf of Representative Lawler's bill to test the science of spelling.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—The Speaker laid before the House the reply of the Postmaster General in response to the resolution calling for information as to whether the eight-hour law is applicable to letter-carriers, in substance that it does not so apply. Adverse reports were submitted from the Committee on Post-offices and Post Roads on bills to enable the people to name their postmasters, to regulate the naming of post-offices, to facilitate the delivery of mail matter, and to regulate the sub-letting of mail contract. The motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill authorizing National Banks to increase their capital stock and change location and names was passed, was tabled by a vote of 115 to 94. Mr. Houk, of Tennessee, and Mr. Wolford, of Kentucky, spoke on the Fitz John Porter bill, the former in the negative, the latter for the bill. The House bill authorizing the Treasurer of the United States, with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, to appoint one of his clerks to discharge the duties of Treasurer, and Assistant Treasurer, in the event of the illness or absence of either of those officers, was taken up and passed, and the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—SENATE.—A reply from the Secretary of the Interior to a resolution calling for certain papers was received and referred. A number of petitions were presented. An amendment to the House bill to increase the pensions of soldiers' widows was submitted. A bill was favorably reported establishing two additional land districts in Nebraska. Mr. Hawley presented a bill looking to the taxation of lands granted to the Northern Pacific and by that company deeded to settlers. The Committee on Post-offices and Post Roads reported favorably and the Senate passed a bill granting the franking privilege to Mrs. Julia D. Grant. A resolution was agreed to calling upon the Secretary of the Interior for full information of the number, names and duties of special agents employed in land fraud cases. The consideration of the Blair educational bill was resumed and continued until 4:10 p. m., when the Senate went into executive session and at 4:25 p. m. adjourned.

HOUSE.—A resolution was reported requiring a detailed statement of the requirements of the Government in cities where it is proposed to extend the limit of cost for public buildings. Under the call of States, a number of bills were introduced and referred, including the Morrison tariff bill, an anti-Chinese bill, and a bill granting a pension of $5,000 a year to the widow of the late General Hancock. Mr. Little, of Ohio, offered a bill directing an inquiry into the propriety of publishing a revised edition of the medical and surgical history of the rebellion. The Fitz John Porter bill was discussed by Messrs. Wolford, in favor of Porter, and Negley and Fuller against, until 4:15 p. m., when the House adjourned.

A Horsethief's Calamity.

BISMARCK, DAK., Feb. 15.—The capture of Joseph Meyers, the notorious horsethief known as "Calamity Joe," is cause for rejoicing among the owners of stock throughout Western Dakota and Montana. The prisoner was captured at Glenullin by Sheriff Sebastien after a lively fight, during which the outlaw was shot in hip and shoulder. Meyers was one of the most feared of the desperadoes of the West. His wounds are not dangerous, and this fact is regretted by many.

—An astute man who understands the machinery of success without being able to enter into the impulsive or the sentimental side of life is not rightly termed a person of tact; one, on the other hand, whose sympathies are sensitive, but who, from carelessness or rash good nature, seldom looks before he leaps, should equally be denied this designation. It is just because the two elements that tact unites are so rarely found adequately developed together that tact is, in truth, something which a man can wear or discard at will; it requires an effort for its exhibition, and, if the effort be withdrawn, it also disappears.—N. Y. Ledger.

WORK OF FUNNY MEN.

A Family Calendar and Book of Health and Humor for the Million.

We are in receipt of a little book which, in richness of humor and grotesqueness of illustration, may be said, in the language of the wild West, to "take the cake." It is simply drawing it mild to say that it contains some of the best examples of American humor ever published; and the contributors, who are well-known in the field of letters, have really excelled all former efforts. The illustrations by comic artists are also in direct harmony with the text. "Bill Nye" tells his experience with a cyclone. R. K. Munkittrick, of Puck, rhymes funnily on the four seasons. Mr. H. D. Umbstaetter, the originator of the book, describes his wrestle with a grilled bone in "merrie England," and "M. Quad," of the Detroit Free Press, gives some quaint aphorisms of "Brudder Gardner's." The book, in fact, is not one to be glanced at and laid aside and forgotten, but can be taken up with pleasure at any time. Its title is the St. Jacobs Oil Family Calendar and Book of Health and Humor for the Million for 1886. It is published by the Charles A. Vogeler Company, Baltimore, Md., the proprietors of St. Jacobs Oil—a remedy which is universally known as the only cure for rheumatism and all bodily pains, and which has been indorsed by leading men in every country in the world. Red Star Cough Cure, the new twenty-five cent remedy for throat and lung troubles, which is also being manufactured by this house, has received the indorsement of legislators and boards of health on account of its freedom from dangerous opiates and its prompt efficacy. The book is distributed in large cities by carriers and in small towns by druggists. When there is any difficulty in obtaining it, a stamp sent to The Charles A. Vogeler Company, will insure a copy by mail.—Exchange.

THRONDTJEM.

A Swedish Town With a Marvelously Rich History.

The town of Throndtjem, Sweden, is the northernmost railway station in Europe, and is the seat of the most northern cathedral. The charms of the place are thus described by a recent traveler: "Surely the cradle of Scandinavian Christianity is one of the most beautiful places in the world! No one had ever told us about it, and we went there only because it is the old Throndtjem of sages and ballads, and expecting a wonderful and beautiful cathedral. But the whole place is a dream of loveliness, so exquisite in the soft, silvery morning light on the fyord and delicate mountain ranges, the rich nearer hills covered with bilberries, and breaking into steep cliffs—that one remains in a state of transport, which is at a climax while all is engraven upon an opal sunset sky, when an amethystine glow spreads over the mountain, and when ships and buildings meet their double in the still, transparent water. Each wide street of curious low wooden houses displays a new vista of sea, of rocky promontories, of woods dipping into the water; and at the end of the principal streets is the gray, massive cathedral where S. Olaf is buried, and where northern art and poetry have exhausted their loveliest and most pathetic fancies around the grave of the national hero. The 'Cathedral Garden,' for so the graveyard is called, is most touching. Acres upon acres of graves are all kept—not by officials, but by the families they belong to—like gardens. The tombs are embowered in roses and honeysuckle, and each little green mound has its own vase for cut flowers daily replenished, and a seat for the survivors, which is daily occupied, so that the link between the dead and the living is never broken."—*N. ONLY A "SPOOK."

The Return of the Democracy to Power Not Disgraced by Partisan Scramble.

There has been one circumstance attendant upon the return of the Democracy to power which impressed Mr. Cleveland very deeply, and to which he constantly refers with gratification and pride. When, after twenty-five years of exile, the Democratic party was restored to its old supremacy, there was an apprehension that the country would be given over to hungry spoilsmen, and public place be made the reward of more or less disreputable party service. The Republican organs had preached this forbidding doctrine. For two whole decades conservative people had been terrorized by the grisly prospect. Honest and patriotic men in tens of thousands had been constrained by the fear that demoralization would come in with the Democrats, and order and respectability and seemliness go out with the Republicans.

This appalling spook, conjured up by dishonest Republican zeal, has been robbed of its menace by Democratic moderation and patriotism. The hungry scramble, predicted so confidently and expected with such shrinking, has not occurred. Excluded from office for a quarter of a century and maligned with bitterness sufficient to provoke almost any reprisal, the Democracy have borne themselves with a temperance and a self-control which have won for them the esteem and commendation of the entire country. There has been no rash, no discordant chorus of importunity. The Democratic masses have cordially co-operated with Mr. Cleveland in his policy of regarding public office as a public trust. They believed that he meant to distribute the patronage in the interest of the country, with a view to elevating the service and securing to the people the fruits of honest government. They applauded his declared purpose of setting up a lofty standard of eligibility to place, and above all, they rallied to his banner of Civil-Service reform, and lent him their countenance and encouragement in the crusade against incompetency and corruption.

If ever a political organization put aside the temptations of place and perquisite and devoted itself to self-abnegation, the Democratic party has done these things. So far from embarrassing the President in his work it has held up his hands. The country has been regaled with the wholly novel spectacle of a party, practically new to power and unused to its responsibilities, not only consenting to but helping to contrive the employment of its ascendency to purely patriotic ends. Mr. Cleveland has been left free to realize his plans, and has been approached by the Democratic masses only so far as was necessary to assure him of their sympathy and confidence.

The President would be strangely ungrateful if he failed to appreciate his co-operation by his party. As a matter of fact, he does appreciate it. He makes it the subject of constant eulogy, and ranks it among the most gratifying and strengthening of his resources. It has shown him that the attitude of the Democratic party during the campaign was sincere; that its declared principles were not mere catch-penny protestations thrown out to dazzle and delude the country. He feels that in the great work he has laid out he is sustained by the dearest and deepest convictions of his party, and he has been taught by experience to realize that, in this quest for the greatest good, and in this effort to elevate and purify the machinery of our institutions, he is not in advance of, but simply abreast with, the patriotic and intelligent millions who elected him.—N. Y. Star.

MORE THAN ITS MATCH.

If the Senate Wants to Fight, the Administration May Accommodate It.

If the Republican Senate is really itching for a tussel with this Democratic Administration, it can have it, and not half try. Its tentative prodding of the enemy has gone far enough to show that the enemy doesn't want to fight, and would much rather live in peace with all men; but will do its full share of fighting if nothing else will answer.

The issue is very simple, and every body understands it. The Republican Senators wish to keep a large share of the public offices in the hands of their own partisans, after their policy and party have been repudiated by the people—and they seek to accomplish this by asking the President for the special reasons he had for removing this, that and the other Republican in Alabama, Virginia, Massachusetts and New York. There is one first-rate reason for all these removals, and the whole country knows it. It is high time, when the people have sat in judgment on their party and condemned it, that they should vacate the public offices and allow Democrats to enter on and administer them. That the Senate should take any other view of the matter than this—that they should seek to annul a great and decisive popular verdict against their party and policy by stretching the Civil-Service-Reform act over fields it was never intended to cover and does not apply to, is an exhibition of equal effrontery and greed. If the Senate is resolved to make the issue, so be it. Let it look out for itself. There has never been a time yet when a Democratic Administration and a Democratic House were not more than a match for an opposition Senate.—St. Louis Republican.

Its Own Master.

The President is greatly strengthened in his resistance to encroachments upon his prerogatives by his consistent avoidance of any attempt to influence the action of Congress in any matter within its legitimate sphere, aside from his formal recommendations. Those who are interested in the fisheries question say that the Administration is exerting no influence in favor of the commission plan. Congress is left to deal with his suggestion, made in his annual message, in any way that it deems best. That suggestion was the result of the understanding with the British Minister for the extension of the old arrangement through the last fishing season, and there is no reason to suppose that the President is wedded to the idea of a joint commission. In any event, he seems disposed to attend to his business and leave Congress to take care of its own.—N. Y. Times.

—The Hillsboro mail-rider failed to reach Milton, N. C., recently, and gave as his excuse that "a rabbit crossed in front of him while on his way, and he turned back." A COMMON-SENSE CASE.

Senator Edmunds' Resolution Tested by "Putting the Boot on the Other Leg."

If the President were responsible to the Senate directly for the nominations he sends to it, then the rights and powers claimed for the Senate by the Edmunds resolution would obtain as a matter of course. But there is no clause in the organic law which, by any construction howsoever strained, could be interpreted as making the President responsible to the Senate. The filling of a Federal office involves two distinct acts, each performed by an independent power, acting co-ordinately with, but not under responsibility to, the other. One of these acts is the nomination by the President. The other is the confirmation by the Senate. Each of these powers is expected to act in his or its particular province according to the best of his or its judgment and knowledge, but neither of them is vested with any power of review upon the acts, motives or impulses of the other in any form whatsoever.

Senator Edmunds himself will hardly agree that, in case a committee of the Senate should report adversely on a nomination, the President would have the right and power to demand and obtain from the files of the committee the documentary evidence upon which such adverse report might be based. And yet this is nothing more than the very simple operation of putting the boot on the other leg. Nor do we imagine that Senator Edmunds will maintain that the functions of the Senate to confirm is constitutionally superior to the function of the President to nominate. Such a theory would involve the assumption that in the matter of executive appointments the President is merely a subordinate of the Senate, and that his nominations are in the nature of petitions to that body, inviting its attention and requesting its assent!

This view of the case of course reduces Senator Edmunds' position to an absurdity. We do not see the need of fine-spun argument or abstruse reasoning. It is a plain common-sense case. If the Edmunds resolution is based upon the organic law, then the President can not be any thing but a subordinate of the Senate, and his nominations are nothing but mere ministerial acts. But if the President is an independent functuary, embodying the powers and prerogatives of a co-ordinate branch of the Government, then the Edmunds resolution becomes simply partisan rot, unconstitutional, usurpatious and absurd.—Washington Post.

THE TELEPHONE SUITS.

The Administration Merely Wishes to Push to Trial the Appealed Cases.

Our esteemed neighbor, the Sun, like the luminary from which it takes its name, has begun to develop some queer spots of late. Its attitude on the silver question is matched by its ardent hostility to a governmental test of the Bell telephone patents. It is plausibly contended that this matter should be finally settled by pushing to trial the appealed suits now pending in the United States Supreme Court, and the emphatic affirmation is made that these suits embrace every essential point in the controversy. This the contestants most strenuously deny. They maintain that the vital evidence as to the alleged fraud and collusion in the procurement of the patents has never been fully presented or admitted, and it is on this ground mainly that the Secretary of the Interior has authorized an unusual but confessedly legal procedure. Nobody disputes his right to intervene in behalf of the people, but the Bell claque screams that his action is "indecent" because Attorney-General Garland has been a stockholder in an opposition company. The argument is palpably feeble and misleading as the attempt to scare other patentees is futile.

If the Bell people are satisfied of the validity of their claims, why should they struggle so desperately against a full, fair and speedy investigation? Surely they do not suppose that the Government of the United States means to do them any wrong. Even if any body could deem Mr. Garland or Mr. Lamar capable of prostituting his high office to advance his personal interests, it is clear that this case involves too large a stake and is assured of too much publicity to admit of any snap judgment or gross unfairness. As a matter of fact the Bell Company, who have extorted a tribute of millions from the people of the United States, betray a very significant lack of confidence in their own position when they try to avoid a fair and open inquiry.—N. Y. Graphic.

Sinking Deeper.

The high-handed outrage on a free ballot, perpetrated in the Ohio Legislature by which nine Democratic members of the Lower House were deprived of their seats, although they had been fairly elected and their election had been confirmed by the decision of the Supreme Court of the State, shows to what lengths Republican desperation can go. No thought for the rights of the people; no consideration for the sanctity of the ballot influenced the Republicans who perpetrated this foul outrage, the fitting outcome of which was to re-elect John Sherman and to have the State of Ohio represented in the United States Senate by a man on whose brow the word fraud is indelibly impressed. The time-honored adage, whom the gods wish to destroy, they first make mad, is especially applicable to the Republican party. That party, instead of benefiting by the lessons of adversity, plunges still deeper into the mire of lawlessness and injustice. The infamy perpetrated in Ohio has a good counterpart in the New York Legislature, where a State contract has been trodden under foot by the Republicans and a gross insult offered to every working-man in the State.—Albany Argus.

THIS is the way the Licking Valley Scorcher puts it to her office seekers:

The sober, moral sensible people of this country demand of those who solicit their suffrage for office, sobriety and morality. If they do not possess these qualifications they may expect to be left. WITH the aid of an ingenious machine, wood intended for paper pulp is shaved off so finely that it is ready to go at once into the boiler. The machine takes a log twelve inches in length, which it revolves at a speed of 1,000 revolutions per minute, and a sharp cutter shaves off a shaving so thin that it would take 750 of them to make an inch, a nicety of execution which may be judged of by the fact that 200 sheets of ordinary paper are required to make an inch. As described, the knife of this machine has a sliding motion, and gradually moves forward as the block decreases in diameter, and in order that it shall not become dull, and the fibre consequently fail to be of uniform thickness, there is provided a unique arrangement of whet-stones constantly at work on the knife.—Iron.

A BILL has been introduced in the [illegible] provides that each [illegible] support its own paupers and not at the cost of the State. The bill will be lively contested. The report of the auditor shows that with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, the State of Kentucky supported 1,124 pauper idiots, at a total cost of $62,080 63. The regular allowance to each is $75.

THE intelligence of the death of Gen. Hancock, of the U. S. Army, caused the greatest surprise and deepest grief all over the country. He died after a short illness, at his home in New York City, last Tuesday afternoon. He ranked with America's greatest men as a soldier and statesman. He was an earnest, faithful and true soldier. Though defeated in 1880 for the Presidency, his name still remained synonymous with a conservative, brave and true man who never faltered in doing good for the people of the North and South.

THE subject of examining courts is one which demands legislative attention. Their cost to the State last year was $11,960, and was so unevenly distributed among the counties as to exhibit some striking facts. In Fayette county, with a population of 29,023, they cost $1,564; in Oldham, with a population of 7,667, they cost $2. In Franklin, with a population of 18,693, they cost $749; in Bracken, with a population of 13,500, they cost $4. In Breathitt with a population of 7,742, they cost $336; in Henderson, with a population of 24,515, they cost $64. In Harlin, with a population of 5,278, they cost $504; in Shelby, with a population of 16,823, they cost $94.

THE present year has been one of fatalities to prominent Democratic leaders. Gen. McClellan's death in January was followed soon after by that of Vice-President Hendricks. The demise of B. Gratz Brown, on the ticket with Mr. Greely, took place near St. Louis since the advent of the year. Saturday the remains of Gen. Hancock were interred at his birthplace in Pennsylvania. Ex-Governor Seymour, his party's next candidate for the Presidency after Gen. McClellan, died at his home near Utica, N. Y., last Friday. Only a few days since the newspapers related the death of ex-Senator Atchison, of Missouri, one of the pro-slavery leaders previous to the war. Of Democratic statesmen well known a score of years ago Mr. Tilden is about the only survivor.

THE following are the principal proposed changes in the revenue laws:

"Instead of paying the Assessor by list, as heretofore, he will be paid by the amount of the assessment, property being so guarded as to make extortionate assessments impossible. Then the whole machinery of the County Board of Supervisors is changed. The County Judge is to appoint two good men from each precinct to equalize the property in that precinct, fixing a standard by which such equalization shall be made. This standard is fixed by the value of the property as shown by sales in each precinct, deducting twenty-five per cent. for time sales. This change is the idea of Mr. Gus W. Richardson of Meade county, and is regarded as one of the best made. The next important feature in the bill is that regarding the sale of the property of delinquents. After the Sheriff is unable to make the taxes it is made his duty to expose the property for sale, and if there is no bidder, he shall bid it in for the county and forward to the State the amount of taxes due on the property from the county levy. Then all the summary remedies are given to the county to recover the tax so paid or to utilize the property. There has also been a decided reduction in the exemptions, and they will be found to be very few. The rate of taxation is fixed at 50 cents on the $100. There are other minor changes, but the four cardinal points are those mentioned above."

Borrowing Newspapers,

Next to the man who takes a newspaper refuses to pay for it, or orders it discontinued when asked for the money, the champion mean man is he who habitually borrows his neighbor's paper and reads it year in year out without contributing one cent towards its support. The Danville Tribune roasts this class of dead beats as follows: "A great newspaper reader was out hunting recently, and a storm coming up he crept into a hollow log for shelter. After the storm abated he endeavored to crawl out, but found that the log had swelled so that it was impossible to make an exit. He endeavored to compress himself as much as possible but with indifferent success. He thought about all the mean things he had ever done, until finally his mind reverted to the fact that instead of buying his paper like a man, he was in the habit of borrowing from his neighbor. On this he felt so small that he slipped out without an effort.

Bad weather for the candidates to hunt voters.

THE debt of Fayette county which all matures in the next seven years amounts to $199,000

THE following is the report of [illegible] for the month of January, 1886.

WHEAT.

Fifty four counties, covering the best wheat-growing sections of the State, report this crop at 89 per cent, acreage, and 93 condition. Our letters represent wheat as everywhere doing well up to the close of January. Much danger, however, is apprehended from the freezes that usually comes in February and March. So far, "the snow" has indeed been "the farmer's best friend," as set down in the old Anglo-Saxon adage of King Alfred's time.

TOBACCO.

Our correspondents' letters report but little variance from the figures last given for this crop, viz: about 91, both for area and condition. The crop has been mostly stripped in good order, and much of it has been forwarded to market and sold. There is some complaint about the low prices realized and now ruling. Barley, however sells well; and, on the whole, tobacco generally seems to be everywhere regarded as the most reliable money crop.

LIVE STOCK

of all kinds have stood the two severe spells of weather, which visited every part of the State during the month, much better than could have been expected; only those not well sheltered and cared for, or much reduced in flesh, suffered much; and, since the cold spell, having been well fed, have recovered. The cold was the severest known for many years, and, here and there over the State, our letters report quite a number of young pigs frozen in their beds, many bees in their hives, and great quantities of chickens on their roosts—especially those of the imported breeds. On the whole, live stock are now generally healthy and doing well.

There is more corn in the crib reported all over the State than usual at this season of the year.

HOG CHOLERA

is reported to be raging in scattering localities in the following counties: Bullitt, Davies, Henry, Marion, McCracken, McLean, Union and Wayne. Mr. David Rankin, of Wayne county, uses ashes, charcoal, and copperas, mixed with salt, in the feed given to his hogs, and finds it a fine preventive to this ugly disease.

A new cattle disease is reported from Lawrence county, to which no name is given, but it is understood that the disease was imported from North Carolina. Another cattle disease, quite fatal to young cattle, called "black leg," is reported from Gallatin.

FRUITS.

Some of the peaches, especially in Shelby and Trimble counties, are thought to have been killed by the recent excessively cold weather, when the mercury fell twenty odd degrees below zero all over the State; but all other large fruits are believed to be "all right." The coming strawberry crop, it is said, will be short, on account of the very dry season which followed immediately after the new plants were set out last year.

THE SECRET OF GOOD PLOWING

It is not always the best looking plow fallow that is the best broken land. A plow constructed like a gouge, that slide under the turf and inverts it without breaking it, looks well, but for the production of a crop, it prepares the land badly. Many of the plows now on the market are constructed so as to bring the least draught upon the team, and this by many is considered the perfection of the plow—the least draught for a given depth. But may we not be laboring under a mistake in this? The object in plowing is to invert and pulverize the soil and prepare it for a crop. Plowing may be so performed as to invert the soil without breaking it, except in the line of the furrow slice. It is evident that, if a crop be planted upon the land so turned, the roots of the plant will have to contend with the large unbroken locks of soil, so hard, indeed, in many instances, that the roots can not penetrate them.

A case has been brought to our attention which occurred on the farm of Mr. James Ferguson, of Todd County, Ky. He started two plows last spring in a field designed for corn. One plow made of chilled iron, with a gouge-shaped mouldboard, was started on one side of the field and a steel plow with an abrupt mould-board was started on the other. The first turned over the land beautifully, but did not pulverize the soil. The draught was light, and two horses carried it with ease. The second pulled much harder, owing to the abruptness of the mouldboard, and the perpendicular resistance which it made to the furrow-slice. But it pulverized the soil thoroughly. Corn was planted at the same time on the land broken by both plows. When that was planted on the land broken with the chill plow was eighteen inches high, that upon the land broken by the steel plow, with an abrupt mouldboard, was thirty inches high. The first was yellow and stunted. The second was a picture of luxuriant and abundant vitality. It was estimated that the portion of the field broken with the steel plow would make at least a third more corn than that broke with the light-draught plow, though the crop on the latter had two more plowings.—Nashville American.

A New Orleans Judge's [illegible] the [illegible]

The Judge's house was [illegible] in the French quarter of New Orleans, [illegible] attractive [illegible], but as soon as you got [illegible] the broad hall a cool breeze struck you, laden, without exaggeration, with [illegible] of a thousand flowers. The hall led right through the house and opened into a regular fairy-land of flowers, a garden the like of which I had never dreamed of. It was surrounded by a high wall and had plants in it from every country under the sun. The white-haired old gentleman and a group of grandchildren hanging about him [illegible] about, and the first thing [illegible] was a large oval plot set out with small plants around the edge. "This," said the Judge, "is my clock. What time is it, Clara?" he asked of one of the children. The girl ran around the plot and said it was four o'clock, and so it was. The four o'clock was in bloom. "In fact," said the story teller, "the clock was made up of flowers." In the center was a pair of hands, of wood, covered with some beautiful vine, but they had nothing, however, to do with the time telling.

The plan was this: The Judge had noticed that at almost every hour in the day some plant bloomed, and working on this principle, he had selected plants of different hours and placed [illegible] in a circle, twenty-four in number, one for every hour. For example, at the top of the garden clock, at twelve o'clock, was planted the portulacca, and he told me it would bloom at 12:30 and rarely miss. At the hours of one, two and three he had different varieties of this same plant, all of which bloomed at the hour opposite to [illegible] was planted. At four o'clock [illegible] that name, [illegible] you all know how you can depend on that. At five the garden [illegible] out, at six the geranium triste, and at seven the evening primrose. Opposite eight o'clock he had the [illegible], and at nine the silent [illegible]—all these blooming at or near the time given. At ten o'clock, if I remember rightly, he had a cactus, at eleven another kind, and at twelve the night blooming cereus.

Half of the year some of the plants [illegible] at all. The plants opposite [illegible] in the morning were [illegible] bloomed about that time, and at three was planted the common salsify, and at four the [illegible], at five the sow thistle and at six the dandelion. —San Francisco Call.

TUBS OF RUBIES.

The Magnificent Gem Which Was Stolen by a Burmese Maid of Honor.

Concerning King Theebaw's rubies, a well-informed correspondent writes: "It is certainly curious that we have heard nothing of the Mandalay Palace gems. The value of the objects discovered there we have been told is not great. Yet the capital has been undisturbed by war for over thirty years, if we omit the rebellion of 1866, when there was no plundering. During all that time the precious stores of the Ruby Mines and of the Noble Serpentine has been steadily added to. Many is the poor wretch who has been crucified for chipping down a gem that, from its size, ought to have been handed over to the Arbiter of Existence. Gentlemen who, in the time of Theebaw's father, the Convener of the Fifth Great Synod, were much about the palace, have spoken of silver bowls the size of washing-tubs filled to the lip with uncut rubies; and at least one spoke enthusiastically of the occasion on which he was allowed to thrust his bare arms nearly up to the shoulder in a huge chalice full of these gems. There was in particular one great stone, called the Nan-zin Buddamya, which, by its magnificence, was supposed to typify the dynasty. It was unmounted, and, therefore, can not be the gem in his ring concerning which the dethroned King was so plaintive, and it was guarded with the most sedulous care. Nevertheless, in 1850 a maid of honor managed to purloin it, and actually succeeded in getting it out of the palace concealed on her person in a very extraordinary way. She was, however, captured before she got rid of the stone. It was restored to its place and more jealously guarded than ever; and the hapless damsel was put to death with the fiendish ingenuities in which Soo-payah-lat, the Queen, was a past-master." One of the newspaper dispatches tells us (continues the same correspondent) that the palace had been very much looted by the royal body-guard. No doubt these gentry made for the store of rubies first of all. There was not much else that was really valuable, except the royal utensils, the gold spittoon and betel-box, the model of the Hentha, the carrying-bird of Vishnu, the jewled cups and trays and whatnot, besides the hundreds of silver bowls kept for domestic uses and for presents to visitors.—St. James' Gazette.

—Snow varies greatly in weight, according to the condition of the atmosphere. When very dry and "feathery," scarcely anything is lighter than a handful of snow. On an average it is found that a cubic yard weighs about one hundred and eighty-seven pounds, or about one-twelfth of the weight of an equal bulk of water. Ice is lighter than water, but in nothing like the same proportion; and a certain quantity of snow would, on the average, weigh only about one-eleventh of the same volume of ice. The reason of course lies in the greater compactness of the ice.—Boston Budget.

AN ENEMY OF
Monopolies, Oligarchism, and the Spirit of Sectional Strife.

The Courier-Journal (HENRY WATTERSON Editor-in-chief), is the acknowledged Representative Newspaper of the South, is Democratic in politics, and first, last, and all the time is for a reduction of the War Taxes as levied on the people by the tariff now in force.

The Weekly Courier-Journal

is the best weekly newspaper published in the United States, and for the quantity and quality of matter that appears in each issue of it, it is the CHEAPEST. Its telegraphic news facilities outclass any other paper, and it has the services of the ablest writers and correspondents in the country. It presents the news of the week from every section of the World. It gives to its readers throughout the year a greater number of Serial and Short Stories by prominent and popular writers than any of the high-priced magazines. It is in every respect a Model Political and Family Paper.

The Weekly Courier-Journal has by far the Largest Circulation of any Democratic Newspaper in America.

It is acknowledged by press and people throughout the United States to be a great paper; great in size; great in enterprise; great in ability; great in its correctness of information; great in variety; great in every sense of the word. It is the paper that everybody should have. To be without it is a great opportunity lost. Those who once take it are not willing to be without it in their homes.

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and servicable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.
Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.
It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rehandling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

Local News.

It is moving time—for candidates.

John M. Finch was taken home last Thursday.

The snow was about six inches deep Monday morning.

The mud roads are simply immense and are getting more so.

B. K. Sleet, was in Burlington a few minutes one day last week.

Preparations are being made for a large crop of potatoes in East Bend.

Miss Nettie Gardner's school at Pleasant Valley closed last Monday.

The colored school at this place closed Friday with an exhibition at night.

Miss E. B. Dunlevy, of Philadelphia, Pa., is the guest of Mrs. S. P. Brady, of this place.

The small grain is looking well. The snow protected it during the severe cold weather.

The homemade sugar season has returned, but few there are who have trees to work on.

Thompson & Rogers, of Bellevue, are buying considerable tobacco in the East Bend neighborhood.

James W. Hughes, accompanied by his brother, Charley, will leave this week for Ashland, Kansas.

Buy best quality of perfection coal, at 10 cents per bushel in yard at STOTT BROS., Petersburg, Ky.

Among some flocks of sheep many lambs have made their appearance, and seem to be doing nicely.

Mrs. W. F. McKim, and Mrs. Thos. Cowen spent several days with their father in Kenton county last week.

Geo. Blythe's dairy business seems to be expanding. It is a great convenience to many persons in the town.

FOR SALE—Wm Fritz's best Corn Beef at 8 cents per pound at B. F. ZIMMER's, Constance, Boone County, Ky.

Every other person you meet on the street is either a candidate, or has a petition or subscription paper for you to sign.

The February danger line is passed, and there is no probability of another great flood in the Ohio river at an early date.

A big river will follow the disappearance of the present snow, but we hope it will not assume the proportions of a flood.

Rev. C. K. Gibson, of Michigan, occupied the pulpit in the Universalist church last Sunday morning and evening.

The rise in the river the latter part of last week removed all the shore ice which had been a source of annoyance for sometime.

The Baptist brethren at this place contemplate holding a protracted meeting, the date for which has not yet been fixed.

In some places the pikes begin to look like the moles have been at work beneath them. Heavy wagons make their marks now.

The report reaches here that there was a cutting scrape in Florence Saturday night, the particulars of which we did not learn.

Mr. W. C. Clore, of the Bullittsburg neighborhood will leave for Anthony Kansas this week, where he will make his future home.

If you want a pound of Liggett and Myer's best Star Tobacco for 42 cents call at B. F. ZIMMERS, Constance, Boone County, Ky. 14-tf-

The Louisville Courier-Journal has effected arrangements by which its daily edition now gets here by 12 m, the day of publication.

Dr. A. A Murat, of Constance, is a candidate for re-election to the office of Coroner, subject to the primary election, April 3rd, 1886.

J. M. Connor went to Louisville Sunday night to invest in a lot of stock cattle for which he has several orders. He went by the way of the river.

Many of the farmers claim to have made from 1,800 to 2,000 pounds of tobacco to the acre last year, and yet the burley is considered a light tobacco.

Born—On the 15th inst. to Charles Clore and wife a bouncing boy. We are afraid that Charlie will now forget his old friends in Burlington entirely.

WANTED—1,000 men with 42 cents each to buy a pound of Liggett & Myer's, best Star Tobacco, at B. F. ZIMMERS, Constance, Boone County, Ky.

Misses Susie Walton, of Boone county, and Mary Ryle, of Burlington, Ky. were guests of Miss Rae Ward the the first of the week.—Rising Sun Local.

"Girls, stand by the wool-hatted, jeans-coated boys, they will take care of you when all the spider legged dudes have left the country.—Sam Jones.

Theodore Cook has moved to the old homestead of Mr. Mat Acra, Frank Mullins, of Pendleton county, moving to the C. L. Crisler farm where Cook lived last year.

Alonzo Graves, of Covington, with his brother, Ben, made Burlington a flying visit last Wednesday. They were trying to buy Gabe Gaines' fine young horse.

Damson trees are exceedingly scarce in this county, and a few years since the damson was a very popular crop. Many persons think the heart of the trees became diseased, killing them.

This is the season of the year when the farmers provide protection against the next winter's blizzards, by indulging in numerous woodsawings, with big dinners as accompaniments.

The RECORDER office was the first one in town to receive a "Vallnetine," and we are under many obligations to our friends in Petersburg for the one received last Thursday. We recognized the green ink.

The protracted meeting held by Revs. Walden, of Covington, and Hendricks, of Shelbyville, closed last Thursday night. No additions—there will be preaching in that church three times in each month hereafter.

We acknowledge the receipt of a copy of the Morning Monitor, Springfield, Ill., containing quite a lengthy discourse, delivered by Rev. C. C. Conner, at the Universalist Church Sunday morning the 7th inst.

W. I. Rouse raised at the rate of 2,800 pounds of tobacco to the acre in 1885, which big yield so elated him that he forgot to finish harnessing, his team when he hauled the crop off, One of his mules working minus its collar.

Remember that Geo. Huschart & Co. of Lawrenceburg, Indiana, can always give satisfaction both as to price and style of work, so when you want to buy a tombstone or a monument go to their yard or call on John Beall, of Hebron, Ky., their agent.

The members of the Presbyterian church at this place are soliciting money with which to provide their church edifice a new roof. Small contributions thankfully received and large ones in proportion. Those desiring to aid in the work can leave their contributions at Dudley Rouse's store.

At every town in the county there should be one or more persons engaged buying tobacco. It would not only be a great convenience to the surrounding neighborhoods by furnishing a market, but would redound to the interest of the entire community in many ways.

Married—At the residence of the bride's parents, at Berwick, Neb., on the 10th inst., by Rev. J. B. Leedom, Miss Mamie Perkins, of Hall county, and Mr. Jason L. Claflin, of Howard county. Miss Perkins is the daughter Dick Perkins, formerly of this place, and grand-daughter of Mr. Arthur Blythe.

We have printed this month four sets of sale bills as follows: T. A. Crigler, who expects to move to Ludlow, Ky., H. W. Plumer, who has bought a farm in Indiana; John W. Gaines, who emmigrates to Anthony, Kansas, about the first of March, and Eneas Barrett, of Lawrenceburg, Ind., who has rented his farm on Woolper Creek, to Nicholas Oberting.

Prof. Cole's school at Limaburg closed last Thursday Prizes were awarded the best spellers as follows: in class "A" Charles Crigler was awarded the Bible: class "B" Nellie Rouse, the photograph Album; class "C" Ora Rouse, Album. Walter Goodridge was presented with a spittoon as the homeliest man, The attendance of friends and patrons was large, and all enjoyed the occasion.

Vick's Floral Guide for 1886 is even an improvement on former numbers. It contains nearly 200 pages, is printed on the best of paper and contains nearly 1,000 illustrations. It is beautiful enough to adorn the parlor table, while it is so instructive in relation to the culture of flowers and vegetables that no housekeeper should be without a copy. The work will be sent free to customers; to others at 10 cents, but if the latter afterward order, the 10 cts. will be deducted. Address, Jas Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

Miss B. C. Wood, the elocutionist, who is well known here, and was formerly well thought of, figures just now in a scandal at Maysville. It is alleged that she has been traveling with one Harry S. Hall as his wife, both being engaged in the "entertainment" business. Hall was arrested at Maysville the other day on the charge of bigamy, but was released, the witness not appearing against him. The Central Methodist, of Cattlesburg, says he deserted his wife at that place last fall, and has been traveling since then with Miss Wood as her husband.—Carrollton Democrat.

Miss Wood is well known in Burlington, having given entertainments at this place and also taught a class in elocution in December 1883, at which time she and her class gave quite an entertainment.

Chas. Timmer, a german, was found dead in his bed last Saturday morning, the 6th inst., at the residence of his cousin, B. Brink, who is a resident of Constance, Ky. His death was produced by excessive drinking, bringing on an attack of apoplexy. Coroner Murat was called in and a jury being summoned returned the following verdict:

We the jury find that the dead body before us is that of Chas. Timmer, of Hamilton County, Ohio, who came to his death on the morning of the 6th inst, between the hours of 2 and 9 o'clock a. m. The cause of his death was produced by excessive drinking, bringing on an attack of apoplexy, which produced death,

A Sudden Death.

This community was dazed last Thursday afternoon by the announcement that Mr. William Rouse who lives about one mile northeast of town was dead, having died of heart disease. The deceased after dinner went out to a field where some of his neighbors were at work, and upon returning to the house complained of a pain in his side. A messenger was dispatched for Dr. Furnish who hastened out to see the patient; and found that the pain was very dangerously located. In the mean time Mr. Rouse revived and was engaged in conversation when the grim destroyer interrupted him, and terminated his earthly career in the twinkle of an eye. It was but fifteen minutes from the time the doctor arrived until Mr. Rouse was a corpse.

Had Mr. Rouse lived until next August he would have been 72 years old. He leaves a widow and one son, the only members of his immediate family. The remains were placed in the Hopeful vault, Friday after a funeral service at the family residence by Rev. Keller of the Lutheran church.

County Teachers' Association.

The fifth meeting of the County Teachers' Association, took place at Limaburgh school-house, Saturday, January 24th, 1886. Owing to the inclemency of the weather only a small number of teachers were present. The subjects were treated in a very interesting manner, and all present considered themselves amply repaid for their trouble.

Miss Virginia Southgate read a very interesting essay on the "Humorous side of a Teachers' School-life."

W. S. Cole read a carefully prepared paper on "Educational Reform."

J. C. Mack read a biography of "Pestaolozzi." Miss Nannie Bristow and J. C. Mack discussed the subject, of "Recitation."

The Association was treated to a handsome dinner prepared by the hospitable ladies of the vicinity.

The excercises closed with two songs by Mr. Cole's pupils, which were very creditably executed.

The committee on by-laws presented a report, which was adopted.

The next meeting of the association will take place at the Bullittsburg school-house, district No. 4. The following programme has been arranged;

Cube root—L. H. Voshell and E. Kelsey.

School government—O. Snyder and Mrs. Mary Walton.

Women educators, Essay—Miss Addie Hensley.

Debate—Affirmed, that the County Association is a benefit to the teachers of the county. Affirmative, J. C. Mack and W. L. Gaines; Negative, J. C. Gordon and J. B. Thornton.

All are respectfully invited to attend and take part in the exercises.

I will begin a select school in Morgan Academy, Monday, March 1st, for a term of three months. Rates of tuition $6, $9 and $12 for term, according to grade of pupils.

L. M. Whitehead.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

LIMABURG.

The examination of the month of February is as follows: Those who are entitled to 95 per cent are Charley Crigler, Otha Rouse, Julius Rouse, Rosa Utz, Emma Rouse.

Those entitled to 90 per cent are Ellie Erigler, Jennie Rouse, Olavia Rouse, Eva Beemon, Ada Aylor, Johnnie Conrad, Arley Adams, Willie Beemon and Harvey Baker.

UNION.

Candidates are numerous.

Miss Laura Baker continues very ill.

Miss Kittie Wilkie is at home from a visit to Covington.

Misses Fannie and Shellie Youell, of Walton, are visiting friends here.

Mrs. Harris, of St Louis, after a visit of several months here, has returned.

Miss Veranda Lail, of Erlanger, was the guest of Nannie Barkitt last week.

Everybody has a cold. If some Pasteur should discover that we could vaccinate against colds, how happy he would make the suffering mass of humanity.

BELLEVUE.

Several of the public schools in this neighborhood closed last week,

Rev. Fullilove preached here last Sunday morning and evening.

The literary society has closed for the season. The Monday night spelling continues.

We are now receiving our annual installment of mud—the turnpike fever has not broke out yet.

A F. Lerch, of Bunavista, Ohio, has been visiting here for several days. We hear that he will handle tobacco at this place again this season.

John Slayback has been very sick with the remittent fever for the past week, but is some better at this time.

FRANCISVILLE.

The bottom of the roads have fell out and nothing but a mud hole remains between the fences.

Mike Monts while out coon hunting the other day fell a tree on his old coon dog, killing it. Mike is in mourning.

Wm. Graves, jr. spent a few days at home last week. He is reading medicine with his uncle Dick Crisler at Ludlow.

One of James Riley's teams passed through here the other day with 5,000 pounds of tobacco aboard enroute for Covington.

Parties desiring seed potatoes of the variety known as the "White Star" will be supplied by calling on Mr. Scothorn or Wm. Hayes, of this place. They are a new variety and bid fair to be the coming potatoe.

Since our last Joe Graves has been electioneering through here for Dude Maxin, of Taylorport, for constable. Does anybody know what kind a constable a "Dude" would make? Most likely a good one, as they are no good for anything else.

FLORENCE.

John Finch is improving.

Shaking hands is all the go.

Robert Pearson is the newest man in town.

John Hunt has a very fine hunting dog, he has refused $30 for it.

Remember next Sunday is Rev. P. F. Bristows regular meeting day.

One of Mr. Swetnam's "Cat Congressmen" departed this life very suddenly last Saturday night.

It is rumored that Fred Utz is a candidate for magistrate in this precinct. Fred will make a good one.

Found—Gold sleeve button, owner can have same by calling at the Postoffice and describing property

The Odd-Fellows have made a great improvement in their hall, which will add greatly to its convienence.

The candidates in this precinct think they have the inside track, we would like to hear from the other side.

Mr. Way is erecting a pair of Fairbank scales in front of the Southern Hotel, and will soon be ready to accommodate persons wishing to weigh stock, etc.

VERONA.

Mr. Berry Whitson has returned from the West.

Mrs. N. G. Hudson and son, Gas, have gone to Tennessee in search of health.

This place has been treated to a series of cold spells of unusual severity. The fall of snow has been sufficient for sleighing, but the thaw has spoiled the fun.

Thursday morning Miss Josie Poland was very quietly united in marriage to a Mr. Castleman, from the West. Dame rumor reports several more weddings for the near future.

In the neighborhood of W. B Craven's a new school-house has been erected. The school was opened last Monday, with a fair prospect of a good attendance, and with Miss Frankie Poland as teacher.

On last Wednesday morning the 10th inst, the people were very much surprised to learn that Miss Maggie Dickerson would be married to Mr. Thompson, at 10 o'clock that morning. The newly married couple left on the next train for their home at Germantown, Ky.

The town has been enlivened by quite a number of weddings lately. On January the 27th, at the residence of the bride's mother, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Walter Scroggin, of Williamstown, Ky., to Miss Ida Mathews. They will make their future home in Williamstown.

RABBIT HASH.

Weather warm and ice thining out of the river.

Wm. Perry has moved into a house on James Hastings farm.

Mrs. Mean, of East Bend, died last Thursday with pneumonia.

Dr. Gill Rice is lying very low with consumption, he cannot survive many days.

Jas. A. Wilson lost one of his work horses last week, being the result of a wound from a snag.

Geo. W. Wilson, of Jonesburg, Mo., is visiting his brother, Hon. James A. Wilson, of this place.

Our shoe cobbler is kept busy driving pegs and making stitches. Bring in your boots and shoes.

Report of district No. 7, taught by Miss Lottie Burnette, for the last month ending Feb. 6th, 1886.

Walter Ryle has moved in the house on Mrs. McConnell's farm, lately occupied by John Hankinson.

T. A. Marshall is putting up a portable tobacco press in his barn, he has a good crop of his own to prize.

Both candidates for Circuit Clerk were in this precinct last week. They found very muddy roads but plenty of voters.

Mrs. Ben Wilson has been confined to her bed for several days with a severe cold, but is some better at this writing.

The tow-boat, Nellie Speer, has been at work for several days at the dyke, trying to get some barges off, which were sunk there last week.

Total number enrolled 45, average attendance 33. The following is the name of those whose general average was above 90: Lutie Aylor, Jno. McAtee, Omer Ryle, Roxie Walton, Gracie Walton, Katie and Beatrice Ryle.

On the above day the patrons of the school came in and settled with the teacher, each one bringing along a well filled basket, and a sumptous dinner was spread and enjoyed by all present. The patrons being so well pleased with their teacher that they have employed her to continue the school two months longer.

THE CHRISTENING.

No, I won't forgive our parson—not down to my dyin' day.
He'd orter waited a minit, that's what I'll allers say.
But to christen my boy, my baby, with such an awful name—
Why, where's the use o' talkin'? I tell you he was to blame.

You see it happend in this way: There was father an' Uncle Si
An' mother, an' each one wantin' a finger in the pie—
Each with a name fur baby, as if I hadn't no voice,
But the more they talked an' argied, the more I stuck to my choice.

"Semanthy"—this was father—"you'd best take pattern by mother,
For she named thirteen childern 'thout any such fuss or bother.
As soon as she diskivered that family names was too few,
Why, she just fell back on the Bible, as perfessers air bound to do."

"Semanthy"—this was Reuben—"'most any one else could see
That, bein' as I'm his father, he'd orter be named for me.
You say my name's old fashioned; well, I'm old-fashioned, too,
Yet 'twarn't so long ago, neither, that both of us suited you."

Then there was Uncle Silas: "Semanthy, I tell ye what—
Jest name him Silas. I'll give him that hundred-acre lot—
I'll make out the deed to morrer—an' then when I've gone to my rest,
There'll be a trifle o' money to help him feather his nest."

But the worst of all was mother. She says' so meek an' mild
"I'd love to call him Jotham, after my oldest child;
He died on his second birthday. The others are grown-up men,
But Jotham is still my baby; he has never grown since then.
His hair was soft an' curlin', eyes blue as blue could be,
An' this boy of yours, Semanthy, jest brings him back to me."

Well, it warn't no easy matter to keep on sayin' No,
An' disapp'intin' every one. Poor Rube he fretted so,
When I told him the name I'd chosen, that he fairly made me cry;
For I'd planned to name the darling Augustus Percival Guy.
Ah! that was a name worth hearin', so 'ristocratic an' grand!
He might 'a held up his head then with the proudest in the land
But now— Well, 'tisn't no wonder, when I look at that blessed child
An' think of the name he's come to, that I can't be reconciled.

At last I coaxed up Reuben, an' a Sabbath mornin' came
When I took my boy to meetin' to git his Christian name
Jest as proud as a peacock I stood a-waitin' there;
I couldn't hardly listen to the readin' nor the prayer.
For of half a dozen babies mine was the finest of all:
An' they had sech common names, too. But pride must have a fall.

"What will ye call him?" says Parson Brown bendin' his head to hear.
Then I handed a bit of paper up, with the names writ full an' clear.
But Uncle Si, 'stead o' passin' it, jest reads it over slow,
With such a wond'rin', puzzled face, as if he didn't know.
The child was beginnin' to fidget, an' Rube was gittin' red,
So I kinder scowled at Uncle Si, and then I shook my head.
"The name?" says Parson Brown agin; "I'm 'feard I haven't caught it."
"Jee-hoshaphat!" says Uncle Si, out loud, before he thought it.

The parson—he's near-sighted—he couldn't understand,
Though I p'inted to the paper in Uncle Silas' hand.
But that word did the business; an' before I got my breath
That boy was named JEHOSHAPHAT. I felt a'most like death
I couldn't keep from cryin' as I hurried down the aisle,
An' I fairly hated Widder Green when I see her kinder smile.
I've never, never called him by that name, an' never will,
An' I can't forgive old Parson Brown, though I bear him no ill-will.
—E. T. Corbett, in Harper's Magazine.

DON THE "BALLANTINE."

The Shock It Caused to a Newly-Married Wife.

When I was thirteen, my mother gave me a diary, with these words: "You are now old enough to begin to think like a woman, and I hope you will fill every page of this book for one year." That was in midwinter—the 15th of January. That diary, with my name, "Maud Brown," in gilt letters on the cover, lies in the corner of the left-hand drawer in the secretary, under the bottom of a large pile of diaries. I am almost afraid to count how many, for I have added one every year. There are marked days all along through them. The day my father fell forty feet on the hard pavement, and was taken up dead, was one. The next year in June my mother died, "June 15,"—and there is a great blot over the date, as if tears had followed the pencil.

That was the year I was fifteen, and after that my best friend was Aunt Polly. I was homeless and friendless, and—without a drop of my blood in her veins, but with a heart as deep as a pool that was never sounded—she opened her house of only five small rooms, and took me in. And there she kept me snug and safe till I found my "place," and then she admonished me thus:

"Such a place does not come to every fifteen-year-old girl, for the asking, very often, let me tell you; and whether you keep it or not, depends."

I think in her heart of hearts Aunt Polly believed I should be "weighed in the balances, and found wanting."

The "place" which I possessed in spite of my youth and inexperience was the refreshment table in a small country station on the B. & A. road. To stand day after day, and week after week, and month after month, and year after year, and pour coffee by the cupful, and dole out beans and doughnuts and sandwiches and squares of sponge cake, and to drop five and ten-cent bits into the little till behind the counter—that was all my ambition.

"What on earth could any one in such a place be thankful for?" lisps some dainty miss of fifteen years, who may be reading this, with her nose well turned up and the corners of her mouth well drawn down in unfeigned disgust; "I should rather die, and done with it."

All right, my little maid, but what if you found you couldn't die, just for the wanting? You have your father and mother and older sister, and a strapping brother may be, who, although he teases the life out of you, would move Heaven and earth to keep you high and dry, in a pinch.

But if your father and mother should die, and you were alone, and found that the the very roof that had sheltered you wasn't yours, and that the bread you ate belonged to another—what then? There is bitterer bread than that earned by honest toil, let me tell you. This "place was like a great plank swung down to me out of deep darkness, broad and strong and sure, and I stepped upon it with a thankful heart, but I staid with Aunt Polly just the same. Six days out of seven she washed and boiled and sudsed and rinsed and whitened clothes to the whiteness of the driven snow, and all the time she kept me and everything around her in a state of shining neatness. I liked my work and succeeded in it, so that Aunt Polly got bravely over her forebodings, and as I grew up into the estate of womanhood believed in me.

And so five years passed, so crowded full that they glided by like a weaver's shuttle, and I woke one sposhy morning to find myself twenty. I went out into the morning, through the mud and slosh and darkness, blindfolded. Blindfolded, and it must be confessed, down-hearted. Looking back at it now, I think my head ached.

The train was half an hour late, and the smoking kerosene lamps grew dingier and more smoky, as they flared and spluttered in the light that peeped slowly over the eastern hills. I was looking at them, and wondering why Jack Briggs could not take a lesson in cleaning chimneys from Aunt Polly, when the train struck the bridge, half a mile away. Only a few got off that morning, the most of the passengers remembering that they were only an hour from Springdale. I dropped the bits of silver in the till, and rinsed the cups—wondering why it took them so long to "water," and when that screeching engine would be off.

Just then Jack Briggs, whose name ought to have been Jehu, since he was always first to bear evil tidings, rushed in, and said that "something ailed the tackling and they must stop for repairs."

"What will come next?" said I, impatiently, stepping on to a chair to turn down the light which had sputtered itself into a state of imbecility.

"David and Jonathan" came next, and it was like a ray of sunlight to see them. Two men from the far West, who were always together, so I called them "David and Jonathan." Moreover they had married twin sisters, and each had more than half a dozen children. I used to think it was worth a day's wages to serve those people—the happiest, jolliest set that ever rode on a rail, and I thought it was my great fortune that they rode on my particular rail very often. The very sight of David and Jonathan always put me in my best spirits. They both came in talking together and joking each other about oversleeping, and David drew from his pockets a package of sweets and said that Tot, his five-year-old daughter, sent it to me, with her love for my birthday.

"Why," I said (more pleased than I could tell) "how did the child know it was my birthday?"

"Oh, her mother knew it and told her—she knows everything."

I reflected that I must have told her at some time, though when or why I had not the slightest recollection. I said what was indeed true, that I had never had any birthday remembrance that pleased me as much, and then, finding the room filling rapidly, I turned to my work.

Right here the strangest thing happened. I dropped the little package in the till, thinking to myself "my best birthday present," when something came into my mind like a flash:

"Your best birthday present stands before you."

I raised my eyes quickly, and what I saw directly before me, across the table, was a man enveloped in fur from head to foot. As startled as I was, my judgment came to my rescue in time to attend to his order. "A cup of coffee and sandwich."

That man drank his coffee, wiped his mouth, paid me the exact change and was off without any more notice or thought of me than if I had been a bushwhacker of Central Abyssinia—and candor compels me to acknowledge, not half so much.

And now I must make a digression long enough to say that in all my plans for my future, marriage had never entered into my thoughts. I had planned for myself a business life—and when several good opportunities of marriage had come to me, it had vexed Aunt Polly's righteous soul that I had refused them. I reassured the good creature with the promise that when the right one came I would accept him, but I settled it with myself meantime that the right one never would come. And without the least waste of sentiment I am going to confess that from the time I saw that man standing before me I as firmly believed that he would be my husband.

I didn't know if he was as poor as the Thanksgiving bird usually attributed to Job—(though why that long-suffering individual should forever be saddled with a turkey surpasses me)—or if he was as rich as the Rothschilds; he might be as much married as David and Jonathan put together, it made no difference. He would come my way again some time, and I should know him whether he were dressed in seals like an Eskimo, or like the "veiled prophet of Khorassan."

Meantime I kept my own counsel, only telling my diary all about it, that is, as much as I could compass within the space of ten lines, which was all there was to tell.

It was not till midsummer that he came again. Water lilies were on the table, and Jack Briggs had pinned a wild rose in my hair.

It was the noon express from Boston this time, and the room was full. In the press of summer travel, I used to tell Aunt Polly I longed for a dozen pair of hands, backed by a forty-pound power of heart and brain. The ice gave out right in the midst of it, and I went out to call Jack—and when I returned he was there.

I knew him the moment I set eyes on him, though the fur was replaced by the gayest and coolest of wraps. He handed me the change, after I had attended to his order and was off without a word or a look. I laughed to myself, as I brushed and re-arranged the table.

"He will come again, it may be in five years, it may be in ten, but he will come, and he will one day know me. I am in no hurry, I can wait."

The very next day he returned and went through the same performance, but I scored one point this time for I learned his name and something more. He had formerly lived in Denver, but had established a branch at Albany and would be back and forth. I thought so! I felt as if I was witnessing a play, to have acted or to have tried in any way to attract his attention would have spoiled it all.

He came, perhaps, during the rest of the summer, once in two weeks—sometimes oftener. Sometimes a friend would accompany him and I could hear snatches of talk, from which I gathered that he liked the East and should remain here for several years.

Lest this should prove an unacceptably long story, I will plunge at once "in medias res." On the "Twentieth Oct." my diary witnessed this confession:

"He looked at me to-day for the first time, and he looked again; the curtain is fairly up."

The next day he returned at noon. "Thought you were coming back on the Owl," said an acquaintance.

"I preferred to wait till daylight." Herein lay a secret, to which I alone had the key. I never waited on the Owl.

The next page of my diary reads like this:

October 21: "The tips of his fingers touched the palm of my hand to-day in making change."

The next time after that I had the courage to look him full in the face. He leaned over the counter and said to me a few low-spoken words with as much deference as he would have addressed the Queen. I wouldn't have spoken of this for the world, to have whispered it to the bird in my chamber would have seemed like profanation.

In the days that followed, Aunt Polly became my greatest trial, because in the depths of her honest heart she distrusted the man. But from the first it was given to me to have perfect confidence in him. Never for one moment did I doubt. Just seven years to a day after I took the refreshment table I gave it up to Jane Briggs. My friend wanted me to go before, but I begged to stay.

"Let me serve this old 'B. & A.' my full seven years," I said to him. "It has given you to me, and if I served it until 'seventy times seven I could never pay the debt.'" And then I went off for one year of study. I had saved my money wisely, and I was determined to use it well.

I was "dreadful proud;" I think poor folks usually are. And so I had my own way, and on my twenty-fourth birthday we were married in Aunt Polly's parlor, and Jack Briggs and David and Jonathan, with their wives and children, were about all there were to shake hands with us, except the minister, and then we took that six o'clock express from Albany.

We spent six months abroad, then came home. During all my journeying the coming home hung on me like a nightmare. I dreaded meeting my husband's friends. I wished I could keep him away from them forever. I was as proud as ever I was, and foolish in my new position, because I knew how ill I was adapted to it. I had never given much attention to my looks, only to respect Aunt Polly's demand for perfect neatness, but comparing myself with the ladies I met in my husband's circle, it began to grow upon me that I was handsomer than all. My chief ambition had been to appear so that my husband would not be ashamed of me—to realize that he was very proud of me was a revelation of delight. But I soon tired of much that I saw in society. The magnificence of my new home overwhelmed me. I fitted up the smallest rooms in a simple way, and there I most delighted to spend my evenings alone with my husband.

After a year of married life my faith in him was stronger than the day I was married. There was no fault that I could find in him. I had hugged to my heart the idea of spending my birthday and first anniversary with Aunt Polly. But I wouldn't go without my husband, and he told me that he had "good reasons why he ought not to leave the city that day."

Such was my confidence in him that I never questioned or demurred. As a kind of compensation for my disappointment there came a remembrance from my little friend Tot, which was of itself enough to glorify the day, and when my husband came home to dinner in the best of spirits and told me that I should "have the evening where and how I wished," I told him gayly that I would have it there with him, and nowhere else.

Now I will jump over a month. I had not yet paid my visit to Aunt Polly, when one morning my husband told me he "would go down with me the next day." "Why," I said, "to-morrow is St. Valentine's Day. We will go on the early train and I will carry her the best present she ever had for a valentine."

I don't know when anything had ever made me happier than the thought of that visit. I trilled and sang around the house all day like a school-girl going home for her first vacation. I went out and selected my present and laughed softly to myself as I thought how delighted she would be to see us, and I wondered if my bird would know me, or if Aunt Polly had kept my rocking-chair in its place by the window, and then I came home and made a fuss of packing my traveling-bag, and counted the hours till it would be time to start.

When my husband came home at five o'clock he said "he was very sorry to disappoint me again, but he really could not go with me the next day, but that I could go alone if I wished."

"Go alone!" I cried, in a torrent of tears: "did I marry you to go alone? I won't go alone."

He rose quickly, and came over to where I sat.

"Why, Maud, I had no idea you were thinking so much about it. I will surely go with you the day after to-morrow, if that will do."

"Of course it will do," said I, dashing away the tears. "I am not a baby." But I was dreadfully disappointed, nevertheless.

My husband went off early in the morning, and when at nightfall there came a note from him, that he should not return that night, I would have cried, if I had dared. But dinner was waiting, and the servants were argus-eyed. Oh, I thought, if I could live where I am not watched by a hundred eyes! I have never been used to servants. I hate servants.

After dinner, which I forced myself to eat, I took my husband's letters and carried them up to his table. Looking over the different superscriptions idly, one held my attention. It was written in a singularly clear lady's hand, and was postmarked in the city. I noticed that the sealing had not been secure, and the envelope had opened. Without stopping to consider if I was doing an indelicate act, I drew out the folded sheet and something wrapped in tissue paper fell out.

The photograph of a child—a singularly handsome boy. While I looked there flashed out at me such a resemblance to my husband that I sank down trembling like a leaf. With this was a note in the lady's writing. I must have held this an hour before I could summon courage to read it. This is what I read at last:

BALLANTINE'S DAY IN THE MORNING.—My Darling Parpee: I send you my picture for a ballantine. How do you like it, mon, pere? Josie says that means you—my father; but I like better to call you parpee. Josie says, too, that she likes the picture, because it looks like you, and she kisses it, and she hugs and kisses me lots—and says I'm her own darling child. I had it taken with the money you gave me last January, the fifteenth, when I was so sick, and you staid so long with me, and the Dr. made me take that bitter stuff that made me well. Josie is going to have her picture in the new sealskin sack you gave her. We both cry if you don't come every day, and I want a new jack-knife and some jack straws.

Josie sends love and so do I, with forty kisses. DONALD M'INTYRE.

I read this—every word—over and over till I could repeat it by heart. Then I rang the bell for Vinette. I think she thought I had had a shock, she looked so frightened.

"You are sick, madam; can I do anything for you?"

"No, I am not sick—will you call George?"

The man appeared.

"George, Mr. McIntyre is not expected home to-night."

"No, madam."

"What time does the night express leave for Boston?"

"At midnight, madam."

"You will take me to the station for that train."

"Madam?"

"I wish to take that midnight train."

"It is raining hard since night-fall, madam."

"Never mind what it is doing. I must leave the city on that train. What time is it?"

"On the stroke of eleven, madam."

"Go. I will be ready."

The man bowed and withdrew. I took the "ballantine" and put it with the letter in a sealed envelope and left it on top of the pile of letters without writing one word. I only prayed for strength to get out of that house before I died. I only hoped I should never look on Mr. McIntyre's face again. I put together a few things—nothing that my husband had given me. I took off the rich dress that I wore, and wrapped myself in a plain wool dress. It wanted a quarter to twelve when I went down stairs. My wedding ring hit on the balustrade. Hastily re-entering my chamber, I removed the ring with its keeper and laid them on the directed letter.

I stumbled along in the dimly-lighted, badly ventilated compartments of the car to a seat. That was it—stumbled. I could not see one inch before my face—yet there were no tears in my eyes. I could not put two connected thoughts together—yet I knew I was not crazy, not yet. I raised the window and stretched out my hand with my handkerchief. In a minute it was soaking wet and I bound it over my forehead. I left the window up a little and put my face close to it. The very storm that came tearing down the hill-sides and sweeping along the track where the red lights went flashing along through the darkness, was a comfort. Through all the hours of that midnight ride I saw pictures—pictures of all the outcast and "hedged in" of every clime since the world was made. I felt myself one of them—I dared not look back—I could not look forward, beyond the getting to Aunt Polly.

It was black, with the blackness that precedes the morn, when we stopped at the little station. I got down on the side nearest Aunt Polly's and plunged into the night. I know every step of the way, and straight as an arrow I went to Aunt Polly's door. I rapped on the low window-sill, holding with both hands and thinking I should die before I got in. A minute after, I hoped I should die, right there in Aunt Polly's arms.

It was six weeks before I opened my eyes to know anything or anybody. A soft light was flooding the room, and I lay very still wondering if I was dead. I tried to listen to a trill over my head, asking myself if they muffled canaries in Heaven. Then some one laid a hand softly on my head and told me to go to sleep. It was Aunt Polly's hand and Aunt Polly's voice, and I no longer cared whether I was in Heaven or on earth. Somebody had said that "death is a great revealer of secrets." I had gone so far down into its shadows that much of earthly obscurity melted away like mist before the sun rising.

One day I opened my eyes full and fearlessly upon a face that in my blindness I had prayed I might never look upon again, yet I did not shriek, or tremble, or cry out. I think it has been given to me to be thankful that I was spared to hear what he had to say to me. But the story was told to me in sections, as I was able to bear it.

This boy, Donald McIntyre, who bore my husband's name, and called him father, was the only child of a double cousin, hence the strong resemblance. Caring for him as his own child after the death of his parents, he had neglected to tell me, from a foolish sensitiveness, lest I might not love the child. He was very sick on the 15th of January, and—

"Oh," cried I, "don't say any more about the child. I can almost fall down and worship him, if you'll tell me about that dreadful Josie, who sends you her picture in a sealskin sack and cries if you don't come."

For reply Mr. McIntyre held a photograph case before my eyes. On one page was the veritable "Don, the ballantine," and opposite the handsomest negress I had ever seen, her portly form arrayed from head to foot in a sealskin cloak.

Now you have the story in a nut-shell. Donald and Josie were installed members of our household as soon as I was able to return, and the next year we induced Aunt Polly to come and make our house her home. I arranged a tub for her in our laundry, where she could fly for refuge when old-time habits were strong upon her.

That same year, on the 14th of February; we had a royal bequest, dimpled and sweet, done up in softest folds of wool, and there was not a prouder or a happier boy the wide seas over than "Don, the ballantine."—St. Louis Republican.

FARM FUEL.

A Possible Use of Corn in the Great Northwest.

You are doubtless well aware of the scarcity and high price of fuel for heating houses in by far the larger portions of the Northwest, most conspicuously in the prairie sections. Hay, and also cornstalks, twisted in long rolls, three or four inches in diameter, and then bound with fine wire, have been used, the twist being cut off in sections ten to twenty inches long. Flax straw has been tried, and burns freely, giving off much heat. At Windom, Minn., trussed prairie hay has been used as fuel for a steam mill. Five or six years since, when crossing the then almost uninhabited prairie, southward near Spencer, Ia., a tired horse needed scalded oats, and a few short sections of a hay twist brought a kettle of water to boiling heat in shorter time than any other farm fuel we had previously seen. Heretofore cornstalks have been pressed in bundles, or formed into balls several inches thick, which burn well—too rapidly, indeed, in stoves that are large enough to admit them.

But all the temporary kinds of fuel yet tried, so far as I am aware, have failed in becoming a desirable auxiliary to soft and hard coal for the Northwest. Doubtless you have seen horses sweat profusely when fed on ear or shelled corn and rapidly driven, which is evidence of the heating nature of maize, our Indian corn. But you may not have seen big stove fires made with it, as is sometimes a necessity, when the coal supply fails in the biting cold weather of some of our severe winters. I have seen a dozen or more of corn-fuel fires, and ear corn burns freely and steadily, giving off a steady heat—as strong as that given off by Crooked Creek, Fort Dodge or Illinois coal.

Corn contains a large proportion of carbon, so large that it is inferred to be the food basis of the excessive fat and deficient muscle in many of the popular hog families of our time. The percentage of starch, oil and suine, proximate forms of carbon, is eight hundred and fifty parts in one thousand, which shows conclusively that a large basis of carbon exists in corn. The practical question now is: Can this starch oil and fat be extracted as flaxseed oil is extracted, or in some modified manner?

If by mechanical pressure, or by diffusion, the fuel or oil can be got out of corn, there is certainly a big job of useful work, as there are vast stores of carbon in the large annual corn crops of this country, and it is only a question of how to separate the oil and starch from the corn. If this result can be worked out, there will be abundant supplies of fuel, as every farmer might raise corn enough to furnish a "corn-oil" supply to half a dozen farmers, and others.

Kerosene, coal-oil, gasoline, and other kinds of liquid carbon being used for fuel in considerable quantities, I perceive no objection to corn-oil, which is probably exempt from objection on the grounds of explosive or malodorous properties.—Plymouth Co. (Ia.) Cor. Country Gentleman.

HOOF-OINTMENT.

A Valuable Composition for the Cure of Hoof Troubles.

There are many prescriptions given for hoof ointments, some of which are good and some worse than useless. The first thing to be considered in management of the feet is cleanliness. Each night the hoofs should be wiped clean, and the mud and dirt all picked out of the soles. Too much grease or fatty substances of any kind are not conducive to the health of the horn, and their over-application should be avoided. Glycerine, applied once or twice per week, is very good, and is also less likely to gather dirt than some other ointments. Equal parts of tallow, wax and honey make a good ointment, and this can be made black by adding a little lampblack. The lampblack does not add any to the quality of the ointment, but with this it will give the hoofs a nicer appearance. Always keep the hoofs clean, and do not put on layers of ointment one after the other, thinking in this way to give the hoofs a protective covering; for, instead, you may destroy the integrity of the horn. Another mistake is oftentimes made by the shoer in rasping the foot smooth to give it a nice appearance. It should not be touched by the rasp above the clinches of the nails.—N. Y. World.

SHOWING OFF.

A Fault With Which Many Young Men are Afflicted.

Every boy who mingles with other boys knows the meaning of the words "showing off." It is a common foible of human nature, but it is most noticeable among young persons, because they do their showing off so awkwardly. Every one sees that they are showing off, even when they are not distinctly conscious of it themselves. People of maturer age, who have even a moderate amount of sense, have discovered that it is of no use for any one to try to pass himself off for anything he is not. We are all seen through by our companions—every one of us. The measure of our worth is taken correctly; if not to-day, then to-morrow or the day after to-morrow. Every individual makes about the right impression upon others, and has, sooner or later, about his just measure of respect. No one need trouble himself concerning the opinion others form of him, because it is almost sure to be what it should be.

How often one sees a quiet boy in school, whom no one particularly notices, and who even may be unprepossessing in appearance, making his way to universal esteem without trying for it, or thinking about it. He goes along doing his duty, making no pretenses and no claims, but all the while he is gaining in the esteem of others, until some incident of school-life reveals that he is the boy whom every one has been observing, and in whom every one confides.

There is a tendency, perhaps, to be a little unjust to boys that show off. Society is full of very good fellows who had this propensity when they were young, and who outgrew it long before they left school. Youth is the time to get rid of this folly. A father said, the other day, when he was reminded of his boy's habit of showing off: "I am glad Tom has this fault so young, as he will have the longer time to conquer it." A sure cure for showing off is to notice how silly other people look when they are doing it. We all have vanity enough left in ourselves to recognize it in others, and we are all good enough to detest our faults when we see others practice them.—Youth's Companion.

Loss of Flesh and Strength, with poor appetite, and perhaps slight cough in morning, or on first lying down at night, should be looked to in time. Persons afflicted with consumption are proverbially unconscious of their real state. Most cases commence with disordered liver, leading to bad digestion and imperfect assimilation of food—hence the emaciation, or wasting of the flesh. It is a form of scrofulous disease, and is curable by the use of that greatest of all blood-cleansing, anti-bilious and invigorating compounds, known as Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery."

Purify Your Blood
Hood's Sarsaparilla purifies, enriches and vitalizes the blood, stimulates the digestion, and gives strength to the whole body, effecting remarkable cures of scrofula, salt rheum, all humors, dyspepsia, biliousness, headache, kidney and liver complaints, catarrh, rheumatism, and that tired feeling caused by change of climate, season, or life.
"I was troubled with salt rheum three years. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and am entirely cured, and my weight has increased from 108 pounds to 135."
MRS. ALICE SMITH, Stamford, Conn.
Hood's Sarsaparilla
"For years I suffered from indigestion, being very restless in the night, and in the morning I would get up with a very tired feeling. After taking only part of a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla I slept well and felt refreshed on waking. Hood's Sarsaparilla has done me more good than anything else."
MRS. H. D. WINANS, Jackson, Mich.
"Hood's Sarsaparilla has cured me of blood poison."
W. H. BARR, Steubenville, O.
"I have taken, by advice, a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it did me good. My blood was all out of order, and I felt like an old man. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes me feel young and active as a boy of twelve."
JULIUS KRATZER, Fort Wayne, Ind.
"I used Hood's Sarsaparilla last spring and can truly say it helped me very much. To those suffering with bilious complaints, nervous prostration, or rheumatism, I earnestly recommend it."
MRS. E. CARPENTER, Kalamazoo, Mich.
Purifies the Blood
"When in the spring I felt all run down and much debilitated, I found Hood's Sarsaparilla just the medicine to build me up. My wife also, after much physical prostration, found in its use new life and lasting benefit. Upon our little girl, who had been sick with scarlet fever, its effect was marvelous, entirely removing the poison from her blood and restoring her to good health. Hood's Sarsaparilla deserves our highest praise." E. G. STRATTON, Swampscott, Mass.

Scrofula of Lungs.
I am now 49 years old, and have suffered for the last fifteen years with a lung trouble. I have spent thousands of dollars to arrest the march of this disease; but temporary relief was all that I obtained. I was unfit for any manual labor for several years. A friend strongly recommended the use of Swift's Specific (S. S. S.), claiming that he himself had been greatly benefited by its use in some lung troubles. I resolved to try it. The results are remarkable. My cough has left me, my strength has returned, and I weigh sixty pounds more than I ever did in my life. It has been three years since I stopped the use of the medicine, but I have had no return of the disease, and there are no pains or weakness felt in my lungs. I do the hardest kind of work. T. J. HOLT.

THE 13 Useless Doctors!
In vain, physicians came, with subtle skill,
And tried, in turn, prescription, lotion, pill;
With saddened looks they viewed her furry [tongue,
In solemn silence stethoscoped each lung;
From moulting head to gout distorted toe,
They searched, then said, "Poor woman, 'tis [no go"!

A WOMAN'S GRATITUDE. Mrs. F. OATS, of Shumway, Ill., writes: "When I had used Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' one week, I could walk all over the door-yard, and I could get into a wagon and ride two miles to see my neighbors. I had not been able to walk out in the door-yard for six months. After using the 'Favorite Prescription' two weeks, I rode in a wagon ten miles; my neighbors were all surprised to see me up and going about and helping to do my housework, after doctoring with thirteen of the best physicians we could get—and the last one told my husband that I would never be able to do my housework any more. I am thankful to my God that I wrote to you, for I had suffered from 'Female Weakness' until I had almost given up in despair."

TERRIBLE PAIN. Mrs. F. E. WILCOX, Friendship, N. Y., writes: "For five or six years I had been badly troubled with female weakness and terrible pains across the small of my back and pit of the stomach. Three bottles of Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' acted like a charm, and cured me completely, to my great joy."

MARVELOUS BENEFITS. Rev. SIDNEY C. DAVIS, Galien, Michigan, writes: "I wish, in this letter, to express my gratitude for Mrs. Davis and myself for the great good which has been accomplished in her case by the use of your proprietary medicines. When she began to take them, in January last, she could not endure the least jar, could walk but a very few steps at a time, and could stay up only about thirty minutes at a time. Now she not only sits up almost the entire day, but can walk around, call on her neighbors, two and three blocks away, and not feel any injurious effects at all. When we consider that she had kept her bed the greater part of the time for fourteen months, and would lose repeatedly the advance she had made, her progress now seems marvelous. We had almost lost confidence in medical practitioners, and advertised remedies, but have found in your Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Pellets' the properties needed, and which we believe will bring about a complete and final recovery."
BED-FAST FOR MONTHS.

TREATING THE WRONG DISEASE.
Many times women call upon their family physicians, one with dyspepsia, another with palpitation, another with backache, or nervousness, another with pain here and there, and in this way they all present alike to themselves and their easy-going and indifferent doctor, separate and distinct diseases, for which he prescribes his pills and potions, assuming them to be such, when, in reality, they are all symptoms caused by some uterine disorder. While the physician is ignorant of the cause of suffering, he encourages his practice until large bills are made, when the suffering patient is no better, but probably worse for the delay, treatment, and other complications made. A proper medicine directed to the cause would perhaps have entirely removed the disease, thereby instituting comfort instead of prolonged misery.

DOCTORS FAIL. "Female Weakness" Cured.—Mrs. SARAH A. LOVELY, Greenfield, Adair Co., Iowa, writes: "R. V. PIERCE, M. D. Dear Sir—Having been ill a number of years, and having tried in vain almost every advertised remedy, as well as having paid nearly a hundred dollars to our local physicians, without benefit, I was finally induced to consult you. You advised me to send for your medicines. I accordingly sent for your 'Medical Adviser,' six bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' six of your 'Favorite Prescription,' and six vials of your 'Pleasant Purgative Pellets.' When I first began using these I could not stand on my feet. In ninety days I could walk a mile, and do light housework; whilst in six months I was completely cured, and my health has remained perfect ever since. I recommend you and your medicines wherever I go and loan your 'Adviser' to my friends. Two of our most prominent physicians who have read your great work 'The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser,' pronounce it the best family doctor book they have ever seen."

A THOUSAND THANKS. Mrs. CAROLINE BYERS, corner Duke and Argyle Streets, Halifax, N. S., writes: "DR. R. V. PIERCE, I thank God, and thank you a thousand times, for the relief that your valuable medicines, the 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Pellets' have given me. I am perfectly cured of a chronic sickness that had troubled me for years. How my heart is overflowed with joy and gratitude towards you, my tongue can never express."

"ALL RUN DOWN." Mrs. V. H. PETERSON, of Lockport, N. Y., had suffered for three years from "female weakness," was greatly emaciated and "all run down" as she expressed it, and Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" and "Golden Medical Discovery" promptly cured her, as they have thousands of similar cases.

"DO LIKEWISE." Mrs. E. F. MORGAN, of Newcastle, Lincoln Co., Maine, says: "Five years ago I was a dreadful sufferer from uterine troubles. Having exhausted the skill of three physicians, I was completely discouraged, and so weak I could with difficulty cross the room alone. I began taking Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' and using the local treatment recommended in his 'Common Sense Medical Adviser.' I commenced to improve at once. In three months I was perfectly cured, and have had no trouble since. I wrote a letter to my family paper, briefly mentioning how my health had been restored, and offering to send the full particulars to any one writing me for them, and inclosing a stamped envelope for reply. I have received over four hundred letters. In reply, I have described my case and the treatment used, and have earnestly advised them to 'do likewise.' From a great many I have received second letters of thanks, stating that they had commenced the use of 'Favorite Prescription,' had sent the $1.50 required for the 'Medical Adviser,' and had applied the local treatment so fully and plainly laid down therein, and were much better already."

DOCTOR'S MISTAKE. Mrs. HENRY PATTERSON, of New York City, writes: "I had been under an eminent physician's care for eight months for what he called 'spinal disease.' I became worse during all this time, when, chancing to see a copy of Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser at the residence of a friend, I read that part devoted to 'Woman and her Diseases.' I soon became convinced that my disease was a uterine affection, which, as you say, caused sympathetic backache, inward fever, nervousness, and general debility. I commenced the use of Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery,' applying also the local treatment which he recommends in the Adviser, and in three months I was well and strong."

OVER-WORKED WOMEN.
For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, dress-makers, general housekeepers, and over-worked women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics.
NOT A "CURE-ALL." Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is not a "Cure-all," but admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most potent Specific for all those Chronic Weaknesses and Diseases peculiar to women. It is a powerful, general as well as uterine, tonic and nervine, and imparts vigor and strength to the whole system.
It promptly cures nausea and weakness of stomach, indigestion, bloating, eructations of gas, nervous prostration, debility and sleeplessness, in either sex. "Favorite Prescription" is sold by druggists under our positive guarantee. For conditions, see wrapper around bottle. Price Reduced to $1.00 per Bottle, or Six Bottles for $5.00.
EVERY INVALID LADY should send for "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," in which over fifty pages are devoted to the consideration of diseases peculiar to women. Illustrated with numerous wood-cuts and colored plates. It will be sent, post-paid, to any address for $1.50. A large pamphlet, treatise on Diseases of Women, profusely illustrated with colored plates and numerous wood-cuts, will be sent for ten cents in postage stamps. Address,

AERIAL NAVIGATION.

A Chicago Doctor Who Will Build a New Style of Air-Ship.

Incorporation of a Company to Test De Baussett's Vacuum Scheme.

CHICAGO, Feb. 19.—Articles of incorporation were issued at Springfield yesterday for the Transcontinental Aerial Navigation Company of Chicago, to establish aerial transportation lines, the capital stock being $150,000, and the incorporators Dr. Arthur De Baussett, Eugene Marguerat and Jules Lang. Mr. De Baussett is a French physician who has resided in Chicago for several years past, and has made a study of aerial navigation for over twenty-two years. Dr. De Baussett's object is to build an air ship, the length of which will be 174 feet; its width is to be 24 feet and its height 22 feet. The main cylinder will be 654 feet in length and 144 feet in diameter. It is expected to prove by the vacuum theory that it is possible to navigate the air by the laws of gravitation by overcoming the pressure of the atmosphere without filling it with hydrogen or other gas. It is intended to begin the work of building the ship in about two weeks, and it will be completed in about two months. Dr. De Baussett is confident that the search for the North Pole can be successfully accomplished by means of his air ship, which will be so arranged that it can be propelled over ice as well as through the air. He is in receipt of a flattering letter from the Smithsonian Institute concerning his invention, and is in communication with James Gordon Bennett, of New York, in relation to making an exploration for the North Pole when the ship is completed.

The Eight-Hour Law.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—Congressman Muller, of New York, to-day presented a petition signed by President Lillie, of the Labor League, and nearly a thousand others, praying for the prompt adjudication of the claims of laborers employed by the Government for services rendered in excess of eight hours a day. The petition was referred to the Committee on Claims. Mr. Muller, on behalf of the Committee on Claims, of which he is a member, subsequently conferred with Mr. O'Neill, Chairman of the Committee on Labor where the question of allowances for time served in excess of eight hours since the enactment of the eight-hour law is also under consideration, and it was decided to arrange as soon as possible for a joint meeting of the two committees with a view to prepare a measure to cover all cases of claimants under the eight-hour law. Both Congressmen are deeply interested in the subject, and say they will use every endeavor to comply with the requests of the petitioners.

Another Chapter in a Great Horror.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., Feb. 19.—The sequel of the terrible deeds enacted last evening by David Sholty, the insane man of Shirley, when he shot several members of his brother's family, and burned his brother's valuable barn is, that the demented man perished in the flames which he set. After shooting Mrs. Sholty and her seventeen-year-old daughter, he climbed to the hay-mow, set fire to the building and then, instead of fleeing, as was thought, he held himself to the grain bin, where he was first discovered, and remained there until the flames overtook him. His charred and roasted remains were found in the debris of the burned building at daylight. He had a revolver and two shot guns which he had stolen from neighbors. He was forty-four years of age and unmarried. Levi Sholty, it transpires, was not hurt, the buckshot cutting his coat only, but his wife received thirteen buckshot in her back, and is thought to be fatally injured.

A Noble Hangman.

LONDON, Feb. 19.—As the result of a statement that a well known Baronet had assisted Hangman Barry in hanging the three Netherby burglars, Sir Charles De Crespigny, in an interview to-day, admitted that he was the one alluded to. He said that as he would probably be sheriff he desired to gain experience in order that he might be prepared in case he should be obliged to act himself in the absence of the hangman. He slept in the prison during the night, pinioned one of the culprits himself, and generally assisted Berry. The latter considers Sir Charles a plucky individual who does his task well. Sir Charles appears to take a lively interest in his chosen calling.

A Dangerous Counterfeit Dollar.

LA CROSSE, WIS., Feb. 19.—Teller Henderson, of the La Crosse National Bank, has discovered a counterfeit silver dollar that is pronounced by all bank people in the city absolutely the most dangerous ever seen. It is a standard silver dollar of the coinage of 1881. The outside is silver, and the die in every substantial particular as clear as the original. It stands all microscopic tests. The only possible means of detection is by weight, it being exactly forty-seven grains short of the standard and estimated about forty-three grains short of the average.

Foreign News.

LONDON, Feb. 19.—Sir Charles Dilke's constituency, with but a handful dissenting, voted confidence in him. The Portuguese Ministry has resigned. Servia is negotiating with Turkey for a union of Bosnia and Servia similar to that of Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia. A Nihilist circular has been discovered which dooms to death certain prominent officials. The Chancery court has authorized the sale of the Blenheim gallery in June. Senor Canovas Del Castillo has been absolved by the Pope of all interdictions, and the Order of Christ is conferred upon him.

Whisky and Opium Do Their Work.

GRAND HAVEN, MICH., Feb. 19.—John Doyle, of Holland, a young man of twenty-eight years, was found last night lying in the street in an insensible condition apparently drunk. He was accordingly taken to jail where it was found he was in a dying condition. Investigation showed that he had been drinking in company with several young men during the evening, and every time he took a drink he was observed to squeeze a brown substance into his glass. This substance afterward proved to have been opium, but the deadly poison was not recognized by any of his friends. He died during the night.

A Week's Failures.

NEW YORK, Feb. 19.—The business failures occurring throughout the country during the last seven days, as reported to R. G. Dun & Co., number for the United States 251 and for Canada 35, or a total of 286, as compared with 275 last week and 287 the week previous. The business casualties in the Southern States and in Canada are still above the average.

A Farmer Shot Dead from Ambush.

McLEANSBORO, ILL., Feb. 19.—John Mann, a wealthy farmer, was ambushed on the road near his home by two unknown assassins and shot dead from his horse. The motive for the deed is a mystery.

Flying Columns Through the Northwest.

OTTAWA, Feb. 19.—The Government has decided to send through the Northwest a flying column composed of A and B Batteries, and detachments from the cavalry and infantry schools. An advance will probably be made during the first week in March. General Middleton will take command, and will, as far as possible, visit the reservations where disaffection has already been shown.

Repairing the Andre Monument.

TAPPAN, N. Y., Feb. 19.—Workmen began the work of restoring the iron fence around the Andre monument. It is understood that the stone will be repaired, but that the inscription will not re-appear in its former language.

A DISCOVERY DISCOUNTED.

A Promising Test of Real Butter Overcome by the Cunning of the Bogus Makers.

COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 18.—It is announced here to-day that Prof. Weber, of the Chair of Agricultural Chemistry, State University, has just made an important discovery in chemistry in connection with the microscopic tests to distinguish oleomargarine from butter. Recently, Dr. Thomas Taylor, of the Department of Agriculture, announced at a meeting of microscopists that butter placed under a microscope showed round crystals marked by a plain cross, which could be found nowhere else. When the polarizer, or selenite is used with the microscope these butter crystals which are in reality only globes of fat, show four parts each, two green and two yellow. The chemical test to distinguish between butter and oleomargarine is very delicate, the only difference between the two material matters appreciable to chemists being that butter contains a small amount of butyric acid, which is lacking in the oleomargarine. The test is not always successful, and as the difference was likely to be wiped out by enterprising oleomargarine manufacturers, Dr. Taylor's discovery was heralded far and wide, and the test has been adopted wherever known. Prof. Webber has now discovered that the mixing of a little water and salt with the olemargerine, a process it always undergoes, causes the bogus butter to develop under the microscope exactly such crystals as are found in the legitimate article, and the same result can be obtained with pure tallow treated in like manner. This discovery destroys the usefulness of Dr. Taylor's discovery and strengthens the position of the oleomargarine manufacturers and venders.

WORK OF A MAD MAN.

Shoots Three Members of His Brother's Family, Then Fires a Valuable Barn and Flees to the Woods.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., Feb. 18.—David Sholty, a lunatic, shot three members of his brother's family and burned the brother's barn, near Shirley, Ill. David Sholty has been demented for some years, but was not thought dangerous. Three days ago he disappeared, and his whereabouts was not known until this evening, when he was discovered in a grain-bin in his brother's (Levi Sholty) barn. Five men attempted to capture him, when he opened fire on them. The men fled to the barn-yard and were pursued by the lunatic. In the barn-yard he shot Levi Sholty in the breast, also Levi Sholty's wife, inflicting wounds in her neck, back and leg. He also shot Levi Sholty's seventeen-year-old daughter. He then fired upon Allen McCoy, but the bullet went wide of its mark. Levi Sholty and his wife are thought to be fatally wounded, but the daughter is not. David Sholty, after emptying his revolver, returned and set fire to the barn and then fled to the timber. Officers have gone from this city to arrest him. The posse is now scouring the country for the lunatic. He is supposed to have a supply of ammunition, and it is feared more blood will be shed. The barn and contents, which were totally destroyed, were worth $10,000. Levi Sholty is an old resident of this county, and is quite wealthy.

IN THE CONVICT'S FAVOR.

Remarkable Suit For Damages in a Tennessee Court.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., Feb. 18.—An interesting case was decided in the Circuit Court this morning. Two years ago Wm. L. Smith was convicted of murder and sentenced to the penitentiary for two years. He was placed in the coal mines of the Knoxville Iron Company under the lease system. He was placed in a dangerous tunnel by the mine boss, and the roof fell in, breaking both legs and one arm, making him a cripple for life. He sued the Knoxville Iron Company and Cherry, Morrow & Co., lessees of the State Penitentiary, for $10,000 damages. The case was on trial for over a week, and the jury returned a verdict for the full amount.

Captured Counterfeiters.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 18.—For some time the Secret Service officials have made strenuous efforts to locate a gang which was vigorously "shoving 'queer'" half dollars and quarters in this city and vicinity. The counterfeiters were finally located at a rather unpretentious brick building on Jackson street occupied by Mrs. Mollie Sullivan. This afternoon the officers quietly surrounded the house and a vigorous rap at the door and a demand for admittance caused the wildest commotion among the gang, but in an instant the door was opened by officers who had been secretly stationed inside the house. The counterfeiters, thus trapped, stood aghast, but were quickly placed under arrest and marched to the United States Court. Their names are Richard Harrigan, Dave Morrison and John McGuire. The man and the woman Sullivan were all arranged before Commissioner Smith. McGuire pleaded guilty, and was at once remanded to jail without bail. His confederates, who pleaded "not guilty," were placed under bonds for a hearing. Twenty half-dollars and sixteen quarters, all newly made, along with the dies, chemicals, and the entire outfit used in the manufacture of the bogus stuff were captured and taken to the marshal's office.

Indians May Not Sling Mail.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 18.—A special from Indian Territory says: Mrs. I. Adair has taken charge of the postoffice at Tallequah, displacing John W. Stapler, who had held the position for twenty years. The change is occasioned by the decision of the Attorney General of the United States to the effect that Indians are ineligible for postmasters, not being citizens of the United States. Mrs. Adair is a white woman, the wife of a prominent Indian.

An Ingenious Suicide.

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—Jean Lobossong, a French cook, was found dead this morning at his boarding house, No. 404 Fourth avenue. He had committed suicide by inhaling gas in an ingenious manner. The gas jet in one corner of his bedroom was turned on full. Over the burner on the pipe was one end of an eight-foot rubber tube. This was run down the side of the wall, and on the other end of this tube was an iron pipe about a foot long. The rubber was coiled once around the body of the dead man and the iron pipe stuck in his mouth. Then over all this was placed the bed clothes and pillow. When found he had evidently been dead two days. He left a letter in French saying that he was tired of life and that he had been out of employment two weeks.

Herders Killed by Apaches.

SANTA FE, N. M., Feb. 18.—Eight sheepherders on the ranch of Solomon Luna, Valencia County, New Mexico, near the Arizona line, had a fight with the Apaches. All the herders were killed. The Luna brothers, with two forces, mounted, have gone to the scene of the fight.

Nothing Like a Good Example.

DES MOINES, IOWA, Feb. 18.—A bill was introduced in the Senate yesterday prohibiting teachers, members of college faculties, State and county superintendents and members of the State Board of Examiners, from using alcoholic and narcotic stimulants.

Two Mothers Claim the Same Baby.

PITTSBURGH, PA., Feb. 18.—A singular case of mistaken identity was developed in the Criminal Court to-day. Mrs. Bauers applied to the Court yesterday for a writ of habeas corpus to compel Mrs. Myers and her husband to produce the body of a four-months-old child in Court. Mrs. Bauers claims that the child was born at the City Home and that Mrs. Myers obtained it from her with the promise that it should be returned. This statement was corroborated by the superintendent of the Home and some nurses. On the other hand both Mr. and Mrs. Myers swore positively that the child was theirs and was born at their house. They called the physicians and several neighbors, who corroborated Mrs. Myers' story. The Court gave the child to Mr. and Mrs. Myers.

FLOATING COFFINS.

An Ice Gorge in the Missouri River At Kansas City,

Cuts Away Twenty Graves from Pest-House Island, and the Occupants Float Down the River.

KANSAS CITY, MO., Feb. 22.—As the result of an ice-gorge, the channel in the Missouri river is cutting away the southern portion of an island opposite the city, on which are located the Pest-house and Small-pox Hospital. There were twenty or more graves on the island, the greater part of which have been washed away up to midnight, and the bodies floated off down the river in their coffins. There is considerable excitement along the river bank. Officials say that there is little danger of future infection. There have been no recent interments, the most of them having been made over a year ago. The city's water supply is also drawn from the Kaw river. The only living tenants of the island are one small-pox patient and his nurse. They are in no present danger from the flood.

IMPORTANT IF TRUE.

The Emperor of China About to Call Back Home the Mongolians Now in America.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 22.—The Chinese community in St. Louis has received what is alleged to be a genuine copy of an imperial proclamation requiring that on or before the 15th of the fifth moon of the present year (May 15), all subjects of the Tai Tsing Empire (China) now residing in the United States of America return home, and instructing them upon application to their Consuls free transportation will be provided from any part of the United States to any part of the Chinese Empire, except the Provinces of Tuong Tung, whose citizens because of superior numbers, are required to pay half fare. The proclamation, while it embodies no threats, intimates that the Chinese Government intends to speedily retaliate upon the American export trade and American residents in China for the long continued outrages upon the Chinese in this country. This design, if carried out, will destroy an annual export of $80,000,000 and expose 9,000 Americans to the terrors of Imperial prosecution. Most of the 80,000 Chinamen in this country are expected to obey this proclamation. Prominent Chinese residents of this city claim that no information concerning the proclamation has been received and the truth of the report is doubted. Advices from New York and Washington are to the same effect.

SLAIN FOR A WITCH.

A Frenzied Farmer Takes the Life of His Old Wife in a Horrible Manner.

OTTAWA, ILL., Feb. 22.—Clarence J. Sears, eighty-eight years old, a farmer, murdered his aged wife at their home four miles northwest of this city Saturday night. The old couple differed in their religious views and Sears, who is an enthusiast, recently arrived at the conclusion that his wife was a witch. She was nearly three score years and ten, of feeble mind, and it is said that she admitted her belief that she was gifted with the powers of witchcraft. At any rate, Sears became crazed by his hallucination and determined that it would be for the best for him to kill her. Arming himself with a handsaw, he went into a room where the old woman was seated. Their daughter-in-law and a couple of grand-children were also in the room. "Do you still believe yourself a witch?" ask Sears of his wife. Her reply did not reach the ears of the witnesses, but it seemingly frenzied Sears, for he struck her down with the heavy saw, and despite the efforts of his daughter-in-law, hacked his old wife to death. He then turned on the young woman and her children, and they were obliged to flee for their lives. Convinced that his wife was dead, Sears left the house. He was captured yesterday and lodged in jail.

Safe-Blowers Caged.

CHICAGO, Feb. 22.—The city detectives are jubilant over their success in capturing a sextet of safe-blowers who have operated successfully throughout the city during the last two months. Each one of the gang has made an unqualified confession of the full extent of their operations, and the evidence is already prepared which will probably land every one of them in the penitentiary. A complete kit of safe-blowing tools, together with a quantity of blasting powder, was found at their rendezvous, and a large amount of plunder, including $30,000 worth of papers, the result of the recent Shemit burglars, was recovered yesterday from under a pile of lumber near the Northwestern railroad bridge. In the pockets of one of the men were a number of "wild cat" bank bills and a memorandum containing the addresses of several business firms and complete descriptions of the interiors of the stores.

Six Persons Poisoned.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 22.—Alexander McLane, wife and three children, and Annie Reardon, an old lady, live at No. 913 North Ninth street. They are very poor and applied to the Provident Association Sunday for assistance. A quantity of corn meal was given them, which was made into bread and eaten by all six. Shortly afterward they were all taken sick and physicians called in said they were suffering from arsenical poisoning. The doctor thinks the children will recover, though he does not feel justified yet in pronouncing the three old people out of danger. There is nothing to idicate how the poison got into the meal.

Derailed and Burned.

BUFFALO, Feb. 22.—A serious accident occurred this forenoon on the Buffalo, New York and Philadelphia railroad, about twelve miles north of Mt. Morris. The train from Nunda to Rochester ran off the track, and the forward coach tipped over and was burned. Eighteen persons were in the coach, and all were more or less seriously injured, among them the Rev. S. D. Moxley and wife, of Nunda, and George Railston and B. F. Coffin, of Mt. Morris. Mrs. Moxley is very seriously, and Mr. Railston and Mr. Coffin slightly hurt.

Escaped Prisoners Recaptured.

CARTHAGE, MO., Feb. 22.—Sheriff Bailey has returned from Dade County with George Hamilton, James Williams, James Fortune and James O'Neal, four of the nine prisoners who escaped from jail here Wednesday. Masters, the murderer, and three others are still at large.

—A fire in Portland, Me., the other day, played havoc with a men's furnishing store. The day following one of a gang of men cleaning out the cellar saw a foot with stocking and shoe on sticking from under a pile of blackened bricks. The men were much excited, and decided at once to send for a coroner. While one started for him, another, bolder than the rest, took hold of the foot and pulled it a little. The foot and leg rapidly came out of the pile of bricks, and his companions scattered, shouting: "He's pulled off one of his legs." They were mistaken. The leg was made of papier mache, for the purpose of advertising stockings and patent gaiters.

—Last Friday night a young man started out with a companion to "have some fun." They sought their fun in drinking-houses and in getting drunk. During the search for fun, and in the progress of the drunk, one of them got a knock on the head, died on Sunday, and was buried yesterday. That was the end of his fun; and another of the participants is in jail, held upon suspicion of homicide, which may be no fun for him.—Philadelphia Ledger.

FIRE IN WILMINGTON, N. C.

Over $1,500,000 Worth of Property Destroyed.

WILMINGTON, N. C., Feb. 21.—A destructive fire occurred in the business portion of this city this afternoon. The loss will probably exceed $1,500,000. The fire originated on the river steamer Bladen, cotton laden, which set fire to the wharf and sheds of the Clyde line of steamers. A high wind was blowing at the time and the fire spread rapidly, sweeping away the business houses on Water street for three blocks and many valuable residences on Front and Second streets. Among the buildings destroyed were the first Methodist Church, the offices of the Atlantic Coast Line, the freight depots of the Wilmington, Columbia and Augusta and the Wilmington and Weldon Railroad Companies, the Champion Compress, two large grain mills, a saw mill, the offices and warehouses of A. Sprunt & Son, Worth & Worth, Kerchuer & Caidner Bros., S. P. Shetler & Co., and the steamer River Queen and the schooner Holmes.

CALL FOR BONDS.

They Comprise Ten Million Dollars Three Per Cents Maturing in April Next.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 20.—Secretary Manning this afternoon issued a call for $10,000,000 three per cent. bonds of the issue of 1882, to mature April 1 next. The bonds are numbered as follows: Fifty dollars—Original 285 to original No. 297, both inclusive, and original No. 1,368 to original No. 1,375, both inclusive. One Hundred Dollars—Original No. 2,108 to original No. 2,148, both inclusive, and original No. 9,864 to original No. 9,879, both inclusive. Five Hundred Dollars—Original No. 1,042 to original No. 1,062, both inclusive, and original No. 4,201 to original No. 4,209, both inclusive. One Thousand Dollars—Original No. 9,031 to original No. 9,188, both inclusive, and original No. 23,588 to No. 23,653, both inclusive. Ten Thousand Dollars—Original No. 15,459 to No. 16,448, both inclusive. Total, $10,000,000.

THE BURIED AT NANTICOKE.

Fears That, After All, the Dead Miners May Not Be Reached.

WILKESBARRE, PA., Feb. 21.—The officers of the Susquehanna Coal Company are very much afraid that the men constituting the recovering party at Slope No. 1 will, within the next twenty-four hours, quit work, as they have reached very close to the point of the cave in which there is great danger ahead. They have no means of escape should another rush of sand and rock come. Should they refuse to work it is probable that no other men can be found to take their places, therefore the twenty-six bodies of the miners who were entombed on December 18 will forever remain in the pit.

Sad and Peculiar Affliction.

YOUNGSTOWN, O., Feb. 21.—Hattie Stanley, aged eight, daughter of Joseph Stanley, a blacksmith, is suffering with a disease that is attracting the attention of the medical fraternity. Two years ago the child, who possessed a bright intellect, was attacked with rheumatism affecting the heart to such an extent that it did not have sufficient vitality to send the arterial blood to the extremities. Her hands and feet have become lifeless, and the child is slowly dying with dry gangrene. The fingers of each hand up to the knuckles are black and withered, and her feet present a similar appearance. The child has suffered excruciating pains for the past fifteen months and looks forward to death as the only relief. The disease is often met with in aged people, but this is the only one known of which the sufferer was so young.

Fatal Encounter with Desperadoes.

LOUISVILLE, KY., Feb. 21.—A Courier-Journal special says: "A fatal encounter took place near Pineville, Ky., between a man named Lane and five men named Turner, on Friday afternoon. There was an old feud existing between them. The Turners are celebrated as roughs and bad men. They were in ambush, hiding behind trees, when Lane came along the road, and they all fired upon him. Lane saw one of the Turners step from behind a tree, and shot him dead. Almost immediately afterwards Lane fell, his body being pierced by several bullets.

Frozen to Death in Michigan.

NEGAUNEE, MICH., Feb. 21.—Yesterday John Kennedy and a man named Ryan set out for a neighboring mine, about six miles away. Ryan was very thinly clad and soon began to suffer terribly from the intense cold. Kennedy took him on his shoulders and carried him for two miles, but his own sufferings and exhaustion compelled him to drop his burden. Almost dead himself he was barely able to find help, which arrived too late to rescue Ryan, whose dead body was found by the roadside. Kennedy will probably survive, although badly frozen.

A Miser's Miserable Death.

NORRISTOWN, PA., Feb. 21.—Henry Johnson, a bachelor and hermit, about fifty years of age, living in East Perkiomen, this county, died yesterday, leaving considerable real estate and money. Johnson was so miserly that he would not allow himself the necessary comforts of life. During the recent cold weather his feet were so badly frozen that the soles of them became mortified and fell off. Other portions of his body were also badly frozen.

Four Men Drowned.

HARRISBURG, PA., Feb. 21.—Yesterday morning, while four men and a boy were attempting to cross the Susquehanna, the boat capsized and the four men drowned. The boy succeeded in climbed to the boat, and was rescued about two miles below. The names of the unfortunate men are as follows: John and Frank Mast, aged eighteen and twenty, respectively, Lewis Ditrich and Charles Mathies. The lad who was saved was a son of Mathies.

Mine Explosion.

EVANSTON, WY., Feb. 21.—An explosion occurred in No. 3 mine at Almy yesterday. Fifteen men were burned, one severely. Nobody was killed. Forty men were in the mine. Fifteen days ago the men left the mine on account of gas, but were persuaded to go back. There was not gas enough to wreck the mine, though the men were blown thirty feet. The fire lasted half a minute.

Death of Ex-Senator Filsom.

HUMBOLDT, NEB., Feb. 21.—Ex-Senator G. M. Filsom died while sitting in a chair on the steps of his house to-day. His age was sixty-six years.

Paralyzed by a Fall.

PARKERSBURG, W. VA., Feb. 21.—John E. Stuck, a prominent citizen of Newburg, W. Va., while walking to Sunday-school, stepped on a rolling stone, which threw him to the ground and injured his spinal column. In a short time the lower half of his body was entirely paralyzed. His back is broken, and his injuries are considered fatal.

A Somnambulist's Experience.

DETROIT, MICH., Feb. 21.—Edward Ashley, while asleep, left his berth on a train, at the town of Atterliffe, Mich., and walked off the rear platform. He was not injured, and walked to the station and was provided with clothes, having left the berth in his night shirt.

Its Head in Its Stomach.

VILLA RICA, GA., Feb. 21.—Mr. B. J. Garrison brought to town yesterday a calf's head taken from its own stomach. The calf when born was perfectly formed except a head. Where the neck should have been an ear appeared. Some one suggested that the head might be inside, and upon cutting the calf open the head was found there.

Death of Kenward Philp.

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—Kenward Philp, aged forty years, an Englishman by birth, and at one time charged with forging the famous Moray letter in 1880, died this morning at his residence in Brooklyn.

XLIXTH CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—SENATE.—A petition of citizens of Savannah was presented praying for a repeal of the silver coinage act. Senator Mason offered a resolution calling for certain information about District Attorneys in Virginia. A favorable report was made on the House bill authorizing the assignment by the Secretary of the Treasury of a clerk to act as Treasurer of the United States in the absence of the Treasurer or Assistant Treasurer. An amendment limiting the detail to sixty days was agreed to, and the bill recommitted for further amendment. The educational bill was then taken up, Jackson, Maxey, Blair and Hawley speaking.

HOUSE.—A resolution was adopted requesting the Judiciary Committee to answer certain questions in reference to the law authorizing the Attorney General to bring suits to cancel patents. Mr. Bland's free coinage bill was adversely reported and placed on the calendar. A bill was reported from the Commerce Committee authorizing the construction of the B. & O. bridge across the Arthur kill, at New York. A bill was reported favorably to compel all vessels of the United States to carry mail when offered by U. S. officers. The bill authorizing the loan of the Government exhibits to the New Orleans Exposition was talked over the morning hour for the second time by its opponents. The Fitz-John Porter bill was discussed by Wheeler for and Cutcheon against, until 5 o'clock, when a recess was taken until 7 p. m. The night session was ordered to debate the Fitz-John Porter case.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—SENATE.—Bills introduced: In aid of education in the States. Providing for the erection of a suitable monument at Washington, D. C., to General U. S. Grant. The bill appropriates $250,000 for the purpose indicated, and provides for a commission of three Senators and three members of the House of Representatives to contract for the monument. Referred. Bills passed: To authorize the increase of the capital stock of the Citizens' National Bank of Louisville, Ky., to a sum not exceeding one million dollars; to provide for the settlement of the estates of deceased Kickapoo Indians in the State of Kansas. The bill providing for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians was taken up, but at 2 o'clock it went over, and consideration of the Education bill was resumed. Without further debate the Senate agreed to the amendment proposed by the Education Committee striking out the special appropriation for school buildings. An amendment proposed was also agreed to without debate providing that none of the money appropriated by the bill should be paid to a State until its Legislature should accept the provisions of the bill. Mr Ingalls moved an amendment to limit the moneys going to each State to its proportion of illiterates between the ages of ten and twenty-one. He thought it proper to make this limitation because the object of the appropriation should be to reach and remedy the ignorance that was remediable—not that which was irremediable. The number of persons constituting the class of remediable illiterates in any State should be the only class that would entitle the State to a proportion of this money.

HOUSE.—Bills were reported granting the franking privilege to Mrs. Grant; accepting grant for the construction of the Illinois and Mississippi River Canal, and increasing the pension for deafness. Bills were passed providing allowances for money order clerks, reducing the charge for money orders, and protecting homestead settlers. The Fitz John Porter bill was debated by Kelley, Thomas, Curtin and Weber. At 3:10 p. m. the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—SENATE.—A number of petitions were presented and referred. Among these was one to abolish the Presidency. A report from the Judiciary Committee, with resolutions, was presented by Senator Edmunds, which condemned the action of the Attorney General in refusing certain papers called for, and declared it to be the duty of the Senate to withhold its advice and consent to proposed removal of officers in cases where papers are withheld. Consideration of the educational bill was resumed. Messrs. Ingalls and Coke opposed the measure, and Mr. Riddleberger supported it. Mr. Evarts took the floor, when, on motion of Mr. Allison, the Senate went into executive session, and afterwards adjourned.

HOUSE.—Mr. Findlay's appointment on the Banking and Currency Committee was announced. The Committee on Pacific Railroads reported a bill to compel the Pacific roads to pay the United States the amount paid by it for surveying lands granted. The Atlantic and Pacific railroad land grant forfeiture was considered until the expiration of the morning hour, when the Fitz John Porter bill was taken up in committee of the whole. Messrs. Phelps, of New Jersey, Curtin, Pennsylvania, Warner, Ohio, and Bragg, Wisconsin, spoke in favor of the bill, the latter closing the debate. Mr. Cutcheon, of Michigan, spoke in opposition. A motion to recommit and strike out the salary clause was voted down—173 to 112. The bill finally passed—yeas, 171; nays, 112. At 5:15 p. m. the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1 —SENATE.—An inquiry in regard to the killing of Captain Crawford by the Mexicans, embodied in a resolution, was refered to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. At 2 p. m. Mr Evarts spoke on the Blair educational bill, being followed by Ingalls, Wilson and Harris. The debate was closed by the latter for the day, and at 4:15 p. m. the Senate went into executive session, adjourned at 5:40 p. m.

HOUSE.—Mr. Kelley (Pa.) obtained leave to have printed in the Record a review of the testimony in the Fitz John Porter case. A proposition by Mr. Wheeler (Ala.), to print a review of Holt's review was objected to by Mr Steele (Ind.) A joint resolution, tendering the thanks of Congress and the presentation of a medal to Joseph Frances, was passed. On the first bill on the private calendar Mr Scott (Pa.) offered an amendment which gave him an opportunity to deliver a silver speech, defending the administration. He was followed by Mr. Geddes (O.) in another silver speech, which was made in spite of all objections. At 4:45 p. m. the House took a recess until 7 p. m. During the night session forty-four pension bills were passed, and at 9:30 p. m. the House adjourned until Tuesday.

English Press Kindly Note the Day.

LONDON, Feb. 22.—Appropriate references to the anniversary of Washington's birthday appear in to-day's journals. The Standard compares the Americans of to-day unfavorably with the character of the men whose memory they are celebrating. You will bear in mind that this is the organ of the American haters, and seldom has a good word for anything on that side of the ocean. Most of the other papers pronounce the customary eulogy on the hero of the Revolution, and dwell in friendly terms upon the vastness of the State he founded.

Dalton's Writ of Habeas Corpus Dismissed.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 22.—Judge Wylie has decided at Columbus that Dan Dalton must produce the returns from Precinct A. Fourth Ward, Cincinnati, before the House Investigating Committee or go to jail for thirty days. Dalton will go to Columbus to-morrow morning with the returns.

—He—"It was natural, you know, that I should be attracted to you." She (shyly)—"Indeed! Why?" He—"Well, you know, your brother studied law in the same office with me, and we were admitted to the bar together." She—"But what had that to do with me?" He—"Why, don't you see, I looked upon him as a brother-in-law?" She (blushing)—"O! I see." He—"Yes, a brother-in-law de jure, as it were. Now I propose that he shall be a brother-in-law de facto as well." Then he slipped the engagement ring on her finger and their heads came close together, and the parian cupid on the mantel looked as if he was about to clap his wings and crow.

Proceedings of the Legislature.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 15.—SENATE.—The Governor, in accordance with a request made by the General Assembly, sent in a copy of all contracts with Mason, Foard & Co., lessees of the penitentiary. A motion by Senator Boles that the documents be printed and referred to the Committee on Penitentiary was adopted. Mr. J. R. W. Smith offered a joint resolution providing for the appointment of two Senators and three Representatives to visit, examine and report upon the conditions of the various asylums in the State. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Charitable Institutions. The Senate took up the discussion of the House poison bill. It requires that all preparations of morphine and opium shall be inclosed in a package with scarlet wrapper, with the name of the preparation printed in plain white letters, a picture of a skull and cross bones, and the word "poison." No objection was made to the bill and it was passed. Senator Harris' bill providing for the management of the Penitentiary received a little attention, but the subject was postponed until to-morrow, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—The Senate resolution that the Senate and House go into joint session Thursday morning at 12 o'clock to elect a Public printer and binder. After debate the resolution was adopted. Mr. Boswell has before the Committee on Judiciary a bill giving to a physician a fee of $100 for performing a post mortem examination on a body supposed to have been poisoned. The law as it now is pays only ten dollars for such services, and no physician of ability will undertake work of the character for so small a fee. Mr. Boswell thinks they ought to be paid $100. The House Committee on Criminal Laws has agreed to report unanimously in favor of the passage of the Senate bill declaring the keeping of a gambling house to be a felony.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 16.—SENATE.—Bills passed: Resolution inquiring whether the Attorney-General had instituted suit against Ralph Sheldon, late Register of the Land office, and if so, as to all facts connected therewith. Bill to amend and reduce into all acts relating to the town of Carrsville, in Livingston County. Bill to amend and reduce into one all acts in relation to the town of Earlington, Hopkins County. Bill to amend the charter of the Central Passenger Railroad Company, of Louisville. Bill to prohibit the sale of liquors in one mile of Mayfield, Graves County. The Senate agreed to House amendments to the following: Bill incorporating the Paducah and Illinois Bridge Company. Resolutions in regard to asking Federal appropriation for locking and damming Licking river.

HOUSE.—The Straus bill to require the counties to support their own pauper idiots came up, and was discussed at length. Mr. Myers offered an amendment which was adopted, requiring the city of Covington to maintain the idiots living within its limits, and the county of Kenton pay for those living within its limits outside of Covington. Mr. Nesbitt's substitute requiring the State to pay $60 for each idiot, instead of $75 now paid, and the counties nothing, was voted down. Mr. Thompson's substitute reducing the appropriation from $75 per year to $35 per year for each idiot was adopted and became the original bill, and the vote on its passage stood—yeas, 49; nays, 37, and the bill was passed.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 17.—SENATE.—Mr. Harris offered a joint resolution for the appointment of a committee to investigate the charges relating to the Eastern Lunatic Asylum. Adopted. Senator Harris' bill providing for the future management of the penitentiary was called up again. First, a joint resolution by Senator Hays that a committee from both the houses be appointed to consider the Warden question, was adopted. Mr. J. R. W. Smith offered a substitute for that of Senator Hays. It also provides for a joint committee, and empowered it to report a bill for solving the difficulties connected with the Warden question. Mr. Clay offered a substitute to the latter. It provides that the committee shall be composed of three Senators and five Representatives. This last was adopted. Mr. Boles, in a very feeling speech, asked that three more Senators be added to the committee appointed to investigate the charges against his morality, and that the committee be given the power to compel witnesses to answer all questions. The Senate granted both requests, and the investigation will proceed, although the committee first appointed had agreed to report that the charges were without foundation. Senators Neal, Clay and Frederick were added to the committee.

HOUSE.—Mr. Thompson offered a resolution that the session of the Legislature be extended beyond the constitutional limit of 60 days. Quite a number of resolutions providing for afternoon and evening sessions were also offered. All the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Rules. Bills introduced: Fixing salaries as follows: Governor, $4,000; Secretary of State $1,200; private secretary to the Governor, $800; clerk in Treasurer's office, $1,000; Register of Land Office, $1,800; each judge of the Court of Appeals, $3,500; judges of the Circuit Courts, $2,500; judges of the Superior Court, $3,000; judges of the Common Pleas Courts, $2,000; Adjutant General, $1,200. To amend school laws. It proves that in addition to the tax now raised by law for common school purposes, a head tax of $2 on each voter in the State shall be imposed and collected.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 18.—SENATE.—Mr. Frederick, of the Committee on Agriculture and Manufacture, reported favorably on the Governor's nominees of trustees for the Agricultural and Mechanical College. These trustees are J. D. Clancy, Christian County; L. D. Bradford, Kenton County, and R. S. Sparr, of Fayette County. The report was adopted. Mr. Wallace moved to reconsider the bill which was passed some time ago, making bribery at elections punishable by confinement in the penitentiary. The motion was adopted, and the bill was made a special order for February 26. Mr. Martin offered a resolution asking concerning the rights of certain citizens to receive pay for slaves impressed into the service of the United States during the war. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Federal Relations. Senator Harris' penitentiary bill came in for another share of attention, and several speeches were made. Senator Bryan then moved that the portion of Senator Harris' bill giving South $3,200 be struck out. This was defeated by a vote of 19 to 10. A vote was taken on Senator Harris' bill as amended by Senator D. H. Smith. Seventeen votes were cast for it and eleven against it. It failed to pass for lack of a constitutional majority.

HOUSE.—Phil Thompson's resolution to prolong the session of the Legislature called forth a number of speeches this morning. A call of the House was ordered for the purpose of voting on the resolution, the constitution providing that a two-thirds majority shall be necessary. The roll-call, before locking the doors, showed 93 members present. In view of that large number the further call was dispensed with. Mr. Blakey withdrew his amendment fixing the fifteen-day limit, and the vote was taken on Mr. Thompson's resolution, which was passed by a vote of 70 to 23.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 19.—SENATE.—The penitentiary bills were called up, and after considerable wrangling all the substitutes and amendments were voted down, and then the Harris bill was passed. It allows Warden South his back salary from the time he was removed, and gives absolute power to the commissioners to remove the warden and other officers. The House resolution to indefinitely extend the present session was taken up and lost for the want of the constitutional two-thirds vote. Eight senators were absent, and when they return the resolution will probably be adopted.

HOUSE.—In the House a number of private bills were passed.

Miscellaneous Items.

PERRY JENKINS got two years for perjury, and Warren Gilbert the same for robbery, at Nicholasville.

A SPECIAL to the Louisville Courier-Journal says: Robert Lile was shot and fatally wounded by his father, John Lile, the noted Green County desperado, near Liletown. The son upbraided his father for getting drunk and mistreating his family, and the latter shot his boy in the back while he was ringing the bell for dinner.

NEWTON CARPENTER's horse shied with him over a bank seventy-five yards almost perpendicular near Owingsville, yet the rider escaped with a broken leg.

CALLA FERRAND, a Danville colored woman, died of religious excitement going from church.

WM. STEEL, fireman, died at Louisville, a few days ago, from an overdose of morphine.

ED COONEY and John Keown shot each other fatally, at Hawesville, quarreling over Cooney's desertion of Keown's sister, to whom he was engaged.

THERE was quite an excitement at the Cabot Street School, Newport, a few days ago, caused by the turning over of a stove in Miss Graham's room. It seems that one of the legs of the stove had fallen off, and while the fire was being stirred up it tipped over. A large can of boiling water, which was sitting on the stove at the time, was thrown off, scalding a young lad named Gus Williams and Katie Puff.

ANOTHER THING.

Where Prominent Republicans Stood in 1869 on the Question of "Executive Power."

Judging from Washington dispatches, one of the most vociferous and thorough-going of Mr. Edmunds' lieutenants in the contest of the Senate with the President is General John Alexander Logan, the son of thunder from Illinois, who never willingly lets slip a chance to lift up his voice and cry aloud. To-day, General Logan is one of the most strenuous upholders of the right of the Senate to investigate the President's reasons for suspending Republican office-holders, and in interviews with numerous correspondents he manifests a disposition to insist on all the rights which an extreme interpretation of the provisions of the Tenure-of-Office act confer upon the Senate.

It was not always thus. In 1869, when the Tenure-of-Office act was pending, General Logan was a member of the House, and his views upon the propriety of the Senatorial prerogatives were exactly opposite to those which he holds now.

At that time General Logan fought in his fiercest manner the passage of the present Tenure-of-Office act, and in his most stentorian tones demanded its abolition. His ideas upon the necessity of a total change in the incumbency of the offices were embodied in the following resolution, which he sent to the Speaker's desk and asked to have passed:

> That all civil offices, except those of Judges of the United States Courts that were filled by appointment by the President of the United States, by and with the consent of the Senate, before the 4th of March, 1869, shall be vacant on the 30th day of June, 1869.

He denounced in round terms the power which the present Tenure-of-Office law could give the Senate. Among other things he said:

> The Senate now provides for itself becoming the executive branch of this Government, so far as reappointing suspended officers is concerned. * * * It (the Tenure-of-Office bill, then pending) doubly gives them the power which they have wrenched from the co-ordinate branches of the Government in reference to patronage. I do not claim that this is a contest for patronage, but it is a struggle for power on the part of the Senate, and nothing else. Although I have maintained this law (the Tenure-of-Office act of 1867, for which the Tenure-of-Office act now in force and then pending is a substitute) to be constitutional; although I have argued in favor of its constitutionality, yet I have believed and believe now that it was passed for a purpose; not because it was demanded by the constitution, but because there was a necessity for it (the Republican necessity of bull-ragging Andrew Johnson). Having once been passed the Senate are determined, seeing how well they can hold that power in their hands, never to give it up again for fear that if they give it up now you will never give it back into their hands again.

General Logan, in the last part of the foregoing quotation, "gave" the secret of the passage of the present Tenure-of-Office act "away." The Republican representatives were almost unanimous in favor of repeal, and, of course, the Democratic representatives were to a man. So were Sherman, Morton, Yates and others of the Senators. But Trumbull, Edmunds and Conkling were strenuous for maintaining "the dignity of the Senate," and holding on to all the power they had got into their hands; and they were able to control a majority of the Senators by promising that the law would not be enforced while Republican Presidents should continue to occupy the White House. That promise was kept. No attempt was made to enforce the law until Mr. Cleveland became President.

Messrs. Hoar, Dawes, Cullom, Hale, Conger and Allison were members of the House with Logan and are now Republican Senators with him. They acquiesced in his remarks and voted with him in favor of repeal. Holding such opinions in 1869, which, by the way, are the simple truth, how do General Logan and the others above named justify their present course? An explanation is in order if they have one to give.

The doctrine which Senator Sherman asserted to be true in 1869—that all the important offices ought to be in the hands of members of the party in power—is true now. The President has certainly been moderate in making changes, and there is no tenable ground for maintaining that any greater necessity exists for the enforcement of the Tenure-of-Office act than existed then, when all these gentlemen were in favor of abolishing it, because it might be made to hamper the President in the exercise of the executive power which rightfully belonged to him. The following was the language of one of the leaders of the Republicans of the House in 1869, which General Logan, Senators Hoar and Dawes and the rest indorsed:

> We have now before us a proposition to clothe the Senate with power to control the appointments made by the Executive. Now, I hold that it is against the principles of this Government that its executive officer shall be called upon to do work when he can not control independent of the officers to do that work * * * Why do I prefer the Executive to the Senate? The Executive is responsible. Any officer can be called before him and the Executive can say to him: "Why do you do this?" An representative of the people can call an unworthy officer to account before the President. But the Senate sits the one Senator being a shield for another. You go to a Senator and say: "Why was not this man turned out?" The answer is: "Oh, the Senate refused to turn him out." Each Senator is able to make the same answer to such an inquiry. You can hold no man responsible.

By the constitution, the Senate has the right to advise and consent, or to refuse to advise and consent to the President's nominations. When they undertake to go further, and seek to interfere with his right of removal, as, under the lead of Mr. Edmunds, the Republican Senators are seeking to do now, they are overstepping the constitutional boundaries of their power, and the President will be sustained by the country in his refusal to comply with their demands.

It must not be forgotten that Senators Sherman, Allison, Hoar, Dawes, Cullom, Logan, Hale and Conger are on record as professed believers in the right of the President alone to control the removals, and that Senator Evarts has solemnly declared that the interference of the Senate in such matters is unconstitutional. Yet they are now asserting the right of the Senate to restore suspended Republican office-holders to office. Circumstances alter cases with them, and all regard for consistency is flung to the winds.—Boston Globe.

THE PITH OF THE CASE.

Wicked Efforts of the Bell Telephone Monopoly to Divert Attention from the Real Issue.

As the Graphic has repeatedly said in relation to the telephone controversy now violently raging, it does not matter the toss of a button whether Attorney-General Garland goes or stays, so far as the intrinsic merits of the case are concerned. The main and essential question is whether the United States Government is to be successfully bullied and driven from a perfectly legal position by the organized clamor and threats of a gigantic monopoly. The Bell Company confederated with the Western Union and with every selfish or reckless force inimical to the Administration, started out with the explicit menace that it would politically kill any public man who dared to challenge its prerogatives or obstruct its designs. Its entire crusade is aimed to divert attention from the true issue. It pointed a thousand fingers at Garland and with a thousand voices—mostly venal exclaimed: "This is Credit Mobilierism over again. He holds stock in the rival concern. It is a flagrant scandal in high places. Let this suit be tried before the ordinary tribunals."

It seems to be legitimate criticism and a plausible proposition, but what does it really imply? No single rival company nor combination of companies can in an ordinary civil process test the fundamental point involved—that of alleged fraud. Furthermore, the existing monopoly with its income of millions and its comparatively trivial expenses can afford to prolong an ordinary suit for years, perhaps indefinitely, and in the meantime can exact heavier and heavier tribute from a public which has no redress. The telephone has become in cities a commercial necessity, yet inventors are barred out from improving it unless they dispose of their improvements, to the hungry octopus holding the original patents. Why so ferociously resist a fair, speedy and final test of the validity of that patent? This is a view of the matter that has begun to impress itself on some of our most vehement contemporaries during the past few days. Nobody has yet had the hardihood to even insinuate that Secretary Lamar was influenced in his decision by any improper motive. They do not even attack Garland except by implication. He simply did what any upright judge would do under similar circumstances—he refused to act in a case in which he was personally interested.

Let Garland go or stay as may be, the Government is responsible for the existence of the Bell monopoly, and the Government must, with reasonable proof of fraud set before it, review its own action. This is the pith of the case.—N. Y. Graphic.

TREASURY RAIDS.

The Attempt, Through Pension Bills, to Capture "the Soldier Vote."

The figures which are given in a letter from Commissioner Black to Mr. Randall, chairman of the Appropriations committee, relative to the cost of the schemes now proposed for Congressional action in regard to increasing the pension list are simply astounding. They afford a striking exemplification of the thoughtless way in which wild plans are mooted on sentimental or other like grounds, without any consideration of the enormous expenditure to be thereby entailed. It is fair to suppose that if the data for the calculation of the cost were within the knowledge of the authors of such schemes, and were duly considered in regard to their practicability, they would never be submitted.

The inquiry of the chairman of the Appropriations committee had reference to two points—first, as to the cost resulting from the extension of time for filing applications for pensions under the acts of January and March, 1879, and second, as to the probable cost of repealing the limitation in regard to filing applications under those acts. The Commissioner shows that the cost resulting from the extension of time referred to in the first branch of the inquiry has amounted to $259,873,972 up to July 1, 1885. In regard to the second branch of the inquiry he says that if the limitation as to time imposed by the acts referred to be removed, all pensions will begin at date of the soldier's discharge, and that the result will be an increased charge on the treasury of $75,000,000, to pay pensioners now on the roll; and he estimates that the number who would be entitled to be entered on the roll would increase that charge to $302,836,200; that is, pension claims would swallow up, in effect, the whole revenue of the Government.

This is the gist of the Commissioner's statement. It is directed with all the force which a plain statement of figures can command against such reckless propositions as that of Mr. Browne, of Indiana, who desires to remove the present limitation of the Arrears-of-Pensions act to January 1, 1886. The cost of carrying this scheme into effect would be something over $300,000,000. If Mr. Browne had taken the cost into account it may readily be believed he would have long hesitated before advancing so extravagant a proposition.

The truth is—and these figures loudly emphasize it—it is high time to call a halt in regard to further extravagant legislation for the benefit of pensioners. No nation in history has acted so liberally as ours toward its disabled soldiers. What was generously given it does not now begrudge, but maintains and pays faithfully. Not only has the vast and expensive machinery of a great bureau been called into existence for the thorough consideration of every case which should be presented, but, lest any deserving claimant should be neglected, the time for making application to share in the Nation's beneficence has been amply extended. The money-limit of generous and grateful regard has been reached.

In the matter of pensioning its disabled soldiers or their dependent survivors, the Nation has done its duty. Congress has other duties to which its attention is invoked by the most patriotic considerations. It is not enough to regard the past. It is requisite also to secure the present and to provide for the future.

An evil feature in every new pension proposal is the demagogic spirit which it inevitably awakens. Congressmen vie with each other in propounding absurd plans for increasing pensions, which, if they were carried into effect, would bankrupt the treasury of the United States. Of course, many of them are not even seriously intended, and their real object is to ensnare and capture what is known as the soldier vote. But, like all insincere issues, they exercise a delusive effect on the public mind, and a belittling influence on political methods.

The time has come for answering with a decided negative every proposition to increase the pension charges of the Government whether the proposition is inspired by demagogism or corruption. Congress has done its full duty by the soldier, let it now turn its endeavor to doing its full duty to the people.—Washington Post.

The erection of an imposing monument to General Grant in Washington City is now an assured fact. It is contemplated to have next in impressiveness to the monument erected to Washington. This latter monument cost in the neighborhood of $1,000,000. The one to honor Grant's memory is to cost $250,000, the Senate Library Committee having reported favorably for that amount. It is not known where it will be placed, but a site on the piaza at Seventh street and Pennsylvania avenue is suggested. It is also urged that the monument be in the shape of a column, rather than a statute in bronze.

It was expected that a bankruptcy law would be enacted by the present Congress, but the prospect of the measure dosen't brighten with the lapse of time. At the beginning of the session it was said that Gen. Pat Collins, of Boston—the leading Irish Democrat of Massachusetts—would have what was so wisely called the Boston Lowell bankrupt bill passed at once; but it remains on the table of the Judiciary Committee. It is understood that, with the exception of Messrs. Collins and Culberson, the Democratic members of the committee are square against the passage of the bill, and that one of the Republicans on the Committee, Mr. Caswell, of Wisconsin, is not over friendly to it. This condition of affairs will render it difficult for Gen. Collins to report the bill from the committee, unless some missionary work can be effectively done among the members.

The New York World prints a vivid tale from Millersburg, Dauphin county, Penn., to the effect that Samuel Motter, a vender of patent medicines, entered a hotel where a convivial crowd sat, and dared them to imitate the Lord's Supper. Beer and bread was at once set forth, and the carousers bowed in mock humility, and Motter went along distributing a bite and a sup to each. Suddenly, when he was about half through, a strange noise was heard, and looking up the men saw a sight that made their blood run cold. As near as the scared men could describe it, they declare that it was an immense ill-formed and foul beast with great cloven feet, painted horns and eyes that flashed fire. With wild yells the men rushed into the open air and scattered in every direction. Finally all reached home, except Motter, who was away for a [illegible], and at last he arrived a maniac. He was put to bed and physicians summoned, but they could do nothing for him. He raved, howled and prayed, declaring that he had seen the Evil One and that he was lost. His torture was terrible, but nothing could be done to relieve him, and he died in the wildest agony. The death bed scene is said to have been so full of horrors that it can hardly be described.

The Paducah Standard says: "A young lawyer pleading his first case in the city court a few days since and was successful. It was a case against a negro for some misdemeanor, and the young attorney was successful in clearing his client. The client being somewhat short of money paid him with a watch, a clock and three pistols, adding $2 in cash. The young attorney proudly stepped from the court-room with his first fee, but at the door he was met by that vigilant protector of the city's revenue, License Inspector McCune, who demanded of him if he had his license "Wh-at!" exclaimed the limb of the law. "Your license to practice law. The city requires every attorney at law to pay a license fee." "Well, I'll be blamed if I knew that before!" said the astonished attorney. But the Inspector was inexorable and he had to "pony up his fee." He turned over the $2, disposed of the other articles at a sacrifice, and then had to borrow $5 from a friend, to complete the amount of the officer's demand. He will hereafter make a special study of city ordinances.

Our State Geologist Proctor has returned from his English tour. As his position has been half abolished—by the Senate, the following, from a lengthy interview with him by the Courier-Journal's Frankfort correspondent will be found of interest to Kentuckians.

"What success did you have with the object of your visit to England?"

"I had two objects in view: one to secure immigration to Kentucky and the other to induce English capitalists to invest money in our railroads. In both I realized my expectations. My trip was a little hurried, and perhaps I could done better had I taken more time. I left New York on the 8th of January, and after a stormy voyage reached Queenstown on the 19th. I was in London the next day and visited the Emigration agencies, and made efforts to secure some of the better class of people for Kentucky. I think the prospects that quite a number of them will come here, are extremely good."

"In what part of the State will these people be likely to locate?"

"That is impossible to say. It depends entirely upon the immigrants themselves. If they are men of means they will go where land is good and purchase; if they have but little money they will settle in the more thinly populated regions where the land does not cost so much. I can illustrate. An Englishman possessed of considerable property, came over with his family on the same steamer with me. He intends to settle in Kentucky, and will go to some county where land is rich, because he can afford, to pay for it. Such immigrants are worth very much to the State."

WAGNER AS A BOY.

The Earliest Works of the Author and Composer of "Lohengrin."

Wilhelm Richard Wagner was born at Leipzig, March 22, 1813. When he was nine, he went to school, where he was the despair of the teacher who instructed him in music; he paid no attention to his practicing, but seized every opportunity of repeating the melodies that he heard, especially those of "Der Freischutz," which had already kindled his powerful imagination. Ancient history, mythology, Greek and Latin were his favorite studies, but his heart was really in none of these, for he had a secret aim which absorbed all his thoughts and feelings—he was a poet! In his eleventh year, he won a prize for the best poem on a dead school-mate, and soon after this be translated the first twelve books of the Odyssey. He taught himself English, and immediately became so absorbed in Shakespeare that he decided to write a tragedy. For two long years he toiled, and during this period he contrived to kill off forty-two people in his drama. He was forced to relent, however, and to recall them as ghosts in the last act in order to have performers enough to play the parts. Meantime he had left Dresden, where he had been living, and entered a school at Leipzig, but he had so neglected his studies for musical composition that he was put back a class; this so discouraged him that he gave himself entirely to his tragedy. When he had nearly finished it, he first heard Beethoven's music. This had so strong an influence over him that he determined to set his tragedy to music, and purchased a book on thorough-bass to prepare himself for his task. So fascinated did he become with the study that he determined to be a poet no longer, but that music should have the devotion of his life. When his family learned of his tragedy, they were much troubled, for they felt it was the cause of his backwardness at school; but when they found him to be writing music, they were in despair, for they believed it to be nothing more than a fancy, and that it might do the boy great harm. He was not to be discouraged, however, and composed in secret. But at last he was placed under the instruction of Theodore Weinlig, a man steeped in the spirit of "Father Bach," who put him through a six months' study of counterpoint. Now he learned and loved Mozart.—Agatha Tunis, in St. Nicholas.

WASHINGTON'S MOTHER.

A Woman Born to Command and to Inspire Respect.

She was a woman born to command, and since she was left alone with a family and an estate to care for, she took the reins into her own hands, and never gave them up to any one else. She used to drive about in an old-fashioned open chaise, visiting the various parts of her farm, just as a planter would do on horseback. The story is told that she had given an agent directions how to do a piece of work, and he had seen fit to do it differently, because he thought his way a better one. He showed her the improvement.

"And pray," said the lady, "who gave you any exercise of judgemnt in the matter? I command you, sir; there is nothing left for you but to obey."

I think that George Washington owed two strong traits to his mother—a governing spirit, and a spirit of order and method. She taught him many lessons and gave him many rules; but, after all, it was her character, shaping his which was most powerful. She taught him to be truthful, but her lessons were not half so forcible as her own truthfulness.—Hezekiah Butterworth, in St. Nicholas.

IN A PERSIAN STREET.

The Odd Things to Be Seen in the Thoroughfares of Teheran.

In such a climate as that of Teheran life is naturally passed chiefly in the open air. The chill of winter, rarely severe, seems to make little difference in the habits of the people. The shops are all open to the streets; the customers stand outside, and even the shopkeeper attends to most of his business from the exterior of the shop. If he is a baker, grocer or costermonger, in all probability he and the customer both stand in the street, retreating into the shop only when a string of camels or a dashing cortege forces them to move out of the way. A carpenter may frequently be seen arranging a piece of joinery on the pavement in front of his shop. The schools often in no-wise differ from the shops, in the midst of a crowded thoroughfare one may see twenty or thirty lads seated on their heels repeating the lesson together in monotonous tone.

Another common sight in the streets of Teheran is the itinerant barber. The Koran enjoins the masculine Mohammedan to shave his crown. The Sunnees shave the entire head excepting a long lock in the center whereby, it is said, the archangel may pluck them out of the grave. But the Sheahs or Persian Mussulmans shave from the forehead to the nape of the neck, leaving a highly prized lock on each side. It is, therefore, common to see a man of the lower classes seated on the pavement, going through the operation of having his head shaved. The remaining hair and the beard are dyed, and it is rare that one sees gray hairs in Teheran. The first tint applied is henna, an orange-yellow vegetable dye. Many consider this so handsome as to prefer it without the further application of indigo which must select. The last tint, combined with the henna, imparts a durable and rather agreeable dark-brown color to the hair. The women also have their hair dyed and join the eyebrows with the pencil. All classes make use of the bath at least once a week, the wealthy having steam-baths attached to their dwellings. No Christian is ever permitted admittance to the baths of the Persians. The public baths answer the purpose of clubs and sewing circles; the women go in the morning, take their sewing with them, and, after being thoroughly steamed and scrubbed, devote several hours to smoking the kalian, embroidering, and discussing the scandal of the neighborhood, which they assiduously circulate on their return home.

Another street sight of Teheran is the tea-house, equivalent to the coffee-house of Constantinople or the beer-garden of Munich. These establishments are generally thronged towards the close of the day.

Both wine-drinking and card-playing are forbidden to true believers; and, therefore, neither is seen in these places of public resort. But both are freely indulged in at home. The card-players of Persia use a set of twenty cards in five suits of four each.

It is an interesting fact that America must relinquish the claim of having invented the gambler's favorite game of poker, for it was known in Persia centuries ago. The game played by the Persians is in principle poker or brag pure and simple, and betting often runs high with them.

Another characteristic sight in the streets of Teheran is the bread. Persian bread is made in sheets the thickness of sole leather; the best quality is somewhat thinner. It is formed in the shape and size of a side of leather. The baker with bare arms dexterously raises a sheet of this dough from the counter where it is rolled out, tosses and rolls it over his left arm until reduced to the proper tenuity. With a rapid fling of both arms he then spreads it over the hot floor of the oven. In a few moments it is baked and spread out to cool. If there is a convenient ledge in the street near the shop one may see it covered with layers of bread. This bread is cheap, one cent a sheet, and what is more it is sweet and nourishing; and, with curds, cheese and fruit, forms a staple article of diet with a large part of the population. Consequently, one constantly meets with people carrying sheets of bread home with them, the women holding them in front like leather aprons.—S. G. W. Benjamin, in Century.

JOYS OF WALTZING.

Bill Nye Learns to Waltz and Experiences Unspeakable Pleasure.

I had just learned how to reel around a ball-room to a little waltz music, when I was blown across the Mississippi in September last by a high wind, and broke one of my legs, which I used in waltzing. When this accident occurred I had just got where I felt at liberty to choose a glorious being with starry eyes and fluffy hair and magnificently-molded form to steer me around the rink to the dreamy music of Strauss. One young lady, with whom I had waltzed a good deal, when she heard that my leg was broken, began to attend every dancing party she could hear of, although she had declined a great many previous to that. I asked her how she could be so giddy and so gay while I was suffering. She said she was doing it to drown her sorrow, but her little brother told me on the quiet that she was dancing while I was sick because she felt perfectly safe. A friend of mine says I have a pronounced and distinctly original manner of waltzing, and that he never saw anybody, with one exception, who waltzed as I did, and that was Jumbo. He claimed that either one of us would be a good dancer if he could have the whole rink to himself. He said that he would like to see Jumbo and me waltz together if he was not afraid that I would step on Jumbo and hurt him. You can see what a feeling of jealous hatred it arouses in some small minds when a man gets so he can mingle in good society and enjoy himself.—N. Y. Star.

1886 THE COURIER-JOURNAL. 1886

AN ORGAN OF

LIVING IDEAS AND LIVE ISSUES.

AN ENEMY OF

Monopolies, Oligarchism, and the Spirit of Sectional Strife.

The Courier-Journal (Henry Watterson Editor-in-Chief), is the acknowledged Representative Newspaper of the South, is Democratic in politics, and first, last, and all the time is for a reduction of the War Taxes as levied on the people by the tariff now in force.

The Weekly Courier-Journal

is the best weekly newspaper published in the United States, and for the quantity and quality of matter that appears in each issue of it, it is the Cheapest. Its telegraphic news facilities outclass any other paper, and it has the services of the ablest writers and correspondents in the country. It presents the news of the week from every section of the World. It gives to its readers throughout the year a greater number of Serial and Short Stories by prominent and popular writers than any of the high-priced magazines. It is in every respect a Model Political and Family Paper.

The Weekly Courier-Journal has by far the Largest Circulation of any Democratic Newspaper in America.

It is acknowledged by press and people throughout the United States to be a great paper; great in size; great in enterprise; great in ability; great in its correctness of information; great in variety; great in every sense of the word. It is the paper that everybody should have. To be without it is a great opportunity lost. Those who once take it are not willing to be without it in their homes.

FREE PREMIUMS.

A list of handsome and useful premiums of great variety are offered free to yearly subscribers. On receipt of a request for them, we send free of charge a sample copy of Weekly Courier-Journal and our Premium Supplement, giving our full list of premiums, to any address.

THE
COMBINATION FENCE

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

Mr. Henry Kotmyer, of Constance, has just completed a small engine, which he made with his own hands. It is supplied with steam from the Ferryboat, and works to perfection.

Venus Lodge I. O. O. F., of Florence is repairing its hall, which when done will present a most handsome appearance. We are glad to note such unmistakable evidence of prosperity on the part of Venus.

Captain George W. Terrill, of Boone county, Kentucky, and Mrs. McComas, daughter of Commodore Hull, were married at the M. E. Parsonage on Monday by Rev. C. W. Lee.—Lawrenceburg Register.

When at the post office sometime notice what a difference there is in the man's countenance that gets a letter enclosing a check or money, and the poor fellow that gets a letter with a "please remit" in it.

One night last week some one tried to break into E. E. Utz's residence. Mr. Utz was aroused by his wife who heard the noise, but in going to the door the would-be burglar heard him and took his departure.

Prof. L. H. Voshell, of Indiana, was in town last Saturday. The Professor's school at the junction of the Woolper and Petersburg and Burlington pikes will close next Friday, when he will hie himself home to work up his agrarian interests.

Sam Cantwell, who was indicted by the last grand jury for selling whisky, and arrested by Deputy Sheriff German and lodged in Cowen's Castle a few days since, gave bail last week, for his appearance at the next April term of Circuit Court.

Remember that Geo. Huschart & Co. of Lawrenceburg, Indiana, can always give satisfaction both as to price and style of work, so when you want to buy a tombstone or a monument go to their yard or call on John Peall, of Hebron, Ky., their agent.

Easter will fall on April 25th, this year the first time it has been so late in 152 years. March 22 is the earliest date that it can appear on Sunday after the first full moon following 21st of March. It will not again fall on the 25th of April until 1943.

Last Friday evening about 6 o'clock the alarm of fire was turned in, calling the "Bucket and Ladder" company to the St. James Hotel, situated on Union Square between Washington and Jefferson Streets. The fire was only the burning out of a chimney.

If you will take a slip of paper and place thereon in figures your age in years only, leaving out the days, weeks and months. Multiply the sum by 2; then add 3,770; then add 2; then divide by 2; then subtract from the result obtained your age and you will obtain figures that will surprise you.—Ex.

Schooll will begin at Morgan Academy, Monday, March 1st, in charge of L. M. Whitehead, Principal. The primary branches or study will be taught with other branches to suit the highest grades of pupils, including Composition, Rhetoric, Physiology, Philosophy, Higher Mathematics, Latin, &c. Bookkeeping will be taught and completed by close of term. Rates of tuition reasonable.

An old tobacco-grower, speaking of the cultivation of the weed in general, remarked that land was much injured by allowing suckers to grow up after the tobacco had been cut. It is a useless exhaustion of the chemicals necessary for the growth of the plant. As soon as the crop of tobacco has been cut the stumps should be pulled up, and this can easily be done with an old-fashioned ...ang hoe. Let the farmers remember this very reasonable suggestion.

One day last week a young lady in this place saw a little inocent mole in the yard, and she got close enough to it to put a pan over it, then she laid a saw-buck on the pan, and put a big rock on top of the saw-buck, having the mole, as she thought, secure, ran into the house and got her brother to go and kill it. They marched out to where the prisoner had been, removed the saw-buck, &c., but the mole had gone. Now, the trouble with the brave girl is, where did that mole go to.

We hear it whispered around that ere the wild winds of March have passed another one of Burlington's young men will leave the life of single cussedness and take unto himself a better half for the remainder of his days here on earth. If this be true, "Old Boy," the RECORDER shall be a weekly visitor to your cheerful fire-side, and all that we ask of you is to read its columns, and donate $1 50 a year for the support of the printer. Here is our ☞. Hold on! congratulations are not in order yet.

Many of our readers doubtless have faith in the goose bone as a weather indicator. For the benefit of those who wish to possess such a weather prophet we give the following, which we find in an exchange: "The real bone can only be obtained from a goose that was hatched out in the spring, the month of May is said to be the best. The goose must not be killed until Indian summer has passed away. After cooking remove the breast bone, scrape it clean, then wash it in warm water and let it dry for a day or two. When it has been prepared, hold it up to the sun, or in front of a lamp in a dark room is better, and the discoloration can easily be deciphered. To one who knows the bone the reading is as plain as a book.

To the Democratic voters of Boone County.

It has come to my knowledge that there is being circulated in some portions of the county, a report that I was unduly influenced in my course of conduct, upon the occasion of the granting of a tavern license to B. Von Bogan, at the January term of the Boone County Court. Without taking up more space than is absolutely necessary, I will simply say, that such report is a lie from beginning to end, most infamous in its conception, and most [illegible] in its nature, originated by my enemies for the sole purpose of injuring my good name and circulated by them for the purpose of carrying out the base plot to defeat me for the office of County attorney.

I have only to add, that a person who would thus wantonly and in pure malice, stab another in the back with the vile knife of slander, is a villain of the deepest dye, and is doubly one, when such slander is given currency for the purpose of injuring the fair fame of a young man who seeks to make an honest living and at the same time win an honorable reputation as a lawyer. I hope my friends will do me the justice to treat this matter as it deserves to be treated, and give it the lie whenever occasion may require it.

STOTT BRO'S, Petersburg, Ky.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

BELLEVUE.

The Bellevue school closed last Friday. We learn there are several applicants to teach the spring term of our school.

The entertainment we spoke of sometime since has started on the back track—too much of the "dramatic" in it.

Joshua Rice and family, of Waterloo, have moved on S. D. Rice's farm near Middle Creek. We hear that he and J. H. Walton will prize tobacco there.

No plant beds burned in this part of the county yet. If as much ground will be set in tobacco this season as is now contemplated, with a favorable season largest crop will be raised here that ever has been raised.

GUNPOWDER.

Mis Lou Barlow, of Burlington is visiting relatives here.

Albert Beemon, &c., killed three coons last Friday.

The debating society at Pleasant Valley is still in progress.

Some of those who have tobacco on hand would like to see a buyer in this community.

Geo Barlow has been gathering up the chickens that was given to him as presents.

Miss Nettie Gardner's school has closed, and Miss Nettie left for her home in Burlington, last Wednesday.

There is a great deal of sickness in this vicinity. Bob Barlow, who has been on the sick list is some better at writing; Mrs. Frances Blankenbecker and little Eva Rouse are both quite sick at present.

GAINESVILLE.

Weather clear and cool.

James Horton, of Limaburg, was in town Sunday.

The party given by the widow Stephens last Wednesday night, the 17th inst., was a success, a large crowd being in attendance.

Sam Jones tried to stir the people up about here and we think he succeeded wonderfully. Some of our people started to hear Jones, and got as far as Lawrenceburg, stopped, meditated, and at last decided to stay and hear Rev. Callop, Baptist, and Rev. Smith, Christian. One of the party went on—heard Jones in the morning, and thought he would see a little of the city while waiting for the afternoon services to begin, but alas! those winding stairs, how deceitful, how unmerciful, always leading one astray.

LION.

FLORENCE.

The Goodridge boys have 150 lambs.

Milton Goodridge, of Oldham, is visiting his parents at Mechanicsville.

Rev. H. C. Morrison, of Covington, filled Bro. Bristow's pulpit at this place Sunday. He delivered an eloquent address.

Mr. Gaunt, candidate for Commonwealth's Attorney, from Carroll county, made us a visit last Friday, and he addressed those he met in a gentleman like manner, and from his tone he is likely to be the next attorney.

The hotest contest that has ever taken place since Florence has been an incorporated city, was that last Saturday for Police Judge, between Chas. Bradford and Frank Varner. At 2 o'clock the vote stood 0 for Bradford and nothing for Varner, and Varner's friends seeing his situation, chartered a wagon and run in all the voters from the different Wards, and when the poles closed the vote stood 21 to 20 in favor of Varner.

HEBRON.

T. A. Crigler's fox hound sold for $3 75.

Health of this community is very good at present.

Miss Lila Rouse is visiting relatives at Loveland, Ohio.

Woodsawings are the order of the day in this neighborhood.

The public school taught by J. B. Thornton will close next Friday.

The candidates make their appearance in this place once in awhile.

The Lewis Conner farm was rented Saturday, in lots amounting to $444.

G. M. Riley was in our village last week, hard at work taking down property, dogs, &c., on his list.

There will be a larger potato crop planted in this vicinity this season, and not quite so much tobacco

Jacob Crigler will supply this market with maple molasses, as soon as the weather will permit him to open his camp.

The sale of T. A. Crigler last Saturday was largely attended. Everything brought fair prices. Corn sold for 39 and 40 cents per bushel.

A spelling school was organized at this place last Saturday night, and will meet every Saturday evening at 7:30 o'clock. Everyone is expected to attend.

By some cause our County Paper does not reach this office until Saturday night. It should not reach here later than Thursday. [The cause is on the trains, and as soon as the new men on the route learn their business we will have them there on Thursday. The new men are Democrats.—Eds.]

RABBIT HASH.

C. G. Riddell is ferrying while Ben Wilson is sick.

B. C. Calvert left last Saturday for a visit to Louisville.

Ben Wilson and wife are confined to the house with colds.

Mrs. Hattie Morrison is confined to her room with rheumatism.

Mrs. Steele, of Rising Sun, is staying with her daughter, Hattie Morrison, this week.

Aunt Betsy Holmes is in her 92 year and has stood the severe winter as well as she has for several years.

George Duncan returned home Tuesday, from his trip south, his brother John, and Val Hills remained in the south.

This place was all in a stir for awhile last week, over the horse puzzle, but it was decided that $30 was the gain in the trade.

Rabbit Hash is not altogether slighted in the county campaign. We have John P. Ryle as a candidate for County Superintendent. One we think will exercise all his mental and physical power in behalf of the duties of the office. He is a man of good moral habits, and an earnest worker in educational welfares.

If the people in the Bellevue and Burlington precincts intend to take possession of our physician, Dr. Cowen, just notify us in time, so we can get another and not be left alone. He was at A. J. Barker's last Thursday to witness the arrival of a "dishwasher." On Middle Creek Dink's stock will have to be cared for awhile by some one, for he will spend all of his time teasing the little thing.

FRANCISVILLE.

A new and in most cases fatal disease has made its appearance among the the dogs of this vicinity. It is something like a distemper at first, but latter assumes a form similar to hydrophobia. Alf Whitlock has lost two or three of his valuable hounds, Thomas Hafer has lost some of his, while several cur dogs in the neighborhood are also effected.

We omitted to mention in our last communication the marriage of Wm. Bowman and Miss Barbra Schaffer. They were married at the residence of Mr. Chris Barlow's, Rev. Robt. Kirtley officiating. We are told it was a very pleasant affair, it is probable that if we had had a stool, we would not have forgotten to make mention of it at the proper time.

We are surprised that there are so many intelligent people throughout the county of Boone that do not patronize a home paper. A subscriber that stops his paper, or refuses to subscribe for a home paper, on account of the small sum of $1 50, should be supplied with medical almanacs at the public's expense. We would advise those given over to a habit of defauding their neighbors out of pure cussedness, to subscribe for the RECORDER, profit by its teachings, and experience a change of heart, that the general wellfare of the community may be promoted.

One of the most pleasant and sociable events that has taken place in this vicinity in a long time, was at the residence of Mr. Josh Masters, Thursday evening, the 11th inst. Quite a large number of guests were invited to witness the marriage of Mr. Thos Howard and Miss Linda Aera. Notwithstanding the fearful condition of the roads, quite a goodly number were present. The bride and groom with their attendants, who, by the way were Mr. Manless Goodridge and Miss Ella Aera, sister of the bride, presented a very fine appearance indeed. Rev. Robt. Kirtley officiated in tying the hymenial knot. After being made "bone of one bone, and flesh of one flesh" and had received the congratulations of their friends, supper was announced. Headed by the contracting parties the company marched out to a table spread with all the luxuries of the season; ample justice was done in devouring the rich viands prepared for the occasion. After supper the company, with a few exceptions adjourned to a room prepared for the merry dance. Here they tripped the light fantastic toe until the wee' sma' hours of the morning. Pro. Riley and Beall furnished the music, which was rendered in fine style. Taking it all in all the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Masters, and their untiring efforts in making it agreeable for all present, was, in our humble opinion a success. When the time came to adjourn the well wishes of all were left with Tom and his bride.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

I have been intending for a month past to write, you asking to acknowledge through your columns the kindness, fidelity and the skill of Dr. E. W. Duncan, of Walton, in his treatment of my boy at Richwood last December. He had a severe and tedious case of typhoid fever. The doctor watched him carefully and daily for nearly six weeks, until recovery. Money can never measure the value of such kind attentions. Yet he generously refused to make any charge. All who wish the attendance of a gentle, skillful and faithful physician, will find it in Dr. Duncan. Very Respectfully,

Rev. H. F. [illegible]

THE DEACON'S RIDE.

On his cool back porch sat Deacon Brown, the richest and fattest man in town.
Before, behind, to left and right, showed meadows dotted with gold and white.
And, grazing there in the pastures green, fifteen fine Jerseys as ever seen;
The regular herd book stock were they; and how much butter they made each day
I hardly would dare attempt to say.

No greater joy had Deacon Brown than to sit on the porch, as the sun went down,
And view his acres, so broad and fine, and feast his eyes on his Jersey kine;
But now his face wore a look much vexed, and he drummed his knees in a way perplexed,
As, sitting snug in his tilted chair, he gazed at the goodly show and fair
Of bovine beauties grazing there.

Well might the deacon muse and frown, and vaguely scratch his smooth, bald crown;
For a Jersey heifer, his pride and boast, the one of all that he valued most,
Had taken it into her head that she not like her meeker sisters would be,
And so, at sight of the milking pail, would lower her horns and thrash her tail,
And kick till her kicking power would fail.

All sorts of cures had the deacon tried; but, alas! for a good old churchman's pride!
"The finest heifer in this 'ere town" would never a drop of milk give down
For one whole day, tho' coaxed and fed with the "cream of the place," so the deacon said;
And when thrice she'd knocked the good man over, as if barn-yard mud were a field of clover,
He vowed in his wrath, as a deacon may, that he'd sell the creetur the very next day
To the village butcher, and risk his pay.

Yet now, as he sat and thought it o'er, it seemed that his cross was indeed most sure;
He could not do it, 'twould break his heart from his goodly heifer this way to part!
Just then strolled toward him his elder son, who never a bit of work had done,
But fished in the brook through the live-long day, instead of helping get in the hay,
Or "lift" at the farm work in any way.

So the deacon frowned a frown most stern: "'Twas time that a lazy youth should learn
To earn his salt; 'twas different when he was his age—the men was men,
No idle care-naughts; and going to school made something besides a college fool."
Then, growing milder: "Wall, 'bout Peachblow—I reckoned a cure you'd hap to know
In that heathen gabble you chatter so."

Quoth the idle scapegrace, with twinkling eye: "I've heard of a cure which you might try."
Then some Latin words he gravely said. "If on to her back a weight is laid She'll give milk straight way, and quiet be." Said the doubting deacon: "I'll try and see."
Out in the stable Peachblow stood, calm chewing her cud, as a heifer should.
Spoke the deacon: "William, you're young and spry; you can climb on her back now quicker'n I.
You'll do for the weight. I'll fetch the stool and milk the critter; you just keep cool."
But scarce had the hopeful gained his seat when out flew the placid Peachblow's feet,
And milker and milking stool upset in a way too hurried for etiquette.

And the deacon roared in his wrath: "Get down! I'll try myself—that'll bring her roun'."
And puffing and grumbling, with Will to boost, he found himself on his novel roost.
But, alas! with what little certainty can we plume our minds on things to be!
For just as the deacon, with voice elate, cried: "Go to milkin'; you needn't wait!"
The stanchion was loosed by some luckless Fate,
And wildly out through the open door dashed—as she never had dashed before—
The frightened heifer, with snorts and bounds, and her load of a hundred and ninety pounds.
The roaring scapegrace, behind was left; while, like a creature of sense bereft,
Young Peachblow flew with her frantic feet, a-bellowing down the village street.
To the district school boys what a treat!

The deacon's neckerchief flapped in the wind, his hat blew off and was left behind;
His eyes bulged out; his face grew white; his fringe of hair stood up with fright!
The children scampered with laugh and hoot; the dogs all started in mad pursuit;
The geese they squawked, and the chickens flew; the wives ran, startled by such ado;
Out rushed the husbands, to cry: "Halloo!"

And the good old parson, with face aghast, flew to the gate as the deacon passed.
What a dreadful scandal throughout the town might rise, from this frolic of Deacon Brown!
Was he drunk or crazy that thus he'd ride? And loud as he could the parson cried:
"Stop! stop! Brother Brown! Oh! where will you go?" And back from the dust came these words of woe:
"The Lord and this cow, sir, only know!"

But she stopped at last, this steed so gay; she stopped quite short in a sudden way
Struck out her heels, with a graceful poise, and the hundred and ninety avoirdupois
Shot over her head and into the dirt, with buttonless breeches and tattered shirt.

* * * * * * * * *

Sadder and wiser Deacon Brown led Peachblow home as the sun went down.
And all the question [illegible] of him to say was that he might tell them some other day.
But Peachblow was lamblike enough that night; was milked very meekly, and seemed all right
And the deacon mused: "Wal, the heathen may have tu-t-rate cow cures, but I must say:
"They are tryin' to old folks, anyway."

THE OPAL RING.

How It Brought Happiness Instead of Misery.

The few short, indistinct, but fateful words had been spoken that fixed the destiny of two human lives, showing to the one that she was beloved, to the other that his love was accepted and fully returned, and now Harry Holmes and Margaret Ellslie sat, hand clasped in hand with fondest pressure, enjoying to the full the delicious silence of trusting and trustworthy love. The first audible words were those uttered by Harry as he slipped from his little finger a ring that had been all the evening glowing and sparkling with the sunset tints of a summer cloud.

"Margerie, dear," he said, "I could not bear to go so far away and leave you unfettered by any tie that should bind you to me, and let me hope that this little reminder may often send your thoughts out after me till I come again to claim my wife."

The ring was slipped over the slender finger and a kiss bound it to its new ownership. The bright blush of acceptance had scarce flamed into her delicate cheek as the girl's eye rested upon the pretty circlet that was the acknowledged token of her not unwilling thralldom, when it suddenly paled and disappeared; a quick shudder ran over her frame, and her lips parted to give utterance to the single word: "Opal!"

"Why! Margerie, dear! what is it? Do you not like opals? I took especial pains to get this very setting, because I thought it showed to good advantage the lovely tints I have so often heard you praise. Do not you remember, dear, that evening on Forge Hill when the sky above was all one glory of softest masses of purple and crimson clouds, and then you talked of the lovely opal tints, and in my heart I vowed that were it ever my good fortune to claim this dear hand as my own I would deck it with the rarest opal that could be found on this side of the water. Speak to me. Do you not like it? I will exchange it for anything that will please you better."

"It is lovely, Harry, and I do like it—but—Harry—"

"What is it, dear? Be frank, be like your own self and tell me—but what, love?"

Margaret marked the tone of disappointment that lurked beneath her lover's fond words, and was conscious of a strong disinclination to change this his first gift for anything that could be bought to replace it; she was not a little ashamed to confess the foolish superstition that has rendered this, one of Nature's loveliest productions, a tabooed offering; therefore, with a little feminine diplomacy, she strove to change the current of his thoughts, by flattering his vanity.

"Nay, Harry, how can I be otherwise than sad, when I know that to-morrow at this hour we shall be far apart, perhaps never to meet again? You are going to encounter danger, perhaps death; and even though life and health may be spared, you may, perhaps, forget me in other scenes and among fairer faces, and—"

"Margery! Margery dear! If the entire devotion of all my past life has not convinced you that you are to me the one woman in the world, you are indeed a little sceptic, and deserve to be punished, so—and so—". "But, Margery," he resumed, after the gentle penance had been inflicted and endured, "why did you look so doubtfully at my poor ring, and why did you shiver as if a ghost had suddenly passed before you? Have you any unpleasant association with a ring of this kind that would make it an unkindness on my part to ask you to wear it? Do you know, dear, that this stone was a gift to my mother, the very last from my father before he went away on that voyage from which he never returned. She valued it more than all her other jewels, and in almost her last moments charged me to have it reset for my wife when I should have found her. I think she guessed right well who that wife would be before I told her all my hopes, and she assured me you were the one above all others she would have chosen to console me for her loss, and now— Why! Margery, love; you frighten me! I never saw you so."

For the girl, in a very passion of weeping, lay sobbing upon his breast. But Margaret would not then for worlds have confessed the simple truth, that superstition had gifted the opal with the power to bring into the life of its possessor all the train of evils that are fabled to have been turned loose upon the world by the morbid curiosity of Pandora; and ashamed of her weakness she soon wiped away her tears and smiled pathetically into her lover's face, and they talked on and on into the night about the happy home that they would share when he should come back to claim her and transplant his flower into the new soil of a distant land.

And so they parted. Harry Holmes departed the next day on his long journey by sea to the then untried and golden shores of the new El Dorado. Margaret's home was one of wealth and luxury; herself the unspoiled favorite of fortune. An only child, surrounded by everything that could charm the eye or please and satisfy the refined taste, she yet retained the sweet simplicity of habit and thought that marks the truly noble soul. One only weakness marred the otherwise almost perfectly well-balanced mind, superstition—a dread of baleful influences, a vague fear of some unknown power which should work harm to herself and those she loved, clouded her otherwise just perceptions, and dimmed her reason, as the moist breath dims the luster of the diamond.

For months after Harry's departure Margaret wore her ring, despite the first tremors that had shaken her serenity, until her fears were quieted and her forebodings laid to rest. Frequent letters told her of her lover's safe arrival, of his flattering prospects, his success in all his undertakings, his fond remembrance of the loved ones far away, herself the dearest of all, and breathed a spirit of hope that cheered every toil—the hope of returning at no distant day to claim his life's companion. And Margaret was, as ever, the light of her home, the pet and pride of her parents, whose lives were bound up in her.

Suddenly, as out of a clear summer sky, came the first flash, the first ominous peal that betokened a coming storm. There was heard from the East, from the West, from the North, and from the South the crash of falling houses. Business men began to look grave, to shake their heads ominously, to hedge and guard against the fury of the tempest that roared around them. Margaret's father had long been considered an oracle in business circles, and his opinion on any financial operation was considered definitive. But now, for the first time in a long and successful career, he began to doubt, to hesitate, to dread any ventures, to determine upon a course of action and suddenly to change his plans in such a way as involved serious sacrifices. Then came grave mistrust of the soundness of his own judgment, superstitious fears that he was fated to failure; and so through all the gradations of hesitancy, anxiety and dread, he went downward step by step to the most morbid fatalism.

The remainder of this part of my story is soon told. Loss of capital, loss of credit—it is difficult to say which was cause and which effect—but the result was what we have all read and seen in too many such cases.

"If it were for myself alone," the unhappy man would murmur, stopping for a moment in his restless pacing up and down his counting-room. "But my poor wife and Margaret! Why, oh why did I go on to this depth of ruin? Why did I not take warning from the foolhardiness of others and stop when I might have saved something from the wreck. Too late! too late! I must go down and drag them down with me." And so round and round in the treadmill of thought and anxiety and dread he paced the weary way till worn-out nature succumbed, and the wife and daughter first learned from his dying lips the story of their destitution. Mrs. Ellslie's attachment to her husband had been true and perfect. Too much overcome by her bereavement to comprehend the other misfortunes that had befallen her, she quietly folded her hands over her broken heart and speedily followed the husband of her youth and love. And now poor Margaret awoke from the stupor of grief to find herself alone and destitute. Some brief space was allowed her to realize her position, and then she went out into the world, that had hitherto been to her so bright a home.

Ours is not the usual story of faithless friends who forgot in the hour of adversity the friendship which had been their pride in days of prosperity. Eager hands were stretched out to assist poor Margaret in the rough paths which her feet must tread, and loving proffers of friendly aid were made in all sincerity, but she had an independent spirit, and while she felt deep gratitude for generous and appreciative love, she shrank from a state of dependence which she felt must be her destiny if she did not otherwise assert herself. A small pittance remained of the large fortune that her father had once possessed; the sale of her valuable trinkets increased the fund materially and enabled her to remove to a distant city and establish herself in a school for young children, in which she had moderate success. And now there stretched out before her prospectively the long, dry, dusty road of daily duties, uncheered by one hope of change or variety, for in all the weary months of her great sorrow she had never once been gladdened by word or token from the absent lover, and she had at last accepted the theory that the change in her prospects had wrought a corresponding change in his sentiments and that she had nothing more to hope in and from him. As if her cup of sorrow were not full and bitter enough, but must be filled to the brim and drained to the dregs, poor Margaret was laid upon a bed of sickness. The overwrought nerves avenged themselves upon a frame weakened by care and unaccustomed labor; the throbbing temples and labored breathing warned her to give herself a respite from the teaching of her little flock, and it was with a great thrill of terror and heart-sickness that she faced the stern necessity of acknowledging herself too ill for further effort, and felt in its full bitterness what it was to be friendless and alone. Who does not know all the torturing considerations that rushed upon her—the loss of her means of support, the diminution of her scanty resources, the horror of debt incurred without means of payment, the ever recurring mental calculation of how many weary days of closest economy she could subsist upon the small sum remaining to her. She hoped fervently that she might die; life had so few attractions and death no fears.

But, though her disease was slow and lingering, she became at length conscious that she was beginning, little by little, to gather up her shattered forces and creep back into the life that had in it so little promise. Some immediate step was necessary to gain the means of meeting pressing needs. She had retained, through all her misfortunes the last loving birthday gift of her father, a costly watch, and the fateful ring that she now looked at shudderingly and cared no longer to keep. She found on inquiry an honest and accommodating jeweler who was ready to undertake the sale of her valuables, asking only a moderate commission, and to her great relief was soon put in possession of a sum that she hoped would enable her to tide over the time until she could again find remunerative employment. Out of the many advertisements for lady copyists, saleswomen, workers in fine needle-work, etc., which she answered she was at last so fortunate as to meet with one honest want which she could honestly satisfy, and after weary months of hope deferred she found herself the hired and tolerably well paid occupant of a writer's desk in an insurance office, and here at last the tired wings of our storm-beaten bird might fold themselves in needed rest. Her work was neither laborious nor uncongenial, her remuneration ample for her needs and secure in payment, her hours of rest abundant, and her home in the quiet family of a childless widow was one in which she had the assurance of giving quite as much as she received in pleasant companionship and pecuniary aid. And here we might leave our little heroine to fight on in the brave battle of life in which she has hitherto met with such varying success; but were we to do this our story would be without its lesson.

Coming one evening to her home at an hour rather later than was her custom, after a day of nervous depression, feeling more keenly than for a long time before her utter loneliness and friendliness, her want of the companionship of congenial minds and her dispiriting change of position, she entered the house with slow step and wearied feet. Pausing for a moment to shake off some snow flakes that powdered her outer garments, she opened the door of the little parlor, which was the common sitting-room of the family, and entered, expecting to find only its usual occupant her hostess. The tall figure of a bronzed and bearded man occupied the rug before the cheerful fire. A start of surprise, a swift glance of wonder and recognition, the exclamation of the name of each by the lips of the other, and in an instant Margaret was clasped in the arms that opened to receive her, and Henry Holmes, from the height of his six feet of strong manhood, looked down with moistened eyes upon the palid face of his unconscious Margaret, his "pearl of great price."

When restored calmness and the certainty of living and waking happiness gave to her the strength to listen to her lover's past experience, Margaret heard a story of a long and dangerous illness in a mountain miner's cabin, attended only by rough frontiersmen, of letters lost in transit, of intelligence delayed, of patient search for her, first in the city of her former residence, then among the patrons of her little school, who, in the hurry and bustle of their own more fortunate and happy lives, had lost sight of her and ceased to interest themselves in her well-being. "And now, Margery, I have found you at last, and we have met never to be parted again. This very night—now, within the hour—you must give yourself to me for all our lives, 'till death us do part.' The formalities have all been observed. Your landlady has told me all she knew of your story, and while waiting for your return I have taken all the necessary steps. A clergyman will be here in a few moments. See, here is a ring made of the first gold I ever dug out of the rocks of California. I vowed that it should make my wedding ring, and it fits your finger like a charm. Look up, dear girl, and tell me that you will be glad to wear it for my sake."

"But this is so sudden; so hurried, dear Harry; my black dress; surely you would not—

"Surely I would not myself, nor let you be superstitious about the color of a dress. We will take care of that hereafter. Fate has led me a will-o'-wisp journey long enough. I will have no more of it. I will have you now at once and forever. Shall I not, Margaret?" And he had his will, and Margaret never went back to the chair and desk of the office.

A few months passed in wandering in foreign lands brought back the color to Margaret's cheek, the light to her eyes, and elasticity to her spirits; and then, when she had become again the gay and joyous Margery of his recollections, her husband brought her to a lovely home, where for many years she was the light and blessing of his life. The fateful ring was never mentioned. Margaret at first dreaded that he would inquire what had become of his first gift, but if her husband ever thought of it, he never spoke his thought. Twelve years of happy wedded life had passed away, when, at the close of a bright summer day, spent in sharing the pleasures of their country home with city friends, Margaret and her husband were seated upon the verandah watching the frolics of their two children upon the lawn which sloped down to the Hudson. They were silent, but happy in the perfect love and trust of entire confidence and unchanged affection. Suddenly Margaret turned to her husband: "Harry, there is a question I have often wished to ask you, but you have always seemed to shrink from the subject whenever I approached it, and I have never ventured to pursue it, may I ask it now?"

"Surely, Margery, there is nothing you may not ask me," he replied.

"Do you remember, dear, when you first found me and were telling me of your long search before you got any clew to my residence, I asked you how you at first discovered me and you answered, as it afterward seemed to me, evasively—though at the time I did not think of it—that it was knowledge gained through an old friend that enabled you to trace me. Tell me now, Harry, who it was and how you were led to the right place at last."

"Tell me first, Margery, do you still retain any remnant of your old superstition about opals? Would you accept from me, in honor of your birthday to-morrow, an opal ring?"

"Oh, Harry, no! Think. That opal was a parting gift from your father to his wife and was ominous of all the sorrow she felt in her great loss. It was the forerunner of the misfortunes that darkened my life, and it was only after I parted with it—for I did part with it, Harry, when I thought you faithless and my need was pressing—that my happiness came back to me. Give me no more opals. It is weak and foolish, but that ring cost me too much."

"See here, Margery, see what for more than twelve years I have kept concealed from you and carried near my heart," and Harry took from a tiny box the old gage de amour that had played such an important part in their life history. "This, dear, is the friend that told me where to find my wife. The jeweler who wrought my gold into the ring you wear was looking over some specimens I had brought from the mining country, when he brought out a tray of rings to compare some stones with those I showed him. Among them lay this ring, which I instantly recognized. A few words of inquiry gave me the address you had left. From that I easily traced you to the house in which I found you. I bought the ring, and for years have wanted to put it back on your hand, where it belongs. Have we not all these years been prosperous and happy; happy in each other, in our children, in our lot in life, our hopes for the life hereafter? Are you now afraid of the baleful influence of the opal, Margery?"

For reply Margaret held out her hand, the jewel was restored to its old place upon her finger, and her tears of love and thankfulness were bright as the sparkle of the opal ring.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

A CLOSE CALL.

Narrow Escape from Four Murderously-Inclined Ruffians.

"That, indeed, was a hair-breadth escape," exclaimed Jonesey's partner, when Harrison had concluded the relation of a war reminiscence, "but what, in your opinion, was the tightest fix you ever got into?"

"Well," answered Harrison, after relighting his pipe, "I reckon the closest call I ever had was in Kansas, in 1871. I was on my way West, going from Texas to California—quite a ride on horseback—with six horses and five hundred dollars in cash in my pocket. Any company is better than none when you are on a long trip and passing through a strange country, and on the way I had fallen in with a mulatto of whom I had known something in Denison and with whom I had journeyed for several days prior to our arrival in Parker, a small town almost on the Nation—(Indian Territory) line, and right abreast of the Delaware reservation.

"At Parker, where he was somewhat acquainted, and which we reached about noon, I sold four of my horses at a bargain. The sun was intensely hot during the day-time, the moon was nearly at its full, and, as it was fine riding at night, we concluded to rest until evening. I slept for an hour or two, and at 7:30 was ready to start. Along came my colored friend on time, accompanied by two Cherokee Indians, mounted, and a half-breed on foot. Bob allowed they were friends of his who were going to a camp about twelve miles distant, and asked if I had any objection to lending my other horse to the half-breed. I agreed, and we rode on, the half-breed and I in front, and the others following. We proceeded on our way pleasantly enough for six or eight hundred yards, I having as little suspicion of impending danger as though I had been at home in old Virginia on the plantation. As we traveled on I watched a small dark cloud which was about to obscure, or partially obscure, the moon. We had just entered a little patch of woods at the bend of the river, the silvery orb had penetrated the outer edge of the cloud, when suddenly—as I afterward remembered, for I thought nothing of it at the time—I heard those in the rear closing up on us. Then one of the Cherokees, a six-footer, rode alongside of me, seized my bridle, and in another instant leaped to his feet, crying out: 'I speck a Delaware too much for you!'—trying to pass himself off as one of that tribe.

"I recollect the scene as though it had happened only yesterday. 'Twas just about as dark as it now is outside—a very dim moonlight. Immediately the whole plot flashed upon me. The negro knew of my selling the horses and that the money received was upon my person, and had naturally conjectured that I had more besides. There was no time to lose; quick and decided action only could save me if anything could, for it was undoubtedly their intention to kill me after if not before robbing me.

"The Cherokee stood between his horse and mine, and in a second I swung my animal around, bringing the robber's wrists between the shoulders of the two. I wore a pair of big Mexican spurs, and I put them to good use till I could hear the bones of his wrist fairly cracking. Meantime, I had drawn my Derringer—it snapped. Instantly I pulled my bowie from my boot and made a desperate lunge for him, exclaiming: 'I speck not.'

"But he was too quick for me and I missed him. Again I sank my spurs in up to the rowels, and, brandishing my long bladed knife, I gave an old-fashioned yell, the like of which I reckon they never had heard, and charged on the others behind me.

"'Give me the road, dogs, damn you!' I shouted, and at them I went. It was my only chance. I could not go on. I must regain the town. And they gave me the road, too! Resistance on my part against such odds had been so unexpected, and the whole affair had occurred in such a short space of time, that they failed to recover from their surprise until I had ridden through their midst and placed a good fifty or seventy-five yards between us. Then they began shooting—pop, pop, six or seven times—but I rode back unharmed to Parker."—Chicago Herald.

THE HANDS.

How They May Be Protected in Cold Weather.

If the hands are stained, use a handful of clean sand in the water, rubbing in on the stains. This sand can be rinsed off and kept in a dish for daily use. Oxalic acid will take off stains, but it is rank poison and dangerous to have about; it also makes the hands exceedingly harsh. They must be washed thoroughly in tepid water to insure its entire removal, then rubbed with glycerine. The use of too much glycerine makes the hands moist and cold or clammy and very disagreeable to the touch. Never hold the hands near the fire while rubbing with glycerine, as it dries in places before penetrating, leaving the hands harsh.

Many housekeepers have rough hands in winter, which grow very painful, cracking open on the knuckles, the cracks extending into the palms of the hands. They take their hands out of hot soap-suds or starch to hang clothes in the wind. If they did not use hot water, and the hands were thoroughly dried before going out, this would be avoided. A pair of white woolen stockings, cut off rounding at the ankle and sewed across, with a thumb sewed in, make a very comfortable pair of mittens for hanging up and taking off clothes. Pin them fast to the sleeves with large safety pins before going out, having first stretched the arm upward, then they will not come loose and the wrists will be protected. After bringing in the clothes, if the mittens are put in the clothes-pin bag they will be kept clean and in the right place.

Hands are injured in very cold weather by lack of protection at the wrists, as large veins and arteries are exposed. The blood is chilled in passing into the hands. Every one can not have handsome, white and shapely hands, but every one can have clean and comfortable hands.—Toledo Blade.

HOME AND FARM.

—Feed plenty of carrots and plenty of grain, keep the cows warm, and you may have fairly yellow butter in winter. —Chicago Tribune.

—Diarrhea in calves is successfully treated by giving the whites of eggs beaten up with water into an emulsion, eight eggs being used to a pint of water, half a tablespoonful being taken at a dose and, repeated every two hours.—Chicago Times.

—One of the merits peculiar to blue-grass as a pasture feed is said to be that the longer it is pastured the more it will yield, provided, however, it is not grazed too closely, and stock is kept from it in the spring until the soil is so dry as to be firm.—Albany Journal.

—A breast of mutton should cook in about three-quarters of an hour. First boil it very gently for half an hour in enough boiling salted water to cover it, and then put it between the bars of a double wire gridiron, and quickly brown it on both sides, seasoning it with salt and pepper.—Cincinnati Times.

—Hens often learn to eat their eggs from eating the egg-shells which are given to them with their food. They find it easy to crush the shells which are thus scattered in their way. If you have plenty of oyster and clam shells, or ground bone, the amount of lime in the egg-shells is scarcely worth saving for your fowls.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—Good bright straw may be used as a substitute for hay or corn fodder when it is more plenty or cheaper than the latter. It needs a little extra grain to go with it, as it does not contain as much nutriment as the hay. It is better adapted to growing stock than to milch cows or working horses. Colts and young horses thrive on it.—Exchange.

—"Prune in winter for wood and in summer for fruit." But do not prune too much. Just enough to let in sufficient light and air to give the leaves their fair quota is right. A good rule is, when you see a limb interfering with another, out with it, whatever the time of year. When the sap is in full flow wounds will heal over quickest.—N. Y. Telegram.

—Dainty Biscuits: Beat very lightly one egg, pour it over a pint of flour, add a glass of milk, and chop in one tablespoonful of lard and butter mixed. Work thoroughly together, break up pieces the size of marbles, which must be rolled as thin as your nail. Sprinkle with dry flour, as you roll them out to make them crisp; stick with a fork and bake quickly.—The Caterer

HOUSEKEEPING.

Look Upon It as a Business and Be Systematic in Your Work.

Housekeeping should be conducted on system. No business is well conducted without systematic rules which are strictly adhered to. Housekeeping is as much a business as book-keeping, though but few housekeepers ever look at it in that light. There should be a place for every thing, to begin with. A great deal of vexation, of loss of time and extra labor results from not having things where they belong. If you are in a hurry to find any thing, it generally happens that it can't be found; or, if found, it has to be hunted for. This can all be avoided by forming the habit of putting each article in its proper place and keeping it there when not in use. It is an easy matter to do this when once the habit is formed. Do not allow yourself to "lay any thing down" wherever "it comes handy to do so." If your kitchen has not conveniences of the kind required, make them or get them made. Insist on having a set of small drawers in which to keep spices, etc., near your mixing table. Have these drawers labeled plainly. Have a place by itself for such vessels as you use for baking and other cooking. Never let these vessels get into any other department. This concentrates your labor; there will be no necessity for running here and there for what is wanted. When you want anything you know where it is.

Let the idea of a place for every thing and every thing in its place be carried out in all departments of the household. To reduce housekeeping to a system, you must arrange your work after a plan, and let this plan be adhered to. Take it up in an orderly way—not, as so many others do, in a jumble, doing a little of this now, and then a little of that, or trying to do half a dozen things at the same time. Get one thing out of the way before you begin another. Think your work over and decide the order in which it can be done to the best advantage, and, having ascertained from experiment what that order is, make it the daily programme. In a short time you will see household matters moving like clockwork. There will be no clash, no confusion. In doing housework, it should be the aim of the housekeeper to save time and labor as far as possible. Where one step will answer never take two. By having things in their proper place, and knowing just what is to be done, at a particular time, you can economize time and labor to a great extent. Some women make half a dozen trips to the cellar where one would be sufficient if they worked as well with their heads as they do with their hands. They do not take the trouble to think, before going to the cellar or storeroom for one thing, that several other things will be required from that place. All might be brought at the same time, and thus much time saved and many steps. It pays to think these things out

The kitchen should be roomy. No woman can do housework well in small cluttered-up rooms. Let it be arranged as conveniently as possible. Have a place for the accommodation of dirty clothes, and teach the children to put all their soiled garments there when they are exchanged for clean ones. This will remove the necessity of making a trip to every room on wash-day. Insist on having the occupants of each room strip the clothing from the beds and hang before the window to air, on arising. If this be done, by the time the morning work is out of the way in the kitchen, the chamber work can be attended to. By making it the rule to have everything in its proper place, other members of the family than the housekeeper can find needed articles readily and without throwing everything into confusion. Let the bill of fare be varied from day to day. When you get hold of a good recipe put it in a scrap-book, which should be kept in every kitchen. In a short time you will have a large number of recipes which you can rely on, and reference to this will suggest variations in the daily food. Never admit anything but a tested and reliable recipe. Every kitchen should have a set of measures and scales for use in making cakes and other articles which must be compounded carefully and accurately as regards proportions. Philadelphia Call.

Good Grounds for Hope.

"Do you think you will be acquitted?" asked a New York gentleman of a prominent man who was indicted for bribery.

"Yes, I think so."

"Has your lawyer given you grounds to think so?"

"No," responded the hopeful client, "but I have given him grounds to think so. I've deeded him all my real estate as his fee."—N. Y. Telegram.

HISTORICAL GEMS.

The French Crown Jewels and Their Probable Fate.

The gems and jewels of France have been famous for generations, and interest in them is revived by the report that the Chamber of Deputies have "agreed that they should be sold to provide funds for aged workmen." The richness and value of this great regalia have been prominent in literature and politics ever since the remarkable report made concerning them to the French Assembly in 1791. In the list then made there were carefully described 9,547 diamonds, 506 pearls, 134 sapphires, 150 emeralds, 71 topazes, 3 Oriental amethysts, 8 Syrian garnets and 8 other stones not designated. The estimate value of these treasures, together with the bijou and mounted parures belonging to the crown amounted to nearly 30,000,000 francs, or about $6,000,000. The most famous of these gems was the diamond known as Le Regent, valued at 12,000,000 francs, and that other diamond equally famous, called Le Sancy, valued at 1,000,000 francs.

The mysterious theft in September, 1792, of this magnificent and matchless collection was a nine days' wonder. Many of the finest of these gems have never been recovered, and time has failed to reveal the authors of that gigantic theft. The Regent diamond was found in a ditch beside one of the alleys of the Champ d'Elysees. When the "Little Corporal" became Emperor he made great efforts to restore the national regalia to their former beauty and value. The various countries of Europe were searched for the lost gems, and it is said that many of them were recovered. Other gems were added to the regalia, so that in 1810 there were no fewer than 37,393 precious stones recorded in the inventory of the crown. In 1849 so many additions had been made in the meantime, the casket contained 64,812 gems and precious stones of all kinds, valued at over twenty million francs.

The famous Regent was the foundation of the fortune of William Pitt, British Governor of Madras, who bought it of a Parsee merchant for $60,000. Pitt took it to London, had it cut, and then offered it for sale. The royal house of Great Britain declined to purchase it, and afterward it was bought through the Duke of Orleans, Regent of France during the minority of Louis XV., for 3,375,000 francs. That was in 1717, and 1791 a commission of experts placed its value at 12,000,000 francs, and even that sum is exceeded by the valuation of the present time. It found its way to Holland, where Napoleon cast eyes upon it, and, when his fortunes improved, he recovered it, and had it set in the handle of the sword of state. Since then it has been removed and so arranged in its setting as to be placed at will either in the crown or used separately.

The jewels of the crown were displayed to the public during the Universal Exposition at Paris in 1855. Since then there have been valuable additions made to the Louvre collection, the most recent and noted being that of the late Mme. Thiers, who possessed a rare jewel, a necklace of precious stones of the sixteenth workmanship, and regarded as without a rival in Europe, except among the regalia preserved at St. Petersburg.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

—A man who had never seen the inside of a law court until he was recently introduced as a witness in a case pending in one of the Scottish courts, on being sworn took a position with his back to the jury, and began telling his story to the Judge. The Judge, in a bland courteous manner, said: "Address yourself to the jury, sir." The man made a short pause, but, not comprehending what was said to him, forthwith continued his narrative. The Judge was then more explicit, and said to him: "Speak to the jury, sir—the men sitting behind you on the benches." The witness at once turned around, and, making an awkward bow, said, with great gravity: "Good morning, gentlemen."

—The youngest performer in the London theaters is the infant that takes part in the baby song in the last act of "My Sweetheart." It is eighteen months old, and is the fourteenth child of a working gunmaker in Edinburgh. It is put to bed every afternoon at four, is brought to the theater at nine, and is in bed again half an hour later, earning for this duty, it is said, more than its father.

—A Maine farmer astonished even the natives by his ingenuity in keeping warm. On the forward part of his sled was rigged a small tight shanty, in which were a comfortable seat and a hot stove. Two small holes admitted the reins and a pane of glass let him see whither he was going.—Boston Post.

Poisoned by Scrofula

The taint of scrofula in the blood should be got rid of or serious consequences may result. Consumption is undoubtedly scrofula of the lungs, and in its early stages may be cured by purifying the blood and building up the system. For this Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequaled. It also cures scrofula when it appears in the form of running sores, boils, bunches in the neck, catarrh, or in any other manner. While it purifies, Hood's Sarsaparilla also vitalizes and enriches the blood.

"I have been taking Hood's Sarsaparilla for about three months. Before that time my blood was in a terrible condition. After taking it for about one month my appetite was better and my general health greatly improved. For a medicine as good as Hood's Sarsaparilla too much can not be said." L. L. Linen, Bagbee House, Putnam, Ct.

"I have been troubled with scrofula for three years, having running sores on my leg. After taking one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla I am getting well rapidly." Asa Elbet, South Bend, Ind.

—Dr. Haecker, of Leipsic, has investigated the sensation known as tickling, which he styles a variable, intermittent excitement of the nerves of the skin. He says it produces a contraction of the blood vessels, and that the consequent diminution of pressure on the brain, permeated with blood vessels, is so considerable as not to be without danger; that powerful expiration operates against such a diminution of pressure, and therefore laughter, which is simply intermittent forced movements of expiration, is a decided remedy for the effects of tickling.

"I do not like thee, Dr. Fell,
The reason why, I can not tell."

It has often been wondered at, the bad odor this oft-quoted doctor was in. 'Twas probably because he, being one of the old-school doctors, made up pills as large as bullets, which nothing but an ostrich could bolt without nausea. Hence the dislike. Dr. R. V. CONTAGIOUS!

I am a native of England, and while I was in that country I contracted a terrible blood poison, and for two years was under treatment as an out-door patient at Nottingham Hospital, England, but was not cured. I suffered the most agonizing pains in my bones, and was covered with sores all over my body and limbs. Finally I completely lost all hope in that country, and sailed for America, and was treated at Roosevelt in this city, as well as by a prominent physician in New York having no connection with the hospitals. I saw the advertisement of Swift's Specific, and I determined to give it a trial. I took six bottles and I can say with great joy that they have cured me entirely. I am as sound and well as I ever was in my life. FRED HALFORD.

A QUESTION ABOUT Brown's Iron Bitters ANSWERED.

The question has probably been asked thousands of times, "How can Brown's Iron Bitters cure everything?" Well, it doesn't. But it does cure any disease for which a reputable physician would prescribe IRON. Physicians recognize Iron as the best restorative agent known to the profession, and inquiry of any leading chemical firm will substantiate the assertion that there are more preparations of iron than of any other substance used in medicine. This shows conclusively that iron is acknowledged to be the most important factor in successful medical practice. It is, however, a remarkable fact, that prior to the discovery of BROWN'S IRON BITTERS no perfectly satisfactory iron combination had ever been found. BROWN'S IRON BITTERS does not injure the teeth, cause headache, or produce constipation—all other iron medicines do. BROWN'S IRON BITTERS cures Indigestion, Biliousness, Weakness, Dyspepsia, Malaria, Chills and Fevers, Tired Feeling, General Debility, Pain in the Side, Back or Limbs, Headache and Neuralgia—for all these ailments Iron is prescribed daily. BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, does not cure in a minute. Like all other thorough medicines, it acts slowly. When taken by men the first symptom of benefit is renewed energy. The muscles then become firmer, the digestion improves, the bowels are active. In women the effect is usually more rapid and marked. The eyes begin at once to brighten; the skin clears up; healthy color comes to the cheeks; nervousness disappears; functional derangements become regular, and if a nursing mother, abundant sustenance is supplied for the child. Remember Brown's Iron Bitters is the ONLY iron medicine that is not injurious. Physicians and Druggists recommend it.

AN EASTERN BLIZZARD.

Velocity of the Wind Something Phenomenal.

Buildings Unroofed and Great Damage to Property.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 26.—The wind played havoc with housetops all over the city to-day. Shingles were blown in the air and tin roofs were torn from their fastenings and hurled to the ground. A three-story house opposite the public buildings in Juniper street was unroofed and the mass of tin was suspended above the yard in the rear. The spire of the Arch street Methodist Church swayed ominously this morning, and those who passed that way gave the building a wide berth, but it still remains in position. The velocity of the wind to-day reached forty-five miles an hour.

HARRISBURG, PA., Feb. 26.—A wind-storm of a most disastrous character has prevailed in this neighborhood for the past twenty-four hours, and still continues. Houses have been unroofed and chimneys blown down. This afternoon two of the large stand pipes of the Lochiel Iron Works were toppled over, one of which crashed into the works. Fortunately no person was injured. The damage throughout the country will be considerable.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Feb. 26.—One of the heaviest gales of the season set in last night and continued to-day. The temperature was four degrees above. About 9 o'clock last night, while the wind was blowing a strong gale, a lady, said to be a sister of the late ex-Governor Seymour, was blown from a Lake Shore train between Erie and Dunkirk. She attempted to pass from the dining car to the sleeper with her husband, and no sooner stepped upon the platform than she was carried swiftly off the train. The train was backed nearly a mile before they found the lady, who had escaped death, but received a deep gash over her left temple.

BOSTON, Feb. 26.—At 9 o'clock this morning a huge telegraph pole at the corner of Maryland and Alabama streets was broken short off by the high winds. Other poles in the neighborhood were broken or pulled down in quick succession, and several streets were blockaded with fallen poles and inextricable snare of wires. Many horses were entangled, and a panic was narrowly averted. A furious blizzard prevailed during the night in this vicinity and for a long distance down the Eastern coast. At Portland twenty inches of snow has fallen, and it is still snowing. Business is at a standstill. The Grand Trunk Railway is blocked at Bethel, and between there and South Pass is in bad condition. At St. John, N. B., the snow is the heaviest of the season, and the wind is blowing sixty miles an hour. At Westfield the steeple of the First Congregational Church was turned completely over and thrust through the roof of the building into the audience-room.

ENTERPRISING LAWYER.

He Divorces His Wife, Remarries, and Elopes With Another Woman.

ST. JOSEPH, MO., Feb. 26.—A lawyer named Wm. Makepiece, from Dunlap, Ia., together with a woman and two children, was arrested in this city to-day. Charges against him are embezzlement, stealing a team of horses and carrying off mortgaged property. Makepiece was a collection lawyer at Dunlap and became enamoured of a young lady from Des Moines, named Katie Vogel, whom he married, having previously procured a divorce from his wife. He took his new wife to Denison, Ia., left her, returned to Dunlap, and eloped with Mrs. Donaldson. In doing so he appropriated a team of horses and carried off his mortgaged property, besides leaving several claims of clients in an unsettled condition.

Great Co-operative Store Scheme.

PITTSBURGH, PA., Feb. 26.—The Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers has on foot a scheme to establish, in this city, a huge depot or store, from which will be distributed supplies of flour, groceries, boots and shoes, tobacco, etc., to subordinate stores throughout the manufacturing communities of the country. Manufacturers and merchants in this and other cities have agreed to furnish the supplies either at minimum wholesale prices or on commission. The goods will be the same as sold to the wealthiest classes, and will all be marked by the association. Prominent among the subordinate depots will be Wheeling, W. Va.; Steubenville and Bellaire, Ohio; Greencastle, Ind.; Chicago, Ill.; Bayview, Wis.; St. Louis, Mo.; Birmingham, Ala.; Wheeling, Ala.; Ironton and Portsmouth, Ohio; Ashland, Ky.; Cincinnati and Mingo, Ohio; the various cities of the Shenango and Mahoning Valleys, including Cleveland—in short, all of the localities in which are cities and towns employing organized labor, and more especially Amalgamation members.

A Romance of South Mountain.

WOMELSDORF, PA., Feb. 26.—Conrad Nagle, aged seventy-five years, who for many years lived the life of a hermit on South Mountain on the land of Samuel Long, was found dead in his hut yesterday. The old man lay stretched upon a buffalo robe and the wood fire in his hearth was out. Three days ago, when he was in good health, he predicted that he would die February 25 at 4 o'clock in the morning, and it is firmly believed that it was about that time he died. There was no evidence of a violent death, as the old man looked as if he had peacefully passed away. Fifty years ago he lost his wife and immediately after that he went upon the mountain and selected an extremely wild and unfrequented place and vowed he would never leave it nor again mingle with the people of the world, but would prepare himself to meet the soul of his dead wife.

A National Shrine.

ALBANY, N. Y., Feb. 26.—The Senate to-day passed the bill ceding to the United States jurisdiction over the Drexel Cottage at Mt. McGregor in which General Grant died.

A Singular Accident.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 26.—A most agonizing accident happened this afternoon to Henry Dilg, an expressman, with headquarters in the Court-street market space. With a number of other drivers he was engaged in performing gymnastic feats on an iron bar in the market house. In giving himself a long swing his left leg caught on a butcher's meat hook sticking out from the wall. The pain caused him to loosen his grip on the iron bar, and he hung head downward by his leg. The weight of his body tore the flesh and muscles of the limb in a sickening manner. He was lifted off the rack by his comrades, and sent to the hospital in a patrol wagon. The wound is not serious, although it may render him a cripple for life.

Mormons Sentenced.

SALT LAKE, UTAH, Feb. 26.—Frank J. Cannon and Angus Cannon were held to-day in $1,000 bail each for assault on U. S. Attorney Dickson. S. A. Kenna was discharged. H. I. Gowans, W. H. Lee, H. J. Faulger, all defiant unlawful cohabitors, were sentenced each to six months' imprisonment and $300 fine.

Scarlet Fever Epidemic.

MATTOON, ILL., Feb. 26.—Scarlet fever is epidemic at Toledo, Cumberland County. The public schools have been closed, and the Circuit Court was adjourned prematurely to avoid spreading the disease.

Murder in First Degree.

FLINT, MICH., Feb. 26.—The jury in the case of Fred Foote, charged with the murder of Andrew J. Brink, saloon-keeper at Fenton, on the evening of December 29 last, this afternoon brought in a verdict of murder in the first degree. The prisoner listened coolly to the verdict and was remanded to jail to await sentence.

Business Failures.

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—R. G. Dun & Co. report business failures for the past week as follows: United States 214, Canada 34; total 248, against 266 last week and 275 the week previous. More than half the failures occurred West and South.

TORN FROM THE ALTAR.

Excitement and Indignation at a Pennsylvania Revival Meeting.

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—A special from Reading, Pa., says: Revival meetings in the village of Temple, six miles from here held by Rev. Ulysses Grant Glick, have attracted very large crowds. Tuesday night there was a scene of extraordinary excitement. Lena Myers, a prepossessing brunette, aged seventeen, was at the altar among many other penitents. Her relatives not wishing her to become a member of the Evangelical Association, rushed through the crowded congregation up to where the young lady was kneeling, and endeavored to take her away. They were opposed by the singing and praying members of the congregation who forced the intruders back. The lady's sister took hold of the praying, weeping girl, and attempted to pull her away, but the disturbers were pushed back with considerable force, and their efforts to pull her out proved unavailing. There was intense excitement among the congregation, some of whom threatened vengeance if the girl was not allowed to seek religion in her own way. The constable of the village was appealed to, but he positively declined to interfere. Order was finally restored. Thus far thirty-two penitents have joined the Evangelists. People attend for miles around, and one woman, aged eighty years, walks three miles every evening to participate in the exercises. Miss Myers was among the happiest of the penitents last night, and says she will yet gather all her relatives into the fold.

A HORRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Two Children Whirled for an Hour Around the Shaft of a Mill.

READING, PA., Feb. 25.—A man named Lillie owns a mill at Shamokin Hill. His twin daughters, Katie and Susie, aged 6 years, strayed to an upstair room in the mill where a shaft was revolving. While at play the little ones ventured too near the machinery and their clothing caught in the shaft, and they were drawn around it and whirled with each revolution. After being thrown around for an hour they were found by an older sister, who had come to look for them. When the machinery was stopped their bodies were found to be terribly lacerated. The skull of Katie was badly fractured and her body in other ways much mutilated, causing her death. Susie still lives, but her chances of recovery are small. Her entire body is more or less injured, several bones being broken.

GERONIMO GOES BACK,

After Refusing to Surrender Unconditionally.

EL PASO, TEXAS, Feb. 25.—Word has just reached here of a meeting between General Crook and Geronimo, at Sauva Ranch, the day before yesterday. The chief and five bucks, in consultation with General Crook asked permission to return to the reservation unconditionally. General Crook refused, demanding an unconditional surrender. Geronimo declined to give himself up, and after a consultation left for his camp, keeping the white flag flying for several miles. Chief Nana and another are still held as hostages. Geronimo is reported to have ninety bucks, besides women and children with him. No attempt will be made to follow him. It is not known what he will do.

A STRANGE FATALITY.

An Old Lady Accidentally Killed By a Pet Mastiff.

ANSONIA, CONN., Feb. 25.—Yesterday morning the wealthiest lady in Derby, Mrs. W. R. Slade, died from injuries received from her pet mastiff playfully springing upon her while in the cellar, throwing her down and breaking her hip. Her grand daughter, Miss Josie Hill, was to have been married yesterday afternoon to Chas. H. Alling, a wealthy manufacturer of Birmingham, and over two hundred invitations had been sent to friends in New York, New Haven, Hartford and Waterbury. They were recalled Tuesday, and yesterday afternoon the marriage quietly took place at the bride's residence, only the intimate friends being present. A handsome fortune was bequeathed the bride by the grandmother.

The Emancipation of Labor.

PARIS, Feb. 25.—The Socialist members of the Chamber of Deputies to-day joined in sending a telegram to the British workmen in the House of Commons, proposing a joint International movement in the interest of laboring men. The main objects of the proposition are to be the securing of a reduction in the hours of labor; improvement in the sanitary condition of workshops; proper limits to the work obtained of women and minors, and an absolute prohibition against allowing children of either sex under fourteen years of age to work at all in shops or factories. The telegram suggests that the British workmen join those of French in inviting the workmen of America and over Europe to send delegates to a congress to be held next September, in some place to be hereafter designated, for the purpose of discussing means to emancipate the workmen of all countries.

Dan Dalton's Dilemma.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 25.—At noon to-day Judge Robertson granted a writ of habeas corpus for County Clerk Dalton on the application of his attorney, C. W. Baker. The application was necessitated by the action of the House Committee in demanding the poll-book of Precinct A, Fourth Ward. Mr. Baker stated that his client, Mr. Dalton, was perfectly willing to produce the returns of that precinct, but was unable to do so while they were in the possession of the Senate Committee of Investigation, who refuse to deliver them up to him until they have concluded their work. Judge Robertson permitted Mr. Dalton to go on his own recognizance to appear for a hearing next Wednesday, and fixed the bond at $500.

Insane from Starvation.

ERIE, PA., Feb. 25.—A most distressing case of starvation was discovered here at an early hour this morning. Fred Saunders, wife and two children came here from Cleveland a month ago, and he being unable to find employment, and being without means, was sorely distressed. For several days he refused to eat anything, giving his share of food to his wife and two famishing children. His hunger and distress overcame him this morning and he was found a raving maniac, tearing the hair out of his head and attempting to kill himself. The case has excited the profound sympathies of every one.

A Jail Delivery from a Steel Cage.

SENECA, KAN., Feb. 25.—Three prisoners broke out of the Nemaha County jail last night. A reward of $500 is offered for their recapture and return to the sheriff. The jail is a patent steel cage, and was considered absolutely safe, but the prisoners drilled the rivets holding the cage door, and then cut through the brick wall inclosing the cage.

Cut in Two by a Saw.

PIEDMONT, MO., Feb. 25.—Moses Ferry, head sawyer for the Penn Lumber Company, was killed at their mills this morning. He was accidentally thrown before one of the large circular saws and his body was cut in two.

Judge Mitchell Drops Dead.

DES MOINES, IA., Feb. 25.—Judge James L. Mitchell, of Nebraska, while addressing the convention of early Iowa law-makers, in this city, this afternoon, dropped dead on the floor of the opera-house. He was just concluding his speech with the sentence, "I love the old soldiers of Iowa," when he fell to the floor in an apoplectic faint, dying immediately.

Letters of Mahomet.

VIENNA, Feb. 25.—Experts declare that there are autograph letters of Mahomet among the papyri acquired in Egypt by Archduke Rainer.

COMES IN LIKE A LION.

Travel Delayed in Maine by Three Feet of Snow.

Mercury Twenty Degrees Below Zero, With High Winds, in New Hampshire.

CALAIS, ME., March 1.—Aroostook County is snowed under fully three feet on the level. Trains are blockaded in all directions. Provisions have been forwarded by men on snow-shoes, and everything is being made to make passengers comfortable. Zero weather, with a strong northerly wind prevails. No Western mail has arrived since Friday night.

HOULTON, ME., March 1.—This section is experiencing the worst snow-storm known for twenty-five years. It has stormed continuously for four days. The roads are impassable and trains have been canceled.

DOVER, N. H., March 1.—The surrounding towns this morning reported the mercury as ranging from ten to twenty degrees below zero, and that a high wind was prevailing.

ST. JOHN'S, N. B., March 1.—This city is blockaded by snow. Since Friday night no trains or mails from the West have reached here.

THE STAR OF HEAVEN.

The Man Who Establishes a New Order Makes a Good Thing of It.

WARRENSBURG, MO., March 1.—Charles H. Smith who was arrested here on last Friday night, had succeeded, by a well devised swindling scheme, in defrauding the inhabitants of this and adjoining counties to the amount of $20,000. His plan was as follows: He pretended to have been specially ordained by God to form a new secret order, from which was to grow a new and the only true religion. Accordingly he began establishing the Order of the Star of Heaven. He would grant a charter to any six persons who applied for it, provided each paid into the common funds twenty-five dollars. Charter members pledged themselves not to take more than six more members into a Lodge, thus allowing only twelve members of a lodge. Then he had prophetic visions in which great avenues of wealth were opened up to him. On the basis of these visions he induced his dupes to mortgage their farms to the order, and thus it became a sort of loan association. The secretary had charge of the notes, deeds and mortgages of the lodge, which he turned over to the treasurer, who converted them into cash. Smith was financial agent of all the lodges, and here is where the swindle is. When the lodge was organized the first duty of the financial agent was to purchase land near some town, divide it into town lots, which were purchased by members of the lodge from the financial agent, as follows: A member paid $50 for a lot—one-third cash and a note for the balance, bearing ten per cent. interest, and gave a mortgage on the lot. He then got $50 of the treasurer and gave it and his note for $100 to the financial agent, and gave the treasurer a receipt for $50. The agent returned the $50 to the treasurer and had the note for $100. In this way each member got a lot and the agent many notes of from $100 to $500 each. The notes were good. The agent sold them and got rich in this manner. His victims are numbered by the hundreds.

Exciting Experience with Burglars.

WHEATON, ILL., March 1.—Two burglars entered the residence of L. L. Hyatt at an early hour Sunday morning. One of them held a revolver to Mr. Hyatt's head, while the other ransacked the house. After they left Hyatt arose, got together a posse of neighbors and started in pursuit. The burglars were surprised while eating breakfast at Turner Junction. One of the posse presented his gun and ask them to throw up their hands, which they did, but suddenly one of them dashed out of the door, followed by H. D. Compton, who filled his back with bird shot, which brought him down. He got up and ran for about two miles, but was finally chased into a barn. Two of the party entered and called upon him to surrender. He attacked them and tried to get away the revolver carried by Charles Mack. In the struggle it went off, the ball hitting the burglar between the eyes, but not killing him. Both burglars were brought to Wheaton and consigned to the care of the sheriff. The wounded man will probably die.

A Church Damage Claim.

WASHINGTON, March 1.—The trustees of the Baptist Church at Crab Orchard, Ky., presented a bill to Congress for $500 damages, said to have been inflicted on the church building during its occupation by the Federal forces as a hospital. The Committee on War Claims, to whom the bill was referred, report against its passage for the reason, as stated, that there never has been any attempt to collect the claim from the Quartermaster's Department, nor is there any proof showing that there was any objection upon the part of the trustees of said church, nor is there any proof showing that said property was taken possession of, or used by authority of any commanding officer authorized to issue an order.

A Terrific Powder Explosion.

XENIA, O., March 1.—The Miami Powder Works, near this city, had another explosion, this morning, the worst thus far. A large drying-house, containing 50,000 pounds of powder, and three men, who were at work in the building, were blown to atoms. The force of the explosion was most powerful and terrible. Buildings a mile away were wrecked. The concussion was felt for a distance of sixty miles, and many mistook it for an earthquake. A small portion of the body of one of the men was picked up two miles from the scene of the explosion. The report of the explosion was heard a hundred miles away. In Xenia every building was shaken, and much window glass broken.

Bad News for Buckeye Farmers.

COLUMBUS, O., March 1.—Secretary Chamberlain, of the State Board of Agriculture, says that the cold spell of the week just passed has been very damaging to wheat and the outlook is now very poor. Two or three weeks ago the outlook was for a more than average crop. Thursday night, however, the ground, being full of water, froze tight in two hours, probably throwing the roots of the wheat out of the earth and killing the plants.

Those Newark Dogs Not Mad.

NEW YORK, March 1.—The seven dogs which were bitten by the dog that bit the children sent from Newark to Paris for treatment by Pasteur, and which have been in quarantine ever since, will be released to-morrow, as no symptoms of rabies have been developed.

—Mr. Bonner's Maud S., as an admirer tells, stands in her box as modestly as if she was not the wonder of the world. Her disposition, too, unlike most fast horses, is perfect. Gentle and playful as a kitten, and affectionate as a dog, she is beloved of more men than any woman in the world. When her glossy neck is stroked she rubs her pretty face against your sleeve and acknowledges the attention with gratitude.—N. Y. Tribune.

—Almost every mother would cheerfully face death to save her children, but not one in a thousand could display the Spartan endurance of Mrs. Wheeler, of Dakota, who upheld a flaming can of gasoline until her arm was roasted to the bone, and by this heroic sacrifice saved her two children, who were playing on the floor.—Chicago Standard.

—An elderly gentleman is seen to tread on a piece of orange peel and come heavily down on what may be politely called the large of his back. To him, polite stranger, raising his hat: "Excuse me, sir; would you mind doing that again? My friend didn't see it."—N. Y. Telegram.

AN IMPORTANT CASE.

Testing the Power of an Ecclesiastic to Annul a Christian Marriage.

MONTREAL, Feb. 28.—Last December Elizabeth Globensky, daughter of a rich property owner, was married to her cousin, Daniel Wilson, by Rev. Dr. Doudet, a Presbyterian preacher. The parties were Catholics, but of full age, and the registrar issued them a license. A Catholic priest refused to marry them, as the parents of the lady, who is an heiress, objected to the union. Mg'r Fabre, Roman Catholic Bishop of Montreal, was appealed to by the mother of the bride to declare the marriage null and void, which his lordship did, and the Archbishop of Quebec confirmed the Bishop's action. The case has occupied the attention of the Superior Court here for some days. Counsel for the mother laid down as an indisputable proposition, that as the parties had not abandoned their religion, they were subject to laws to which the State had extended, as a protection, its sanction. Counsel for the husband maintained that while England had conceded religious liberty to the Roman Catholics of Canada, it could not be inferred therefrom that it had divested the Protestant Church of her right to celebrate the marriages of all Christians; also that the decrees of the Council of Trent, on which the Bishops had based their decisions, were never promulgated in Canada. Moreover the judgment rendered by the Privy Council in London in the celebrated Guibord case clearly showed the absolute nullity of ecclesiastical decrees of that kind. The case was taken under consideration by the court, and the judgment is eagerly looked for to settle the point that has been raised for the first time.

TERRIFYING SIGHT.

A Circus Elephant on a Rampage at Indianapolis.

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 28.—"Hunkey," an elephant belonging to the menagerie of John B. Doris, the showman, became unmanageable to-day while her trainer was endeavoring to teach her the see-saw trick, and, after exciting all the other animals by her roaring until there was terrible discord of noise, ran headlong against the side of the building, bursting out several panels, and through the opening she made her escape. The infuriated beast did considerable destruction about the Exposition grounds, where the winter quarters of the show are located, and forced an opening through the high fence surrounding the grounds in the same manner that she had escaped from the building. The next thing she came in contact with was a barbed-wire fence, on which she lacerated her trunk and breast in a frightful manner. Her keeper overtook her here, and, in trying to force her back to the grounds, sunk a spear in her ear. It broke off, the head of the instrument remaining buried in the flesh. She leaped over the barbed wire, tearing several long, ugly gashes in doing so. After reaching Fall creek, a mile distant, she gave vent to her rage by demolishing a small bridge over the stream. She was prevented from coming toward the city, and after two hours of terrifying conduct she voluntarily returned to her quarters again, forcing her way through the fence and bursting out another opening in the building, where she quietly submitted to being chained.

SAM JONES AT CHICAGO.

He Produces a Good Impression on His First Audience of Three Thousand People.

CHICAGO, Feb. 28.—Sam Jones' four weeks' revival season opened here to-day at the Tabernacle erected for Moody's use. Notwithstanding the inclement weather the church was filled before the time for services to begin, full three thousand persons being present. The revivalist's appearance and manner was such as to put him on a good footing with the congregation from the start. He prefaced his sermon by a plea for free and easy good fellowship, and his own attitude was that of a man in his own home, talking to a friend. The sermon was an earnest one, preached from the text: "Let your light so shine," etc., and appeared to impress the audience deeply.

Female Type-Setters.

BOSTON, MASS., Feb. 27.—A six days' type-setting contest, one hour and twenty minutes daily, between female compositors, closed to-night. The final score was: Miss Kauni, 24,950 ems; Miss Davis, 24,650 ems; Miss Francis, 24,475 ems; Miss Hammond, 15,825 ems. The prizes were a gold watch to Miss Kauni, a silver watch and chain to Miss Davis, pearl-mounted opera-glasses to Miss Francis, and $20 in cash to Miss Hammond. Three of the ladies beat the best record made in a similar contest last week between male compositors from the leading newspaper offices.

Pan Electric Investigation Committee.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—Speaker Carlisle intends appointing the committee of nine members of the House, under the Hanback resolution, to investigate the Pan Electric Telephone affair, on Tuesday next. No indication has yet been given as to who will compose the committee or when the work of investigation will be begun, but it is believed that some of the oldest and most experienced members will be selected and that there will be an organization for and a beginning of the investigation next week.

The Police Commissioners Ousted.

COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 28.—The Ohio Supreme Court has rendered a judgement of ouster in the quo warranto cases against the Cincinnati police Commission, but refused to oust Superintendent Hudson, who was elected for one year. The action of Governor Foraker in removing the Commissioners is thus sustained. In the Hudson case the decision was unanimous, but in the Commissioners' case Follett dissented.

Workmen Discharged.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Feb. 28.—Between three hundred and four hundred men were summarily discharged by the Champion Malleable Iron Company, of this city, for signing a petition asking for an increase of ten per cent. in wages.

Arrested for the Aldridge Outrage.

WINDSOR, ILL., Feb. 28.—Wm. Price, a neighbor of the Aldridge family, was arrested this afternoon, charged with being the fiend who tortured Miss Georgie Aldridge and hung her to a tree until she was nearly dead. Suspicion has been directed against Price from the first. It is alleged that the evidence against him is strong, but the prosecution refuse to divulge any facts in advance of the preliminary examination.

Date Fixed for a Double Execution.

BATON ROUGE, LA., Feb. 28.—Governor McEnery has decided that the execution of Pat Ford and John Murphy shall take place on Friday, March 12.

Grave-Yard Gas.

WASHINGTON, GA., Feb. 28.—A singular death is that of Clarke Thornton, of this place, which resulted from poisonous gas inhaled, which seeped through into a grave he was digging by the side of another. The other men at work with him left the grave as soon as they detected the gas, but Thornton, thinking there was no danger in it, remained and died.

Americans Crowding into Mexico.

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 28.—The hotels here are crowded with American and English tourists. Several Americans interested in a proposed hotel on the American plan are also here.

Killed by the Electric Light Current.

EVANSVILLE, IND., Feb. 28.—About 7 o'clock this evening, as Hugh Oliver, aged 23, an employe of the Evansville Electric Light Company, while at work on the dynamo, accidentally placed both his hands in connection with the electric current and the full strength of the 8,000-candle power dynamo passed through his body, killing him instantly.

A Queer Fancy.

NEW YORK, Feb. 28.—Mary Jane Cleveland, teacher in an Orphans' Home at One Hundred and Tenth street, this city, has received permission from the courts to change her name so it will read Mary Grover Cleveland. She said Jane was too humdrum.

XLIXTH CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—SENATE.—The consideration of bills on the calendar was proceeded with. A joint resolution, authorizing one or more army officers to accept services under the Corean Government, was changed to the form of a bill and amended, limiting the period for such services to three years. It was laid aside for further amendment. The bill to enable National banks to change their name, location and capital by a two-thirds vote of the stockholders subject to the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, was taken up. Pending action the morning hour expired and the consideration of the educational bill was resumed.

HOUSE.—The Senate bill to quiet the titles of settlers on the DesMoines river lands, Iowa, was reported and passed. The bill to tax fractional portions of a gallon of spirits was taken up, and speeches made against it by Butterworth, and in its favor by Morrison and Worthington. Wise, of Virginia, got the floor and attempted to inject a speech in reply to Brady on Virginia politics, but he was interrupted by Morrison, who objected. The Chair finally ruled Mr. Wise out of order. He announced he would take his opportunity on Saturday next in general debate. Mr. Butterworth offered a substitute for the pending bill, but it was rejected and the original measure passed. The House at 5 p. m. adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—SENATE.—Executive communications were received and bills reported from committees. Among the latter was one, which was passed, to relieve the political disabilities of Robert H. Anderson, of Georgia. The bill fixing a day for the meeting of the Presidential Electors was ordered printed and placed on the calendar. The committee reported the bill authorizing a bridge across the Arthur Hill for the B. & O., to New York. The Senate recalled a resolution, agreed to yesterday, providing for flowers for the Pension Building. Bills were introduced for the inspection of meats for exportation, prohibiting the adulteration of food and drinks, and authorizing retaliatory measures in case of unjust discrimination, by proclamation of the President, and also an inter-State commerce bill. Consideration of the bill for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians was resumed, and the bill passed.

HOUSE.—A memorial of 122 New York savings banks, asking for the repeal of the Bland silver law, was presented. The act incorporating the Eads Ship Railway Company was reported from the Commerce Committee. The Committee on Military Affairs reported the Military Academy Appropriation bill. The Post-office Committee reported the Post-office Appropriation bill. The Public Lands Committee reported a bill to forfeit the grant of the Outonagon and Wisconsin railroad. The Delaware and Maryland free ship canal bill was reported from the Committee on Railways and canals. The Hennepin Canal bill was taken up, Mr. Murphy, of Iowa, concluding his speech in its favor. Mr. Powell, of Illinois, followed, but the morning hour having expired, the pension appropriation bill was taken up. Mr. Townsend, of Illinois, explained its provisions. Mr. Henderson, of Iowa, made a strong political speech. He provoked a lively debate, and prevented action upon the bill.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—SENATE.—Mr Mitchell delivered a speech on the bill for the abrogation of all treaties permitting the immigration of Chinese to the United States. Mr. Hale moved to go into executive session. On the statement of Mr. Beck that the Democrats were not ready to consider the nominations of the Maine Collectors, Mr. Hale withdrew the motion, giving notice that he would renew it on Monday. The educational bill was then taken up. At 4:30 p. m. the Senate went into executive session and at 5:15 p. m. adjourned to Monday next.

HOUSE.—Mr. Morrison reported resolutions directing an inquiry into the Pan-Electric Telephone matter, which after a brief but exciting debate was adopted. The Committee on Accounts reported a resolution empowering the Post-office Committee to ascertain whether additional legislation is necessary to prevent telegraphic monopoly. Power to send for persons and papers was also granted, and an appropriation of $1,500 authorized. The immediate deficiency bill was reported. The committees were called for reports of a private character, after which the House went to the private calendar. Several private bills were passed. At 4:30 p. m. a recess was taken until 7:30, the evening session being for the consideration of pension bills.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—Immediately upon assembling the House, under a previous order, went into committee of the whole (Mr. Crisp (Ga.) in the chair) for general debate on the state of the Union. Mr. Candler (Ga.) submitted an argument against the suspension of silver coinage and contended that there was no sound basis for the prediction made by the "gold bugs" that the continued coinage of silver would have the effect of driving gold out of the country. Mr. Lanham (Tex.) spoke in support of a bill previously introduced by him to disapprove an act of the Legislature of New Mexico preventing the introduction of diseased cattle into the Territory, arguing that it was unconstitutional—that it interfered with inter-state commerce. Mr. Jones (Tex.) advocated the free coinage of silver and earnestly opposed the proposition to suspend the operation of the Bland act. Mr. Wolford (Ky.) spoke in support of the Mexican pension bill, introduced by him, and thought that it should not be antagonized because it would include Jefferson Davis in its provisions. Mr. Reagan (Tex.) suggested that Jefferson Davis had once written a letter, asking that his name be excepted from the provisions of a Mexican pension bill if its insertion would endanger the passage of the bill. Mr. Wolford replied that that noble sentiment of Jefferson Davis made him [Mr. Wolford] only more desirous of including him in the provisions of the bill.

WASHINGTON, March 1.—SENATE.—The Chair presented a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting the suspended account of officials. The minority report of the Judiciary Committee was submitted on the case of the District Attorney for the Southern District of Alabama. The Committee on Privileges and Elections, at the request of Mr. Hoar, was discharged from further consideration of the Riddleberger resolution, and the Pugh substitute, relating to the right of the Senate to ask for the President's reasons for removals, the Judiciary Committee having already made reports. Mr. Plumb gave notice of an amendment to prohibit roads effected by the inter-State commerce bill granting passes to legislators or Government officials. A bill was introduced to legalize the incorporation of National trades unions. At 1:30 p. m. the Senate went into executive session and considered the nominations of Collector Chase, of Portland, and Pillsbury, of Boston. The doors were reopened to hear the President's message giving his reasons for not furnishing the Senate with private papers. A resolution by Harris to lay the message on the table was opposed by Edmunds, and a motion to print it was supplemented by another motion to refer it to the Judiciary Committee. By a party vote—32 to 27—the message was first referred to the Judiciary Committee, and then ordered printed. The Senate again went into executive session, and at 5:35 p. m. adjourned. The nominations of Chase and Pillsbury were rejected.

HOUSE.—The Speaker announced the appointment of LeFevre, of Ohio, as a consulting Trustee of the Reform School of the District of Columbia. An article charging that Captain Eads had been upon the floor of the House in violation of the rules was read. A resolution of inquiry was proposed with an amendment relating to the violation of the rule prohibiting smoking. Both were laid on the table. Under the call of States a number of bills were introduced. A resolution was offered by Springer, of Illinois, directing an investigation of the expenditure in the Pension Office under the present and previous administration; also the charges of partisan management. A motion to suspend the rules and pass the Mexican pension bill caused considerable discussion and the House finally adjourned without action at 5:30 p. m.

Proceedings of the Legislature.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 20.—SENATE.—The committee appointed to investigate charges of immorality against Senator Boles reported that "after diligent search and investigation and a full hearing of all the facts and testimony in regard to said charges your committee are fully satisfied that the said statements are without any foundation in fact; that the conduct of Senator Boles has been most exemplary during the period referred to in said articles." Bills Passed: Authorizing the adjutant-general to loan Post No. 39, G. A. R., at Augusta, Ky., certain guns, etc. etc. To prohibit sale of all intoxicating liquors in Graves County. Requiring officers of all charitable institutions in Louisville to give bond for the faithful performance of their duties; to establish a system of common schools in the town of Dixie, Henderson County; amending article 6, chapter 62, of General Statutes; to amend section 1, article 16, chapter 41 of General Statutes.

HOUSE.—Fifty-one new bills were introduced in the House this morning, but none of the old ones were passed. An attempt was made to repeal rule No. 40 of the House, which prohibits the suspension of the rules to pass a bill, but the matter was postponed. The bill to abolish the office of Public Printer was made a special order for next Tuesday. Adjourned until the 23d.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 23.—SENATE.—Mr. Sparks, the Senator from Jessamine County, offered a resolution, asking the Kentucky Congressmen to oppose any proposed alteration in the tariff laws on the subject of hemp, and any of the goods manufactured from that article. Out of this resolution grew a debate which took in the entire range of the tariff. The majority of the Senators were in favor of the resolution. Some of them said they were in favor of a reduction of the tariff, but they desired it to be done on a proportional basis. The resolution was finally adopted by a vote of 27 to 4. Mr. Hayes moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the Senate last Friday refused to extend the session beyond the constitutional limit. The motion to reconsider was carried by a vote of 21 to 11. Mr. Hays then moved to make the motion to prolong a special order for to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock, and it was adopted. Mr. Simon's bill to make a person convicted of a felony incompetent to vote, or serve on a jury, was called up. Mr. Simon stated that honest people objected to felons having the privileges of citizenship and he thought they should be deprived of them. The bill was passed. It provides that persons who have been convicted of a felony in another State and emigrate to Kentucky shall be deprived of citizenship here.

HOUSE.—The House passed bills to incorporate the Mount Freedom and Jessamine County Turnpike Company; to incorporate the Homestead Building Association; to amend the Boone County road law; to fix and change the time for holding the regular term of the Bath Court of Common Pleas; to amend an act entitled an act to arrange the business of the Union Circuit Court; to incorporate the Masonic Temple Association of Newport; to incorporate the Allensville Seminary; to incorporate the Snead & Co. Ironworks; to prohibit the sale of liquor within one mile of Green River Baptist Church, in Ohio County; to incorporate the town of Slaughterville in Webster County; to incorporate the Journeyman House Painters' Association of Louisville; to incorporate the Limestone Building Association of Maysville, and about one hundred other measures.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 24.—SENATE.—The House resolution extending the session beyond the constitutional limit was passed by a bare majority, the vote being 26 to 10—26 being necessary to pass it. The following bills were passed: To regulate the building of turnpike roads in Nelson County. House bill amending the charter of the city of Covington, authorizing the city to issue bonds to pay the school debt. To incorporate the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Lexington. Authorizing the city of Newport to build a bridge between Covington and Newport. The bill continuing the Superior Court till 1890 then came up, and all amendments were voted down, and upon the passage of the bill the vote stood yeas 21, nays 13, and a motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

HOUSE.—The Senate Penitentiary bill came up in the House this morning and took up the principal part of the session, and finally passed by a vote of 54 to 35. The bill is a compromise measure, and gives Mr. South back salary to the amount of $2,750, and he goes out of office in ten days after the bill is signed by the Governor. The following bills passed: To amend the charter of the town of Harrodsburg. To incorporate the Bowling Green and Northern Railroad Company. Empowering the city of Bowling Green to erect and maintain a system of electric lights, and to issue bonds for said purpose. For the benefit of Hardin County, and to dispose of a surplus in the hands of the Sinking Fund Commissioners.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 25.—SENATE.—A number of local measures were attended to. Governor Knott's message vetoing the Pleuro-pneumonia bill was read. An effort will be made to pass it over the veto. The landlord and tenant bill was referred to the Committee on General Statutes. The pauper idiot bill was called up, but it was soon referred to the Committee on General Statutes, and the Senate adjourned. Now that the session has been indefinitely extended, many of the members give it as their opinion that the Legislature will be here until the 10th of May.

HOUSE.—Mr. Letterle called up the bill allowing pupils between the age of twenty and forty years to attend the night schools of Louisville, without charge. Mr. Owens offered an amendment that the pupils admitted to the night schools over twenty years of age should not be counted among the school children of the State, and no pro rata should be paid on them out of the public school funds. Amendment accepted and bill passed. The Senate bill to continue the Superior Court was taken up, and, on motion, was refered to the Committee on Court of Appeals and Superior Court, with leave to report at any time.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 26.—SENATE.—The following bill was introduced by Mr. Berry: Whereas, The spirit of our civilization is more and more inclined to recognize the rights of those who earn their bread in the sweat of their brows, and too often the iron hand of capital is oppressive to labor; therefore, be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky: Section 1. That eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen and mechanics who may be employed by or on behalf of the Government of the State of Kentucky. Section 2. This act shall take effect from and after its passage. Bills passed: Authorizing Pike County to issue bonds to build a Court-house and other buildings. House amendment to bill establishing night schools in certain cities in this State. House bill to empower the jailor of Campbell County to appoint a deputy. The Judiciary Committee reported that the Pleuro-Pneumonia bill should pass, the opinion of the Governor to the contrary notwithstanding, and the Senate took the same view of it, and passed it over the Governor's veto by a vote of 20 to 15. Incorporating the Ohio, Kentucky and Virginia Railroad Company. Bill creating the Nineteenth Judicial District.

HOUSE.—Bills passed: To empower the County Court of Bath County to subscribe to the capital stock of turnpike roads; to amend an act to establish the County of Knott; to amend an act entitled an act amending the charter of the District of Highlands, in Campbell County; to amend an act to apportion the State into eleven Congressional Districts, putting Knott County in the Tenth District; to empower the Bath County Court to levy an ad valorem tax for county purposes; to regulate the fees paid pro tem. commonwealth attorneys. The bill provides that no such attorney shall be appointed except when the regular attorney is absent, and his fees shall not exceed $7 per day; that in misdemeanor cases the county attorney shall serve and in felony cases he may appoint an assistant. The bill to continue the superior court was reported favorably by the committee, but a vote was not reached on it to-day.

A HOME PICTURE.

A Domestic Sketch of "Hancock, the Superb," by One Who Knew Him.

Walking up from the little dock at Governor's island, past the blue-coated sentry pacing up and down in front of the pay department offices, down the clean asphalt walk shaded by many trees, one comes to a row of comfortable, old-fashioned frame houses—officers' quarters. The first of this—a big double house with a broad gallery in front like a Southern house—is the commanding officers' quarters, and in this house General Hancock lived for fifteen years and died. Enter. Plenty of space for light and air. A wide hall runs from end to end, and turning to the right there are two big old-fashioned drawing-rooms. Opposite the entrance to the first hangs on the wall a beautiful full-length portrait of a young girl of fourteen or fifteen. Before it stands always a vase of flowers. This is the portrait of "Ada, sole daughter of his house and heart"—the daughter forever loved and lamented, who died in 1875. How strange must look that house without General Hancock's soldierly figure moving about—always meeting guests at the door and escorting them with old-time courtesy to his own gate—for General Hancock was the soul of hospitality. Did you ever see him salute a private soldier? Then you have missed seeing the finest act of courtesy a man could perform—for he returned the salute of a drummer-boy as punctiliously as he did that of a General of the army.

That hospitable door will open for him no more—his place is henceforth on "Fame's eternal camping ground." Let those who knew him tell of him in his daily walk, his everyday life.

All things small and weak loved General Hancock. The children on Governor's island adored him. They swarmed over his house, and when Mrs. Hancock protested mildly against their being admitted to romp in the drawing-rooms General Hancock took it so much to heart that she yielded. It was in vain that the officers' wives on the island forbade their children to go so often to the Hancock house, thinking they might be troublesome. They would go and stand before the gate, pressing their little wistful faces against the iron railing until they caught sight of General Hancock. He would have the whole gang inside the gate in a minute. "If your mothers say any thing to you," he would say, "just tell them that I am Major General Hancock, and I won't allow my authority to be disputed here." Of course the youngsters were only too delighted to take this view of the matter. As a batch of the urchins under ten years old agreed once respecting some new domestic ordinance: "Our mammas better not try that. We're solid with General Hancock and he won't let em." General Hancock's idols were his three grandchildren, George, Myra and Ada, and when he was prepared for burial some of their toys and playthings were found upon his bed of death, where they had left them. They were the children of his son, Russell Hancock, now dead, and their home was ostensibly in Mississippi, but General and Mrs. Hancock would send for them early in May and keep them until after Christmas every year. General Hancock's grandson, who was his namesake, died the very day he was nominated for president in 1880. Ada is a gentle "mother-child", very like Mrs. Hancock in her quiet, sensible ways. Myra, named after Mrs. Hancock, is General Hancock all over, and was the dearest to her grandfather's heart. She is a delicate, spirituelle child, with beautiful features and the softest manner—but a regular Trojan. She is not afraid of any thing on the face of the earth, and could stand an enfilading fire as well as General Hancock himself. The General delighted in her prowess and her reputation as a a warrior. She could vanquish a boy twice her size in single combat, and had terrorized every youngster on the island into a state of abject submission. The fact is, General Hancock had established a unique state of things among his little friends on the island. The boys had their orders never to dispute with the girls about any thing, and the slightest infringement of this brought out a terrible threat of the guard house for the offender, so the boys were completely cowed by the girls.

General Hancock was a man of strong domestic affections, and he never got over his daughter's death. A singular circumstance occurred at the time he lost his son, Russell Hancock. On the 26th of December, 1884, his daughter-in-law and her three children started to meet Russell Hancock, who was at that moment dying in St. Louis, although neither they nor General Hancock knew any thing of his illness. After putting his daughter-in-law on the train at New York he returned to Governor's island and seemed depressed all day. That night he went to his room but his gloomy feelings prevented him from sleeping. He told Mrs. Hancock that he felt as if some calamity were hanging over him. She told him it was the going away of the children that made him so unhappy. He insisted it was not. As the night wore on he became so uneasy that he arose, dressed himself, and went down stairs, prepared, as he afterward said, to hear terrible news. At six o'clock in the morning he saw a messenger coming up the path to his house, and opening the door received the dispatch telling him of his son's sudden death.

General Hancock had more sources of grief than his domestic losses, and for years he was a very unhappy man. He never got over his defeat of 1880. It is not meant that he was soured by it—no word of complaint ever was heard from his lips—but it broke his heart. He was a man of intense ambition—an ambition unmixed with any thing ignoble—and he was gratified beyond measure at the method of his nomination. He thought at eleven o'clock in the night of the election of 1880 that he was President of the United States. He went to bed and to sleep, but Mrs. Hancock staid up. At two o'clock she woke him. "Garfield is elected," she said. General Hancock said not a word. He maintained this reticence to the end. He had a hope for 1884, but when his name was not mentioned in the convention he laid aside his aspirations forever.

The affection and admiration he aroused in Southern people peculiarly touched both him and Mrs. Hancock. In New Orleans after his celebrated "order No. 40," he could not go to the opera without awakening a storm of applause which interrupted the performance for several minutes. The French opera boxes there are arranged with a movable lattice, which when it is down, prevents the audience from seeing into the box although the occupants of the box can see and hear perfectly well. He would have the lattice put down and slip into his box as quietly as possible, but the people invariably found him out, and would cheer him to the echo until he would be compelled to show himself. He was so modest about this that Mrs. Hancock said she could scarcely get him to the opera with her, so much afraid was he that it looked like a bid for popularity.

The Democrats in Congress have had a very serious idea for a long time to have the grade of General of the army re-established, and to put General Hancock in the place. Besides the tribute to him, it would put Lieutenant-General Sheridan's nose out of joint, and the Southern Democrats can not forget the savagery of Sheridan's warfare. They said it would make an example of the way the better sense of the republic regarded the difference between civilized and uncivilized warfare. Not one word, however, did they ever get out of General Hancock on the subject. Half the Democratic members of Congress had been his electors, but any thing like scheming was foreign to General Hancock's nature.

On the Sunday night a week before his death, when his mortal illness was already upon him, an officer going away on sick leave called to tell him good-bye. General Hancock treated his illness lightly, but the officer said: "General, you look to me like a sicker man than I am." On leaving General Hancock said: "You seem to be a little hoarse; here." He went to a drawer and got out a fine, white muffler. "But I don't like to rob you of this," said the officer. "Keep it; keep it," replied General Hancock, in his hearty way, as, with his own hands, he tied it around the officer's throat and fastened it securely. This little thoughtful act was typical of the man. As generous as the day is long, he forgot himself for his friend—and this he had been doing, consistently, all the days of his life.—Chicago News.

THAT "SAVINGS" BANK.

How the Republicans Robbed the Colored People—Present Condition of Their "Institution."

The act of February 21, 1881, repealed the law under which three commissioners were appointed to settle the affairs of the Freedman's Savings Bank, and made the Comptroller of the Currency a single commissioner, with a salary of one thousand dollars a year, in addition to his regular pay, for performing that service. Eleven years have now been consumed in that business. The whole cost of this protracted "settlement" has fallen upon the assets of the poor depositors whose hard earnings were stolen by a ring of Republican thieves.

By the act above cited all claims not presented within six months after its passage, and all dividends not called for within five years, were barred, and their amounts were to go to the benefits of other depositors. In 1883, at the expiration of this limitation, the doors were reopened under certain restrictions.

The last report of the commissioner shows that the receipts during the year were $9,379.08, and the disbursements $9,001, exclusive of $1,500 deposited as security for costs in causes before the Supreme Court of the United States. Of this latter sum there was paid for dividends $1,405.19; and for barred claims under the act of 1883, $3,931.05, or a total of $5,336.24.

The remainder of $3,664.76 was paid for salaries, attorneys' fees, commissions and a multitude of little expenses. That is to say, more than a third of the whole disbursements went into the maws of leeches that are sucking the few remaining drops of blood in this shameful concern.

The record is revolting, but it is consistent with the whole legislation on the subject. After the ignorant depositors had been robbed by Republican laws, which took away their original security, Congress imposed on them three commissioners with $3,000 a year each, and a costly machinery of attorneys, clerks and the like, whereby a large portion of the assets were eaten up during seven years of this scandalous burden.

When public opinion revolted at that outrage, then the law was changed to the present form, which, on a most limited scale, continues the imposition by like methods. And it is coolly proposed by the commissioner that Congress shall make good the stolen deficiency by an appropriation of the people's money. This recommendation is made after Republican Administrations allowed the thieves to escape without an attempt at punishment, and, indeed, elevated some of them to prominent places in the Government.

Thousands of these deluded colored people either died without having received a dividend or disappeared without leaving a trace behind them. It is high time the business was wound up, and a clerk of one of the departments should be assigned to that small task without any compensation or charge against the little fund that still remains to be distributed. And Congress should at once repeal the act allowing the Comptroller of the Currency an additional thousand to his salary for signing his name at the expense of these victims of rascality.—N. Y. Sun.

—There is no law of the land to prevent the Senate from declaring what are "the rights" of that corporation in relation to papers, documents or information in the possession of the Executive; but there is also no law of the land to prevent the Executive from declaring what are the rights of that part of the constitution in relation to the same. If the declarations of the two disagree, who shall decide? Only one answer is possible. The Executive must decide for itself, but not for the Senate, and the Senate must decide for itself, but not for the Executive. Neither has power to prescribe, define or declare the prerogatives, duties or faculties of the other. When, therefore, Senators get into a controversy with the President, respecting the prerogatives or duties of the latter, which do they think will win?—Chicago Times.

—President Cleveland's use of the appointing power is not entirely consistent with his pledges previous to his election, but it has been more nearly in harmony with sound principles of public administration than was that of any Executive who preceded him within fifty years. "Upon the fair and honest exercise of this power," says Judge Story, in his commentary on the constitution, "must in a great measure depend the vigor, the public virtue and even the safety, of the Government.—Boston Budget.

—The Senate will make a great mistake if it insists upon its own privilege of secrecy while demanding the abrogation of the President's.—Providence Journal.

THE State will only allow $35 per year for pauper idiots, and if more is required the counties in which they live will have to supply the deficiency.

THERE is an association in Paris whose object is to help drunkards home at night. If the patient is too far gone to give his address, the club cares for him until he can.

THERE is one good thing about the Legislature. When they get a good bill before them, it is generally passed. For instance, "a bill to extend the session."—Passed, 27 to 13.

Knott county, which for two years has held the anomalous position of a county at large, being without representation in Congress, has been added to the Tenth District by act of the Legislature.

GRANT county is trying to agitate a ghost story in the shape of a haunted house. Some strange and unexplainable shadows are seen flitting across the windows, are the foundations upon which it is built.

SINCE the Press of the State has been poking the Legislature, that awful body has got down to its work, and last week the Boone County road law was amended and another navigable stream was made.

THE Senate Penitentiary bill that passed the House, gives Mr. Smith $2,750, and he goes out of office in ten days after the bill is signed by the Governor. That is big money to get a man out of office. We would be willing to take half as much and never get in the office.

QUIETLY, without display or noise a great revival of religion is progressing in Louisville. It may be said to have begun with the remarkable series of meetings held at Walnut-street Baptist church by Rev. F. P. Hale some weeks since, and has extended until it embraces nearly all the Protestant churches in the city.

A LARGE number of bills prohibiting the sale of spirituous, vinous or malt liquors have been introduced in the General Assembly. Thus every two years a large area of territory is added to that already covered by local option laws. The State must, as a matter of course, eventually become a prohibition State, under the operation of the above prohibitory class of legislation.—Capital.

THE following are the internal revenue receipts for the Sixth Collection District of Kentucky for the month of February, 1886: List, $67,-95; beer, $4,125 50; spirits, $261,-992 70; cigars, $1,519 20; tobacco, $24,743 02; special tax, $150 25, total, $292,589 62. Total amount collected by Geo. H. Davison, Collector, to date, $2,531,597 86.

THE House Committee on Post-offices and Post-roads in Congress have completed the Post-office Appropriation Bill, and it will be reported to the House. The bill appropriates for the postal service, during the fiscal year, the sum of $54,-326,588, an increase of $625,598 over the appropriation for the present fiscal year, and a decrease of $659,579 as compared with the department's estimates. The estimated revenue for the next fiscal year is 147,142,252 and the estimated deficiency (indefinite) is $7,443,914.

THE Washington correspondent of the Louisville Commercial, says:

"There is a well defined impression here that Hon. Thos. L. Jones, who came so near being the present Governor of Kentucky, is on the verge of good luck. It is impossible to penetrate the mysteries of Secretary Bayard's department, but it is believed that the President will shortly announce Col. Jones as the American Minister to the Austrian Court. Col. Jones is averse to again becoming a candidate for office in Kentucky, but he would be pleased with a place of distinction in the diplomatic service, and there has come up to Washington a very earnest popular expression in his behalf from many parts of Kentucky. He evidently has a stronghold upon the affections of the people in the interior of the State, and the President is impressed with the conviction that the appointment of him would give wide-spread satisfaction. He has large wealth and possesses personal accomplishments that would enable him to represent the country most creditably abroad.

THE Louisville Courier-Journal says: "It is said that there are two crimes which carry their expiation with them: adultery and murder. The idea is that, whether detected or not, these particular infractions of the laws alike of God and man embrace within themselves the seeds of ultimate punishment. They are self-tormenting. They prey upon the mind. They beat against the heart. They burrow beneath the surface, and create internal conditions of remorse and regret, which far exceeds any mere statutory penalties. Any yet, paradoxical as it may seem, no offenses in the calender are committed with so little preparation and reflection. The burglar, the forger and the incendiary usually go about their work in a prudent, business-like way. Their methods are eminently cautions and crafty. They provide their implements, arrange their plan of escape and exercise a certain discrimination in selecting their opportunity. Not so in cases of adultry and murder, which, when brought to light, show a radical disregard of every principle of safety, sagacity and discretion. Each day furnishes examples in proof of this."

Some days ago a bill was introduced in the Legislature to appropriate $3,000 for the benefit of the Kentucky exhibit at New Orleans. The bill still hangs fire in the Legislature, and has seemingly been lost sight of. The sum asked by Commissioner Smith is a very modest one. He should have not less than $5,000. Two years ago the Legislature appropriated $12,000 far the same purpose, and every one who has visited the Exposition this year assert that the Kentucky exhibit gotten up by Commissioner Smith excels in every respect that of the former Exposition, and to get it up and arrange it must have cost more money than was expended on the Kentucky exhibit two years ago. There is no doubt but that Commissioner Smith's exhibit will result in great good to the Commonwealth, for it is perhaps the best advertisement of her resources she has ever had. Our Commissioner has manifested great activity in making Kentucky's exhibit equal to that of any other State, and the splendid results are due alone to his untiring efforts. He has expended his own means in this matter and relies on the Legislature to reimburse him. That body should give him $5,000 by all means, as this amount will both reimburse him and modestly recompense him for his worth.—Lex. Press.

A man sent 25 cents to learn how to make $50 a week at home working on a capital of $1, and received the following printed slip: "Fish for fools, as I do."—Butler Citizen.

Several years ago, while the people of West Tennessee were alarmed at the approach of yellow fever, Judge F. convened court at Bolivar. Court had been but a few days in session when the report from Memphis caused additional excitement. There were many witnesses attendant upon court, and very naturally, they importuned the Judge to permit them to go home. The business part of the community, willing to run any risk for the sake of trade, declared that the disease was not yellow fever. A number of physicians with, it soon appeared, more learning than judgment, repaired to the court room and assured the Judge that no danger of an epidemic was to be apprehended.

"The disease," said one of the medical gentlemen, "is not yellow fever but is zipuporastorp."

"You are wrong, doctor," said another physician, "for investigation proves it to be posurcuticeai."

"No" said another doctor, "you are both wrong. I admit that it is not yellow fever and that it can never become an epidemic, but is nothing more or less than an exaggerated type of costinetordigpji."

Then there arose a heated discussion in which the judge was unable to take a part. He waited patiently until the discussion cooled down, then turning to the doctors, said:

"I have been much entertained and greatly instructed by the discussion which you gentlemen have so ably conducted. I do not pretend to say what the disease is, for I am not versed in such sciences. It may be acute jehossiphot, exaggerated pollywog, inflamatory jim crow or a mild type of epluribusunum, but there's one thing I do know. It's d—d ketchin' and I'm going to adjourn this court."

Sam Jones says: "I would steal before I would sell whisky. The traffic, I know, has great money power. It requires the right kind of a man to refuse $200 rent from a saloon-keeper, and accept $50 from a dry goods merchant for his room. There are many Methodists that rent to the devil at $150 a month; and the devil's rent will soon turn to fee simple and drag them down to hell. I saw in one of the papers that last Sunday was the most orderly in Cincinnati for years. I believe in good behavior, and if I could not go to heaven would at least prefer to be a gentleman in hell."

Carlisle and Hill for the Presidency in 1888 is a good, strong team. Carlisle is the coming man for the next coming President, and Hill, of New York, will make a strong tail to the kite, through some strong Eastern man and a tariff and silver platform would carry all the Western States.—Texas Reporter.

THE report of Hon. John F. Davis, Commissioner of Agriculture, shows that Franklin county raised last year 2,363,548 pounds of tobacco, an increase of 1,063,943 over the production of the year previous. The total tobacco production of the State was 226,137,027 an increase of 71,299,-063 over 1884.

STATE NEWS.

Dr. Greenfield, who lives near Guthrie, and who is known as the champion hog raiser of the county, recently sold a hog which tipped the beam at 1,359½ pounds, net. This was undoubtedly the largest hog ever raised in this country, if not in the world. Dr. Greenfield informs us that one ham when trimmed and prepared for hanging up, weighed 125 pounds.—Clarksville Democrat.

A singular fact aptly illustrative of the defects in the system of State assessments is, that the returns for 1885 shows that the number of acres of land in the State was 344,233 less than the year before! It is said that a good deal of the land in this part of the State is rolled up ready to move, but we have heard of no actual removal of lands from the State lately. Are any pauper counties missing?—London Leader.

Press Opinions.

Up to date, it would have been better for the State if the Legislature had not assembled. Its chance now to redeem itself is to pass the Hewitt revenue bill, and adjourn on the 27th.—Hickman Courier.

The proposition to levy an ad valorum tax on all property in Kentucky is meeting much favor in the General Assembly. The State is hard up for money, is in debt and can't borrow a nickel. Obviously something must be done.—Lexington Transcript.

For a body that started out so auspiciously, the Legislature is a sad disappointment to everybody, and it ought to adjourn when its time is up and go home. It is as costly and useless an institution as ever assembled in Frankfort.—Stanford Journal.

Let the Legislature limit the right of appeal from Circuit Courts to those cases in which the amount in controversy, exclusive of interest and costs, is $100 or more, and in a few years we may dispense with one at least, of our Appellate Courts, saving thereby to the State thousand of dollars annually, and to littigants many thousands more.—Cynthiana Democrat.

The present Legislature is full of spoilsmen. This was proved by their action in the penitentiary Wardenship, when the disposition to reward a favorite, regardless of cost to the State, was so evident. The admonition from the Governor and the Auditor of an empty treasury and no further power to borrow money go unheeded, and it seems there is a fixed determination to get everything in sight and leave nothing that is nailed down.—Owensboro Messenger.

The press of Kentucky has, for years, with a strong and united voice advocated the development of the mineral resources of the State, and it has a suit against the abolition of the Geological service, and Bureau of Immigration. These departments of the State government are the main reliance for the future welfare of the State of Kentucky.—Elizabethtown Messenger.

THE
COMBINATION FENCE

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and servicable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

"Pa, does the sausage come out of his hole on Candlemas day and look 'round for its shadow, so as to make an early spring? Ma says it does." "What are you talking about?" says the papa to the little boy. "It's the ground hog that comes out of its hole, not the sausage." "Well, ain't sausage ground hog?"

J. W. Owens received one thousand five hundred sacks of corn by barge from Boone county, Ky., last Saturday morning, and it was delivered to his warehouse, by dray. This gentleman received a second barge, containing the same amount of corn, from the same place last Tuesday morning.—Aurora Independent.

We are sorry to announce the death of John C Stott, one of Petersburg's most estimable young men, and the junior member of the firm of Stott Bros. who were engaged in a thriving mercantile business. His death occurred on Tuesday of last week after a brief illness with pneumonia. Besides a young wife the deceased leaves an extensive circle of friends to mourn his death.

Mr. Richmond Reed, a veteran journalist of Louisiana, and uncle of Joe Reed, is visiting his relatives in this part of the country. It will be one half a century next June since he saw his brother William Reed, who now lives in Covington. Mr. Reed came to Cincinnati to attend the Editors Convention in Cincinnati last month, and is taking advantage of that trip to see his brother and family who thought he was numbered among the dead until recently.

Mrs. Berkshire widow of the late W. C. Berkshire and mother-in-law of A. B. Parker, of Petersburg, died on Wednesday afternoon, February 24, after a short illness of less than a week, aged 61 years and 6 months. Mrs. Berkshire was born in Virginia and came to Boone county when about 9 years of age, and has resided in Petersburg every since. She was a good Christian woman, universally known and liked as such by all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance. She leaves seven daughters to mourn her death. The funeral services were held at the Christian church, after which the remains were conveyed to their last resting place.

The Aurora, Independent of the 24th inst., says: Mr. John D. Norris, of Petersburg, Ky., was over here last Monday. He is one of the happy possessors of the trotting stallion, Jenkin's Almont, that he and his partners John Berkshire and Joe Ferris, recently went to Minnesota, to buy and bring back to this locality. Following is what the Evening News, of Hastings, Minn., Dec. 6, 1885, says of this horse: "We are glad to know that Mr. J. C. Meloy, of this city, has recently purchased of Dr. J. R. Howes, of Brainerd, Minn., and brought back to this place the stallion "Almont Boy," formerly Jenkins' Almont. The horse is looking fine, he never had even a blemish on him, and now looks better than when he left here three years ago. We are glad to see the horse brought back to our city again and hope he will be kept here next season, as we think he is one of the best stock horses in this county, or any other. He has a record made on a slow one-half mile track, of 2:33½. He also has a colt four years old, owned by J. T. Phelps, of Minneapolis, which has shown a one-half mile at a private trial (several watches being held on him) in 1:10. Several more of his colts, one and two years old, are very promising."

Last Friday night the house occupied by W. L. Riddell came near being destroyed by fire. While absent campaigning, his niece, Miss Nettie Gardner, stays with his wife at night. They retired about 9 o'clock that night, having left the fire in the grate in a safe condition. About 10 o'clock they were aroused by a wagon passing along the street, when they smelled smoke from woolen goods. They hastened down stairs to investigate, and upon opening the door to the sitting room, which is immediately below the bed room they occupied, they discovered it so full of smoke that they could not enter it. Closing the hall door they gave the alarm, which was heard by John Palmer, who happened to be on the street and in a few moments he had the town thoroughly aroused. The bucket brigade, composed of men and women, was on hand instantur almost, and what threatened to be a serious fire was soon extinguished, the only damage being the destruction of a breadth of carpet and the burning of a hole in the floor 2x3 feet. Had it not been for the timely discovery of the fire there might have been a loss of life as well as property. How the fire was communicated to the carpet cannot be understood. To those who assisted in putting out the fire Mr. and Mrs. Riddell extend their hearty thanks.

The following is the bill in regard to the sale of certain poisons, which has passed both Houses:

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky,

SEC. 1. That on and after the first day of September, 1886, it shall not be lawful for any druggist or other dealer in drugs and medicines to sell or offer for sale any sulphate or other preparations of opium in any bottle, vial, envelope, or other package, unless the same shall be wrapped in a scarlet paper or envelope, and all bottles or vials used for the above purpose shall have, in addition to said scarlet label, lettered in white letters, plainly naming the contents of said bottle, and having the word poison and the skull and crossbones marked thereon.

SEC. 2. That anyone violating the provisions of the above section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than $10 nor more than $50, at the discretion of the court or jury, for each and every violation of the preceding section.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act be and the same are hereby repealed.

Hon. Reuben Conner was in town Monday, the first time since the Legislature met. He was kept busy giving information on the various topics of legislation in which his constituents are interested.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

GAINESVILLE.

Several loads of tobacco have passed through this last week enroute to J. W. Berkshire.

Mrs. Manning has been very sick for several days with neuralgia, but is much better at this writing.

The Teachers' Association Saturday, was a failure, there being but two teachers present. Although the patrons of the school atoned somewhat for the disappointment, by bringing in baskets full of everything nice to eat, and spreading it out for the benefit of all. Everybody enjoyed it immensely, and gave Prof. Mack the praise of being a nice house-keeper. An essay read by Miss Addie Hensley was very nice.

BELLEVUE.

The Bellevue correspondent in last week's paper, was off when he sold the dramatic club, had too much of the "dramatic" in it, and any ill winds he may blow, will be like his breath on a frosty morning, visible only to himself and he will be made to stand off and exclaim, "Great is the determination of the club!"

All reports to the contrary about the extreme cold weather destroying the fruit crop in this section of country, our city merchants inform us that they are now receiving the largest crop of "Hen Fruit," that has ever come to this market, and that too, of the best quality, and realizing fair prices.

While cutting wood one day last week, James Breen cut his foot quite severely, and walking home through the snow caught cold in it, which caused it to inflame, from which he was laid up the past week, he is now getting better.

A disease has made its appearance among the dogs in this vicinity similar to that described by your Francisville correspondent last week; several dogs have already died with it, and a number are sick.

Mr. Edward Huey, of Hancock Co., Illinois, who has been visiting in this county the past two months, returned home last week, Miss Katie Walton accompanied him, to visit relatives.

Our city fisherman, Jas. Smith raised several nets of fine fish last week, which were the first catch of the season. He has no trouble to dispose of them at good prices.

Mrs. Samuel Eggleston died last Monday a week of consumption her husband is very low at present with the same disease.

Mrs. Lew Brittenback and child of Carrollton, Ky., are visiting Will Brittenback and family this week.

Last Saturday evening Rev. Fulllove, lectured in the Baptist church on the "Pyramids of Egypt."

John W. Rice, who was visiting his father last week, returned to his home in Kansas.

Uncle Sam Wingate and family have moved to the Waterloo neighborhood.

Miss Katie Arnold will teach the spring term of school here.

WALTON.

Our community was startled from its peaceful reverie Sunday the 28 ult., at 2 o'clock p. m., at the sad announcement of the death of Mr. C. M. Carlisle, one of our most estimable citizens, who lived on his valuable farm 2 miles south of this place. For several days previous to death, he had at frequent intervals, complained of slight rheumatic pains, but gave the matter no serious consideration until Sunday, after partaking of his usual amount of breakfast, the fast shifting pains heretofore located in his limbs, seemed to be concentrating at the heart, and at 2 o'clock p. m., after medical aid had exhausted every available remedy, his spirit severed its connection with mortality, and donned the immortal robe. Mr. Carlisle was the only son of Hon. R. M. Carlisle, deceased, and brother of Hon. Elijah Green's wife, and a cousin of Hon. John G. Carlisle, who has been notified by telegraph. He leaves a most devoted wife with no children, to accompany her lonely walk down the falling shadows of life. No man has been more beneficial to this community than Mr. Carlisle. His hospitable home was ever open to the needy and distressed. He was the poor laborer's friend and counselor in the hours of want, sickness or death, when he was ever present with kind words and benevolent deeds. He was also a model farmer, and greatly attached to the raising and training of fast and blooded stock, of which he had many. He also engaged, a few years since, extensively in the tobacco trade, thereby giving employment to a number of laboring men. In this enterprise success attended his efforts as in all other instances. In a word, he was a man of whom we were proud and with reluctance train our minds to the reality of his untimely end. The remains will be interred at the Baptist cemetery at this place Wednesday the 3rd at 11 a. m., after the funeral discourse by the evangelist, Rev Dunlap. Deceased was 48 years of age.

Editors, can we, by a petition or pursuasive means or coersive measures induce our postal authorities to give us a morning mail on the Southern Railroad north. Florence, Richwood, Gunpowder, Burlington and Erlanger are all interested in this. Make an effort in this direction and we will join in the demand. The present postal facilities give Burlington her mail from this place one day late, or, in other words, a letter sent from this place by the 5 p. m. train, the only train north, reaches Burlington at 2 o'clock p. m. the following day, the distance being only 18 miles. We can facilitate this delivery with the old method of horseback delivery.

Esquires Norman and Baker have honored our town with their presence on several occasions, but we have failed to meet with either of the aspirants. Give me a call, gentlemen would be glad to meet you. There seems to be about an equal chance here, and more interest manifested in the selection of county judge than any other official, and we are glad we have such approved material to select from.

Esq. T. F. Curley, our popular merchant and magistrate, has recently received a commission from his excellency, J. Proctor Knott, giving him all the powers and privileges and prerogatives of a Notary Public. The Squire's shingle will be conspicuously floating too the breeze in a few days.

R. F. Cleek is slowly recovering from his recent severe illness.

GAVE IT UP.

Why a Bookseller Will Hereafter Keep No Illustrated School-Books.

A wan school teacher entered a bookstore near Greenville, Miss., a few days since, dragging after her a small fat boy, who held in one little paw a mutilated "first reader," and with the other wiped his weeping eyes and pug nose.

"Have you any first readers except these?" asked the school teacher.

"Any except these?" repeated the book man. "Why, ma'am, these are the nicest little books I sold you the other day, surely you haven't any objection to them?"

"They have pictures in them and the boys can't learn anything from them," said the tearful teacher.

"Not learn because of the pictures; impossible! Why, ma'am the pictures are put there for the purpose of helping the scholars to learn. Allow me to give you a lesson in the art." Then turning to the boy: "Come, sit in this chair, my man, and let me see if you are not a wise fellow; take your book and begin here on this page, now look at the picture, then spell the word."

The boy, having cleared away sufficient tears and dirt to enable him to see, sat upon a chair with his stumped-toed boots two feet from the floor, and taking the book began:

"D-o-g, dog."

"Ah," said the book-seller; "you see, ma'am. Now, my man," he added, sitting down and closing his eyes complacently, "now, my man, proceed."

"R-a-t, mouse. P-i-g, hog," proceeded the boy.

"No, no, not so fast," cried the bookseller, startled. "Why, you see this fellow eating cheese is too large to be a mouse, so we call him a rat; and this animal eating potato parings is too small to be a hog, so we call him a pig; understand? Well, go on, then, and look attentively at the pictures."

"P-a-i-l, bucket. I-n-k, inkstand," spelled the boy, gazing at the pictures.

"No, no," cried the book-seller, and began to explain. The explanation lasted some twenty minutes, after which the book-seller said again:

"Understand, now? Well, then go on again and be sure to look close at the pictures so you will know what they are." The boy began again with his nose almost touching the page.

"V-a-t, tub. Q-u-i-l-l, feather. O-x, cow."

"Stop!" roared the book-seller.

The boy stopped, put down the book and took up a howl.

"Madame," said the book-seller to the school-teacher, "I will order a lot of unillustrated first readers to-morrow."—Detroit Free Press.

HOW IT IS DONE.

Working Up to the Point of Affectionate Intimacy.

Did you ever listen to a young couple working up to that point of affectionate intimacy at which they call one another by their Christian names?

"It has been a lovely party, hasn't it, Miss Jackson?"

"Lovely, Mr. Wilkins."

"I have known you a long time, Miss Jackson."

"And I have known you quite awhile."

"I've often heard my sister speak of you."

"And my brother is always talking about you."

"Is he? I hear so much about you that I feel quite at home with you."

"It's a lovely night, isn't it, Mr. Wilkins?"

"Beautiful. I think Edith's such a pretty name."

"Do you? I don't like it."

"Edith."

"What did you say."

"O, nothing; I was merely repeating the name."

"I don't like all men's names. I like some. I like Phillip and Ferdinand, and—"

"What do you think of George?"

"That's your name. George."

"I beg your pardon."

"O, nothing; I was only repeating the name."

"What a lovely night it is, isn't it, Miss Edith."

"O, there! George Wilkins, what did you let me slip on that cobble for?"

"Pon my word, I didn't do it; Miss Edith."

"Well, we are home, or I am, Mr. George."

"I am very sorry."

"So am I. I'm so much obliged for your escort; I've had such a lovely time."

"And so have I."

"Good night, Mr. Wilkins."

"Good night, Miss Jackson."

LEARNING THE VERBS.

Signifying to Be, to Do, or to Suffer.

"To be?" Well I followed the track,
That gave me a chance of existence;
But I honestly own, looking back,
That it's prettiest viewed from a distance.
Just now it seems easy and bright,
But I haven't forgotten my scrambles
Over horrible rocks, or the night
That I spent in the midst of the brambles.
At times from the path I might stray,
And thus make the journeying rougher.
But still I was learning the way,
"To Be, or to Do, or to Suffer!"

"To do?" I have worked rather hard,
And my present position is cosey;
But I haven't done much as a bard,
And my prose—well, of course it is prosy!
The schemes and the aims of my youth
Have long from old Time had a floorer,
And I doubt—shall I tell you the truth?—
If the world be a penny the poorer!
If you can not your vanity curb,
You must either, my friend, be a duffer,
Or you haven't yet learnt that a verb
Is "To Be, or to Do, or to Suffer!"

"To suffer?" I took my degrees
Long ago in that branch of our knowledge,
Where our hearts and our hopes are the fees,
And the universe sees as a college.
I have had, as it is, rather more
Than the usual share of affliction;
And that much is remaining in store
Is my very decided conviction.
But I find myself growing with years,
Insensibly tougher and tougher;
I can manage, I think, without tears,
"To Be, and to Do, and to Suffer!"

I have stated the facts of the case,
But Heaven forbid I should grumble;
And I need not complain of a place
That suits my capacities humble.
I have learnt how "to be"—well, a man:
How "to do"—well, a part of my duty;
And in "suffering" own that the plan
Of the world is all goodness and beauty!
Still at times from the path I may stray
And thus make the journeying rougher;
But at least, I am learning the way
"To Be, and to Do, and to Suffer."

MIRANDA CARMICHAEL.

A Strange Woman Possessed by a Strange Love.

"Thirty years," said Miranda, half aloud, "thirty years."

It was one of those sad anniversaries that round so many lives—not wicked, but wasted; harmless, yet empty. She had always been dependent until now. That was ended—but what was going to begin?

She was walking back and forth on the lawn which lay fresh and green beneath its spreading trees. It was one of those days that seem full of hope and promise. The soft expectancy of spring thrilled through the air; the young partridges were piping from the coverts in their half-learned cadences. And yet, Miranda was walking as the blind walk.

Ever since Miranda could remember, she had lived under her uncle's roof, with her brother Henry, and her cousin Tevis Holmes. Tevis was the child of Mr. Carmichael's favorite sister, while Miranda and Henry were the children of a brother, whom he had disliked. They understood that they were to be punished for Tevis' misdeeds, and that he was to be caressed for the same reason; and they accepted the situation resignedly.

Miranda could remember a few days of childish play and pleasure that had been happy; when she, a pretty little girl with long fair curls, had been alternately teased and petted by Tevis, in his rough, boyish way. But under their uncle's wise rule, Tevis rapidly developed into a tyrant, and Henry became a sullen, silent boor, who bore the whole world a grudge, and shunned the society of those who should have been his proper associates. Miranda, in time, became necessary to her uncle, as housekeeper and nurse. She had an inflexible gentleness of demeanor which enforced respect. He had even been heard to growl out that Miranda was the only woman in the world who knew how to hold her tongue. In fact, she was one of those women whom one instinctively respects, who could never be suspected of anything mean or petty. Mr. Carmichael was the the richest planter in that section of Mississippi. His fields, trim and fertile as a well-kept garden, stretched for miles along the new railroad that darted fiercely across the silent country roads, and startled the forest solitudes.

Tevis, of course, was to be the heir of this prosperous domain. But Tevis was a prodigal nephew. The old homestead saw him seldom, except when he needed money. He was too busy sowing that harvest of wild oats, of which the devil is the reaper. Mr. Carmichael, with a patience that seemed endless, forgave his insolence and ingratitude and spendthrift recklessness; until at length there came a still wilder revolt, and after an angry scene with his uncle Tevis left the house. He returned to it three months afterward on hearing of his uncle's death. Then he found that the whole property had been left to Miranda, to the exclusion of Henry and himself. His anger amounted at first to frenzy. The old man was in his dotage—the will should be broken. But he found that could not be done, and gave himself up to sullen despair.

In one corner of the grounds and close to the road, lay an irregular pool, around the borders of which tufts of prickly pear clustered thickly and jostled their heads together, as if they were hurrying down to the water to drink. A straggling hedge of cherokee partially screened this spot from the lawn and road. Tevis was standing here, looking down at a girl who was seated on a log by the edge of a pond. He possessed a manly strength and beauty that had triumphed over his dissipation of years; yet there was something undefinably coarse in the vivid coloring of his face, and the strong white teeth, showing between his red lips, had a carnivorous look. His companion had the plump figure and blunt, unformed features of a mulatto, associated with a complexion of milk and roses, bright brown hair and the bluest eyes that are ever seen. Most people found the general effect very good. This was Miss Jones, known to all the country-side as Kitten; and she and her twin sister, Chicken, were the belles of all the neighborhood dances. They lived in a tumble-down house, overflowing with boys, and girls, and dogs; with an invalid mother, and a father who was always in debt.

"It's the meanes' thing!" she cried.

"My luck's turned," he answered, gloomily. "I knew something was going to happen wrong, when Sultan jumped across the road at the gate there, and didn't want to carry me through. The worst of it is, there's nothing to be done." Kitten's face was raised, and she did not appear to heed his words.

"There's your cousin Miranda," she remarked; "there, don't you see her? over the top of the hedge. How she does creep about!"

Tevis followed the direction of her gaze, and saw the head of Miranda above the green and budding boughs. Her hair, of an infantile blondeness, was cut short over the top of her head and forehead, where it lay in silken rings; and this, with the bronze-colored eyes, set rather far apart beneath the wide sweep of the brown eyebrows, gave an almost child-like character to the upper part of her face. But the length from ear to chin was too great, and, turned at certain angles, or in certain lights, her features took a worn and wasted look. Her skin had a pallor, not transparent, but opaque, which never kindled into a blush. Perhaps she did not observe these two, or perhaps she did. The blank, unseeing look passed from her face, and she turned quickly away.

"She doesn't see us," said Tevis.

"Oh, doesn't she?" was Kitten's satiric rejoinder.

"No; she's always up in the clouds."

"She's managed mighty well for a person who's always up in the clouds."

"Well, this is all beside the question," he said, somewhat impatiently. "Run along home, Kitten. Things are different from what they were three months ago, and your folks wouldn't be so delighted now, as then, to see you in my company."

When Miranda returned to the house after her lonely wanderings she found Tevis sitting on the gallery steps, with his head between his hands. Now, as always, when she glanced at him, a certain austere look passed across her features.

"Still hanging about the old place, you see," he said, trying to speak carelessly. Then, breaking afresh into anger: "It's cursed hard."

"I wish you to believe that I would be glad if you had it all, Tevis," said Miranda; "if only I had enough to live on."

"Well, I do believe it. But there's no use talking."

She stood before him, tall and slim in her black draperies. Her lips parted as if for speech; but were compressed again. A sort of metallic luster came into her bronze-colored eyes.

"There is one way," she said, at length.

"Hey?" said Tevis, raising his head.

"There is one way. You might marry me."

"Marry you! Why, Miranda, you know you hate me like poison."

"I hope I hate no one," she replied, coldly.

"I have laid the proposition before you. You must do as you think best."

At this moment Caleb, one of Mr. Carmichael's old servants, hobbled around the corner of the house, looking at something he held in his hand.

"Dis de secon' cur'ous aig I foun' dis week," he muttered. "Sumpin's gwine happen, shore." He was attracted by the sound of voices, and paused artlessly to listen, with mouth a-gape.

"It's very good of you, Miranda, to want to do the square thing," said Tevis, after a pause—"and—yes—I suppose we might as well marry each other, since there's no other way."

Caleb hastened around to the kitchen.

"Lillie Blanche!" he exclaimed, "ain't I ben tellin' you sumpin's gwine happen?"

"You is," assented Lillie Blanche, with an indifferent twirl of the skillet; for Caleb suffered those disadvantages usually felt by a prophet in his own country.

"Well, what you reckon?"

"Dunno."

"Why, Miss Mirandy's gwine marry Mas' Tevis."

"Law!"

"An' he says he hates her worse'n pisen; but dat's de onlies' way to git back de prop'rty."

"What a talk!" commented Lillie Blanche. "He's a mighty fine lookin' man; but he ain't fittin' for Miss Mirandy to wipe her feet on."

When Miranda told her brother of her intended marriage, he snarled at her: "You're too old for such nonsense."

That day Dr. Stacy came to see her. He was as little like the typical country doctor as can be imagined—a tall, slender man, with the face and head of a dreamer. In fact, he had enough of poetical temperament to make him undecided, unpractical and a self-torturer. He had loved Miranda in silence for two years, ever since he had come into Mississippi from a neighboring State. There had always seemed to be some good reason why he should not speak after he had made up his mind to do so, and thus time had passed. Once, during her uncle's illness, he had spoken a few words, but she had whispered: "Not here, not now."

To-day he came to her, full of hope. "Miranda!" he cried, joyfully, when they met; but no smile answered him. "I may speak to you now," he said; "I may tell you how I love you."

"No, no!" she cried; "you must not. I am going to marry my cousin. It is the only way to give him back what should be his own."

"My God! you are going to sacrifice yourself. It will be a living death."

"I must."

"O, Miranda! I can't give you up."

She made no reply, but only clutched the balustrade beside her with a tense grasp. She had the hand of an enthusiast—fine and somewhat wasted, with a burning palm and the blue veins standing out strongly on its dry whiteness. Not a saintly hand; rather that of some fierce ascetic, wandering in thorny deserts, torn with hunger, beating the air with passionate prayers.

"Forgive me," said the man, whose love was all gentleness. "I have no right to make you suffer because I am unhappy." There was a silence, and then he said: "Is it all over—forever?"

"Forever," she muttered; and he left her. Kitten was waiting for Tevis in the strip of beech wood that bordered the road. It was a charming spot, very green and fresh; but she neither saw nor felt its charm. Her face, turned intently toward the bend of the road around which he should appear, was very pale, and had lost all its prettiness of coloring; the characterless features looking almost refined, thus sharpened by anxiety. In a moment, Tevis, on his strong bay horse, dashed into sight. The whole thing was characteristic of the man: the sweeping gallop—the abrupt halt—the easy spring to the ground—and he stood before her in his triumphant strength and beauty. He approached her quite jauntily. Yesterday it had seemed that he was to be turned out in the world to pick up a living as best he could; perhaps, even, to work. That fear was removed. To marry a woman he did not like was not pleasant; but what was it compared with the terrible alternative of honest toil?

"Tevis, Tevis," cried Kitten, springing up. "Is it true?"

"Is what true?"

"That you're going to marry Miranda—that old maid—oh!"

"Yes, Kitten, it's true, I'm sorry to say. I have to. There's nothing else to be done. But you needn't mind—she hates me."

"I don't believe it—I'll never believe it. She loves you—she's always wanted to get you away from me."

Tevis gave a deep-chested laugh at this absurdity.

"That's a good joke—Miranda loving me! Why, she hates the sight of me. She used to be a good enough sort of girl, in old times; but now it gives me the creeps when she fixes those queer eyes of hers on me. She could marry Dr. Stacy if she chose, and that is why I say she is acting handsomely."

Kitten replied nothing; but sat with her plump little hands wrung together—a picture of despair. Her vacation was ended. For the past year or so, Tevis had been holding out glittering prospects to her. She was to marry the rich Mr. Carmichael's favorite nephew—to be whirled away into enchanted regions like a fairy princess. How the other girls had envied her—even her sister, Chicken—and she had given herself airs of superiority. They would envy her no more. They would exult over her. Oh blistering thought! The vision had faded—the dream had vanished. She longed for pleasure, for change, for excitement, with that passion of which only a country girl, who has been smothered all her life among green boughs and silent fields, is capable. It was all over. She had nothing to put in the place of what she had lost. She lifted her face to him, tragic in its terror of the future. In truth, nature had formed these two for each other—to live together a life of selfish ease and luxury, untroubled by any thought of any other human being's pain or suffering.

"Look here, Kitten," said Tevis, drawing her toward him, "don't fret about it. It isn't as if I loved her, and it isn't as if I was going somewhere far off. We can always see each other."

She tore herself passionately from his grasp. "Oh! it's easy for you to talk that way," she cried, in a hoarse voice.

He was thinking of the gratification of the moment, while she regretting the carriage in which she should never ride, the jewels that should never adorn her pretty person. Tevis frowned heavily. Now she was beginning to make herself unpleasant, and that was a thing he could not forgive.

"Well, I must be going," he said, with a feint of moving; but Kitten did not speak nor look up. "Kitten, I say!" She made no answer. "Oh, all right! if you're in the sulks," and he started away in good earnest, with a muttered oath at the unreasonableness of women.

Having had time to reflect, Henry said to his sister, with an attempt at an air of good-fellowship: "About your marriage, Miranda?"

She turned her coldest glance upon him.

"I am no younger than yesterday," she said.

"You need not be uneasy. I will provide for you."

She could not listen to his muttered thanks. It seemed that if any one gave her fair words it was because he expected to be repaid for them.

Tevis and Miranda were married as quietly as possible. The whole neighborhood was surprised. The air was full of feminine murmurs—"The idea of that lovely Miranda sacrificing herself to such a man, just that she may give him back the property!" or, "She is the noblest woman."

It was the beginning of October. Summer was dying in an agony of fever. The dry air, which quivered as if restless with pain, was full of the pungent odor of burning pine brush, that stung the nostrils and made the eyelids smart. The smoke clung sluggishly to the parched fields; the pond shrank between its borders. Volumes of dust rolled up from beneath the hoofs of Tevis' horse, as he climbed the hill. The sky was of a burning blue, with masses of bright, white cloud piled in the east. Tevis was going in to New Egypt. He looked older than the few months that had passed since his marriage seemed to warrant. There was a fagged, lusterless look about his eyes, and heavy lines showed around his mouth. The quiet, respectable life he had been leading had acted upon his nature like a slow poison. It was the new railroad that had caused the growth of New Egypt. The original Egypt, a mile away, sat retired with dignity beneath its shadowing trees. There was but one tree in New Egypt, and that was a pine—its site having been formerly a cotton-field.

The smart little depot had quite a pretentious air, but it was more ornamental than useful, as the enterprising baggage-master had turned the warehouse into a family bed-room and the ladies' waiting-room into a kitchen, from which issued a strong smell of onions and a sound of frying. The other buildings had lost something of its look of raw newness, and had taken on a peculiar appearance of old age in youth, like that of a young person stricken with paralysis. With a wise economy of paint and whitewash the builders had adorned only those portions of the houses that could be seen from the railroad, but the single coat of paint had been washed by the rain, and blistered by the sun, and the whitewash hung in leprous scales. Every one appeared to sleep, except a drove of pigs that wandered about, turning up the soil with those rude plowshares given them by nature. An old New Egyptian crawled out of a neighboring cabin, with a bucket in his hand, evidently in quest of water; but his heart seemed to fail him, and he sat down to rest on the doorstep.

Tevis drew up near him, and called out: "Has Biggins got back from Dry Creek yet?"

"H'm?"

"I say, has Biggins got back from Dry Creek yet?"

"Dunno."

Satisfied with the information he had received, Tevis went on to one of the frame stores gabling to the street, where the top of a goods box, nailed to one of the gallery posts, bore this legend, scrawled in letters in various stages of development:

SALOON.
—BY—
SAM BIGGINS, ESQ.,
J. P. and Commissioner of Deeds.

Squire Biggins, as he was called in recognition of his judicial dignity, was engaged in serving Ashleigh Cabell and Randolph Forster in that one of his dual capacities which, if it brought less honor, certainly brought more profit to his establishment. These two were typical young men of the neighborhood. They were boon companions of Tevis, and welcomed him with boisterous heartiness and an invitation to "take something." To their surprise and evident chagrin he declined the proffered hospitality, and handed the squire a written memorandum.

After glancing at it Biggins said: "I'll draw up the papers right off and bring them out to your place in an hour or so."

"Be sure you do," Tevis replied, and passed out.

When he had ridden beyond earshot Cabell, who was now backed against the counter, leaning on the elbow of one of his arms and the hand of the other, in that slouching attitude of slovenly ease so much affected by the loafer around country stores, remarked: "Holmes is gettin' mighty unsociable since he married Miranda Carmichael; ain't he? What's he up to, anyhow, squire? I'll bet a bale o' cotton it's some devilment."

"I don't know exactly what it is; but I reckon I could make a pretty close guess, if I was to try right hard," replied the squire, with a knowing look under his spectacles.

"Wants a power of attorney from Miranda to sell old man Carmichael's New Orleans stocks; don't he?" suggested Cabell.

"Well, that's about the size of it, Cab; and what's more, this looks mightily like he was goin' to get it too," the Squire said, tapping the memorandum Tevis had given him.

Cabell and Ashleigh exchanged glances full of intimations of special and private knowledge of the matter, and went out, leaving the Squire to "draw up the papers" out of a form book.

When Tevis returned home, he found Miranda lying in the hammock on the gallery. His footstep did not arouse her. The hammock hung motionless, neither moving nor swaying, and one of her arms that had dropped over the side hung nerveless and inert. Her face looked colorless and gray beneath the infantile hair. How still she lay! almost as if—his heart gave a terrible leap in his breast. At this moment she opened her solemn and childlike eyes and gazed at him with a smile. It seemed as if she must be coming back from some pleasant dream. But this was only for an instant. The old rigidity returned to her features and she arose from the hammock. "What's the matter?" Tevis demanded, huskily, "you look old."

She steadied herself by the rope with a feebleness of movement that might have appealed to his strength. "I feel old," she said. She was about to leave him, when she glanced back and saw him still standing there, looking at her. "Do you wish to speak to me, Tevis?" she asked.

"Biggins says he'll be out here in an hour or so, and then you'll have to sign those papers, you know."

"Very well. I shall be ready."

Biggins kept his word. He was on the spot within an hour, and proposed reading the power of attorney to Miranda; but she declined to hear it. Tevis put the document in his pocket, and he and Biggins rode away together. Miranda was alone that day; but to this she was accustomed, for she had always led a solitary life. The light seemed to wane slowly, and sunset was followed by that breathless pause and stupor so well known to dwellers in the South. The dull dusk crept on by degrees. Outlines of familiar objects became blurred and fantastic in the uncertain light. The chorus of forest voices had arisen, and now and then a bat swooped past with that sound like the vibration of a tense bow-string. At length the leaves began to stir a little—the waters of the pond trembled in the darkness—and the night wind sprung up, bearing the cool, damp odors of the woods and streams.

Presently, from her seat on the gallery, Miranda heard the roll of wheels, the slamming of the gate, and saw a carriage approaching the house. Some heavy, unconscious burden was being lifted out. "What is it?" she cried, in a sharpened, trembling tone. Several voices began to speak at once. The news was exciting and they thought of Miranda rather as an audience than as a wife.

The cold, unsympathetic voice of Randolph Forster rose above the rest: "Tevis was in the front passenger coach. At Nelson, the engine and tender took the switch, an' this threw the baggage car across the main line, an' the front passenger dashed up on it, an' c'reened over. Tevis pitched right out o' the window under the wheels, an' was used up like you see him. He hasn't spoken; but I don't believe he's quite dead yet."

"The only one badly hurt," added Cabell. "There was Kitten Jones sitting right beside him, an' not a hair of her head was touched."

"Shut up—his wife," growled another.

But Miranda neither shrieked nor fainted. When the physician had done all that could be done for a dying man, she was left alone with her husband. While she watched beside him she saw that he had opened his eyes. She bent over him and he made a feeble movement. "Why, Kitten," he murmured, "Kitten—" These were his last words.

Dr. Stacy had ridden over to see Miranda, for the first time since her marriage. But he did not find her at home.

"She's jest up at de buryin' groun'," volunteered Lillie Blanche. "You kin find her easy."

Dr. Stacy turned his steps toward the family graveyard, where several generations of Carmichaels were sleeping in the midst of the fields, surrounded by the sounds of the plowing and hoeing.

As he climbed the hill he could see Miranda sitting beside her husband's grave. Even at this distance he was struck by the absolute abandonment of her attitude. Her head was thrown back against the marble column, and her arms were cast by her sides, with the palms upward. A passing wind ruffled her sombre garments and fluttered around her fair hair.

"Miranda," said Dr. Stacy, going to the heart of the matter, "do you remember the day when I told you that I loved you?"

"That was long ago," she murmured, in a voice from which all the substance and sweetness seemed gone.

"Yes, too long. Then why should we waste more happiness? We have lost too much already. Your sacrifice is ended."

Miranda raised her eyes to his face. "I loved him," she said.—Julie K. Wetherill, in N. O. Times-Democrat.

SNOW IN THE STREETS.

How It Is Removed in London at a Very Moderate Expense.

The question, what is the best way of disposing of snow in the city streets? is much discussed. One man suggests that the city should appoint officials to stand along the docks and buy all the snow that may be offered at a certain price per cartload, pay for it on the spot, and see it dumped into the river. The wise inventor of this method thinks that since almost all the carts and wagons are idle during the prevalence of snow there would be a universal turnout of the unemployed class, and the whole island would be cleared of snow in two days.

In London the snow is emptied in pits excavated for the purpose, with perforated iron bottoms under which there is a coil of pipes heated by steam. In these pits the snow is rapidly melted, and the water runs away into the sewers. In this manner the snow from the business parts of the city is rapidly removed at a very moderate expense.

In Milan the removal of the snow is let out by contract at so much per inch. As soon as the snow ceases falling the city engineer, in the presence of certain officials and the chief contractors, measures the depth of snow on stone slabs which are completely sheltered from the winds. This measurement furnishes the basis for computing the price which the city is to pay for each ward and district. There are portions of the city which present peculiar difficulties, and for cleansing these the contractors get a larger allowance.

On a winter's day in Milan, after a fall of snow, there will be as many sometimes as three thousand men in the streets sweeping and shoveling.

The remarkable circumstance is the small sum of money which it costs Milan to get entirely rid of its snow. In the winter of 1874-5 the total fall of snow amounted to a little over three feet six inches. The expense of its removal was about forty-two thousand dollars. The winter before last the fall was only five and a quarter inches, which was removed for five thousand two hundred dollars. The city, we should add, furnishes all the implements employed except vehicles and horses. Generally speaking, it costs to remove the snow from the streets of Milan about one thousand dollars an inch.

One thing is certain: The snow should be removed from our cities within forty-eight hours after it has fallen. It is the worst possible economy to let it remain to thaw and freeze and freeze and thaw from November to April.—N. Y. World.

Remedy for Painful Wounds.

Take a pan or shovel with burning coals and sprinkle upon them common brown sugar, and hold the wounded part in the smoke. In a few minutes the pain will be allayed and recovery proceeds rapidly. In my own case a rusty nail had made a bad wound in the bottom of my foot. The pain and nervous irritation was severe. This was all removed by holding it in the smoke for fifteen minutes, and I was able to resume my reading in comfort. I have often recommended it to others with like results. Last week one of my men had a finger nail torn out by a pair of ice tongs. It became very painful, as was to have been expected. Held in sugar smoke for twenty minutes, the pain ceased, and it promised speedy recovery.—Country Gentleman.

A GERMAN INN.

Teutonic Love and Reverence for the Huge Feather-Bed.

On a large, detested square a rambling inn threw open its hospitable doors, and welcomed us as if we were the one party in the world the host had been looking for since the inn was opened. The storm was not so severe but we could straggle around the town in the evening and explore the dimly-lighted streets. The sultry air, scarcely cooled by the rain, made the interior oppressive, so we wandered around as long as we could, and then sought our quarters. We found that the rooms had been prepared for us with careful attention. Every thing was neat and fresh and comfortable. In about five minutes after retiring to our respective chambers we all appeared in the hall way again, in various stages of undress, clamoring for the servant. A blushing chambermaid soon appeared, and was shown in turn the three couches, each with a mountainous feather-bed as a coverlet, incased in a sack of white linen. Explanations and expostulations were of no avail. She could not understand the cause of our complaint, but insisted on the purity of the home-spun linen and the softness and the lightness of the feather-bed coverlet. At last the whole household was aroused, and after great difficulty the proprietor was made to conceive the fact that we could not sleep that sultry August night under a feather-bed which would have suffocated us in mid-winter. After earnest declarations that all Ribnitz people slept under one feather-bed in summer and under two in winter, he was obliged to confess that there had never been a call for upper sheets and blankets in his house, and he had none. We, as a last resort, severally emptied the feather-bed out of its sack, and used this as a sheet. But for the perambulating watchmen, who made night noisy with their unintelligible hourly cries, we would have slept soundly.—Cor. Chicago Interior.

A BOLD THIEF.

He Mounts the Carriage Steps and Steals a Fair One's Pocket-Book.

A correspondent writes: The following adventure, which my daughter experienced, may, if made known, be useful in putting the public on their guard. Driving in a single horse brougham, and having a small box on the front seat before her, she had been calling at a West End bank, and subsequently had visited a house in Greek street, Soho. Shortly after quitting this house and while driving through Soho Square, in open daylight (between three and four p. m.), both windows of the carriage being open, she was startled by the appearance of a man standing on one of the carriage steps, who suddenly leant forward, pushed one arm into the carriage window, and snatched away a pocket-book which my daughter had placed on the top of the little box in front of her. The surprise was so great that my daughter could, of course, do nothing but stop the carriage. The bold and adroit thief had then decamped, and was seen at a distance running away, though some bystanders, who saw the event, ran after him; it was to no purpose. It is likely that the thief may have tracked the carriage from the bank, or he might have taken his chance of robbing one of the many carriages which frequent the Soho bazar in the square.—London Times.

A Count's Idiosyncrasy.

The death is announced of Count Emeric Sommisch, a Hungarian magnate, who was known in society for his extraordinary hatred of horses. This aversion amounted to a real hippophobia, and it obliged the Count many years ago to throw up his commission in the army. The Count died at an advanced age on his estate in Sclavonia. He was a distinguished agriculturist, an excellent landlord, and on all subjects but that of horses, asses and mules a man of sound judgment. He would not allow any animal of the equine kind to come upon his lands, so that visitors who rode or drove to see him had always to alight at his park gates. He himself for many years used a vehicle drawn by trained deer, but latterly he went about his estate in a carriage with a team of oxen. His horror of horses is said to have been innate, as there was no accident in his life to account for it.—N. Y. Post.

A Pretty Hancock Anecdote.

Policeman Phillipps, who has guarded the Twenty-second street crossing of Broadway, New York, for the past twelve years, tells this story of General Hancock, who always used to take the 'bus at Phillipps' corner: "I lent the General a quarter once under peculiar circumstance. I had picked up a sandal in the middle of the street. There was a one-legged newsman at the crossing, named Dick, in those days, and as the rubber fitted him, I gave it to him. That night General Hancock asked me if I found a rubber. I told him I had and mentioned the fact that I had given it away. He said he didn't see what any one could do with one sandal. When I explained that Dick was one-legged he thought it a pretty good joke, but asked me if I couldn't get it back. I handed it to him the next morning. 'Did you give the man any thing?' he asked. On my telling him I had not, he called to me to give Dick a quarter and he would hand it to me when he came up town. He remembered to give it to me the same night."—St. Louis Republican.

Spring Medicine

Everybody needs and should take a good spring medicine, for two reasons:

1st. The body is now more susceptible to benefit from medicine than at any other season.

2d. The impurities which have accumulated in the blood should be expelled, and the system given tone and strength, before the prostrating affects of warm weather are felt.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best spring medicine. It purifies the blood. It sharpens the appetite. It tones the digestion. It overcomes debility. It builds up the whole system. Try it and you will be convinced of its superiority.

Purify Your Blood

Remember, we do not claim that Hood's Sarsaparilla will do impossibilities. We tell you plainly what it has done, and submit proofs from sources of unquestioned reliability, and ask you frankly if you are suffering from any disease or affection caused or promoted by impure blood or low state of the system, to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. Our experience warrants us in assuring you that you will not be disappointed in the result.

"I can recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all as a safe, sure medicine. It cured me of terrible headache, and cured my little girl of swellings in her neck which had been lanced twice." MRS. F. E. LORD, Gates Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"When in the spring I felt all run down and much debilitated, I found Hood's Sarsaparilla just the medicine to build me up. My wife also, after much physical prostration, found in its use new life and lasting benefit. Upon our little girl, who had been sick with scarlet fever, its effect was marvelous, entirely removing the poison from her blood and restoring her to good health." E. G. STRATTON, Swampscott, Mass.

"I have used Hood's Sarsaparilla and find it to be the best remedy for impure blood I have ever taken." M. H. BAXTER, ticket agent, P. & R. Rd., Bound Brook, N. J.

Tone Up the System

"I consider Hood's Sarsaparilla the best medicine I ever used. It gives me an appetite and refreshing sleep, and keeps the cold out." JOHN S. FOGG, 106 Spruce Street, Portland, Me.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla was a God-send to me, for it cured me of dyspepsia and liver complaint with which I had suffered 20 years." J. B. HORNBECK, South Fallsburg, N. Y.

"I took Hood's Sarsaparilla for general debility and was wonderfully benefited by it." J. P. JOHNSON, Martin's Ferry, O.

Mrs. C. W. Merriott, Lowell, Mass., was completely cured of sick headache, which she had had 16 years, by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

WHAT WARNER'S SAFE CURE CURES AND WHY.

CONGESTION OF THE KIDNEYS, BACK ACHE.

INFLAMMATION OF THE KIDNEYS, BLADDER OR URINARY ORGANS.

Catarrh of the Bladder, Gravel, Stone, Dropsy, Enlarged Prostate Gland, Impotency or General Debility, Bright's Disease.

WHY? Because it is the only remedy known that has power to expel the uric acid and urea, of which there are some 500 grains secreted each day as the result of muscular action, and sufficient if retained in the blood, to kill six men. It is the direct cause of all the above diseases, as well as of Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Apoplexy, Paralysis, Insanity and Death.

This great specific relieves the kidneys of too much blood, frees them from all irritants, restores them to healthy action by its certain and soothing power.

IT CURES ALSO Jaundice, Enlargement of the Liver, Abscess and Catarrh of the Bile Ducts, Biliousness, Headache, Furred Tongue, Sleeplessness, Languor, Debility, Constipation, Gall Stones, and every unpleasant symptom which results from liver complaint.

WHY? Because it has a specific and positive action on the liver as well as on the kidneys, increasing the secretion and flow of bile, regulates its elaborating function, removes unhealthful formations, and, in a word, restores it to natural activity, without which health is an Impossibility.

IT CURES ALSO Female Complaints, Leucorrhœa, Displacements, Enlargements, Ulcerations, Painful Menstruation, makes Pregnancy safe, prevents Convulsions and Child-Bed Fever and aids nature by restoring functional activity.

WHY? All these troubles, as is well known by every physician of education, arise from congestion and impaired kidney action, causing stagnation of the blood vessels and breaking down, and this is the beginning and the direct cause of all the ailments from which women suffer, and must as surely follow as night does the day.

WHY Warner's Safe Cure is acknowledged by thousands of our best medical men to be the only true blood purifier, is because it acts upon scientific principles, striking at the very root of the disorder by its action on the kidneys and liver. For, if these organs were kept in health all the morbid waste matter so deadly poisonous if retained in the body, is passed out. On the contrary, if they are deranged, the acids are taken up by the blood, decomposing it and carrying death to the most remote part of the body.

WHY 93 per cent. of all diseases which afflict humanity, arise from impaired kidneys, is shown by medical authorities. Warner's Safe Cure, by its direct action, positively restores them to health and full working capacity, nature curing all the above diseases herself when the cause is removed, and we guarantee that Warner's Safe Cure is a positive preventive if taken in time.

As you value health take it to avoid sickness, as it will at all times and under all circumstances keep all the vital functions up to par.

We also Guarantee a Cure and beneficial effect for each of the foregoing diseases, also that every case of Liver and Kidney trouble can be cured where degeneration has Not taken place, and even then Benefit will Surely be Derived. In every instance it has established its claim.

AS A BLOOD PURIFIER, particularly in the Spring, it is unequaled, for you can not have pure blood when the kidneys or liver are out of order.

Look to your condition at once. Do not postpone treatment for a day nor an hour. The doctors can not compare records with us. Give yourself thorough constitutional treatment with Warner's Safe Cure, and there are yet many years of life and health assured you!

EPITHELIOMA! OR SKIN CANCER

For seven years I suffered with a cancer on my face. Eight months ago a friend recommended the use of Swift's Specific, and I determined to make an effort to procure it. In this I was successful, and began its use. The influence of the medicine at first was to somewhat aggravate the sore; but soon the inflammation was allayed, and I began to improve after the first few bottles. My general health has greatly improved. I am stronger, and am able to do any kind of work. The cancer on my face began to decrease and the ulcer to heal, until there is not a vestige of it left—only a little scar marks the place.

FOREIGN LANDS.

Mount Etna Again in a State of Eruption.

Snubbed by the Queen—Heidelberg's 500th Anniversary in July.

LONDON, March 5.—A telegram just received here announces that Mount Etna is in a state of eruption. Cinders and stones are continually being thrown up, and it is supposed that lava is coming out of the crater, and as it is covered by a dense mist no proper observations can be taken. Slight shocks of earthquake have been felt at the foot of the mountain.

BERLIN, March 5.—A brilliant jubilee in commemoration of the five hundredth anniversary of the foundation of the Heidelberg University, the oldest in Germany, is to be held in July and August next, and will continue for a fortnight. A local wine-grower has offered to fill the famous Heidelberg [illegible], holding eight hundred hogsheads, with the best of Rhine wine. The students are arranging a grand historical procession to take place August 8, in which all the costumes worn in Germany since the foundation of the University will be represented. Thousands of strangers from all parts of Europe will participate in the festivities.

LONDON, March 5.—Charles Russell, Attorney General, went to-day to Buckingham Palace to be knighted. After waiting an hour, he received word from the Queen that she was fatigued by the "duties of the drawing room," which she had been holding, and must postpone the ceremony. Russell withdrew from the palace in indignation. He says he will refuse Knighthood. It is believed that the Queen is irritated at his pronounced home rule views.

LIMERICK, March 6.—The grand jury, eighteen to three, to-day adopted resolutions favoring home rule for Ireland, immediate settlement of the land question and expressing confidence in Gladstone and Parnell.

LONDON, March 6.—Gladstone authorizes denial of newspaper reports that he has drafted a home rule scheme and shown it to his friends.

The Strike Over.

NEW YORK, March 5.—The strike of the street car drivers in New York and Brooklyn is ended. The railroad directors concede twelve hours and $2 a day. Other points of difference are left to Railroad Commissioner O'Donnell for arbitration. At noon Railroad Commissioner O'Donnell, acting in the capacity of arbitrator, effected a settlement of the strike with the Dry Dock and Battery Railway Co. The agreement, which was drawn up upon the basis of a compromise, provides that the men shall receive $2 for twelve hours' work a day, and be allowed thirty minutes for dinner. In case further differences should arise between the company and its employes they will be referred for settlement to Commissioner O'Donnell as arbitrator. The settlement of the Dry Dock and Battery road strike ends the matter on all the other roads, who were acting in sympathy.

McCormick and the Knights of Labor.

CHICAGO, March 5.—The fact that several managers in the East have recently discharged some of their men avowedly because of their being Knights of Labor, has caused a rumor to be circulated that there is on foot a concerted movement by manufacturers to break up that order, and that the action of the McCormick Reaper Works in this city is an initial step in that direction. C. H. McCormick was asked if it were true, and he replied: "No, sir, it is not. We are not fighting the Knights of Labor or any union. We have not heard of any such movement. We intend to employ our workmen without regard to whether they belong to a labor union or not."

Knights of Labor in Rhode Island.

NEW YORK, March 5.—A Providence special says: Recent aggressive action on the part of the Knights of Labor has put the entire body of Rhode Island textile manufacturers on the defensive. Yesterday a formal meeting was held at which every textile manufacturer in Rhode Island was represented, and they each and all pledged themselves to the extent of five per cent. of their respective payrolls for the purpose of defending their interests. The sum thus pledged amounts to about $1,000,000.

Robber Murderer Hanged.

WINNEMUCCA, NEV., March 5.—Clarence Gray, alias Isham Collins, who murdered R. H. Scott while attempting to rob the latter's store at Paradise, Christmas eve, 1884, was hanged here to-day. Grey had been feigning insanity for a month past, but on being informed last night that there was no hope for him, suddenly resumed his natural state of mind and walked up on the scaffold with a steady step. He made a speech denying his guilt.

Postal Clerks' Salaries.

WASHINGTON, March 5.—The Postmaster General to-day transmitted to the House his reply to the resolution asking if he had expended any portion of the $81,800 alleged to have been appropriated by the last Congress to increase the salaries of railway postal clerks, and if not, the reason therefor. The Postmaster General says that these salaries have been unchanged for nine years, and that no reason is known to exist why the compensation is not as adequate as heretofore.

A Remarkable Library.

LISBON, March 5.—The executors of the will of the late Don Ferdinand, Duke of Saxony and Titular King of Portugal, have discovered in his library a remarkable collection of suppressed books and pamphlets. The collection numbers 6,000 volumes and is believed to contain a copy of every important piece of forbidden literature which has been printed in Europe during the past twenty-five years.

Chinese Still Going.

PORTLAND, ORE., March 5.—About 3 o'clock this morning 125 Chinese, at work as wood-choppers and grubbers, near Mount Tabor, three miles east of here, were driven out by a mob of between sixty and eighty whites, most of them masked, and marched to the ferry, whence they were conveyed to this side. It was an exact repetition of the outrage committed last Sunday night in the outskirts of Albina.

Business Failures.

NEW YORK, March 5.—The business failures during the last seven days number for the United States, 207; Canada, 39; total, 246; against 248 last week, and 236 the week previous.

Sale of the Morgan Art Collection.

NEW YORK, March 5.—The third and last evening's sale of pictures collected by the late Mary J. Morgan brought to Chickering Hall to-night a larger audience than previously attended. The majority of the buyers were millionaires and speculators. Eighty pictures were sold and brought $487,925; total amount of sales for the three evenings, $885,300—about a quarter of a million less than they cost Mrs. Morgan.

Embezzlers Arrested.

BRADFORD, PA., March 5.—Thos. Christie and Horatio King, two young clerks in the First National Bank in this city, have been arrested for embezzling $60,000, which they lost in speculation.

Suicide by Jumping Out of a Window.

PITTSBURGH, PA., March 5.—John Barrington, an aged patient in the Insane Department of the Allegheny City Home, jumped head first from a third-story window this morning and was killed instantly.

The Miners Win.

PITTSBURGH, PA., March 5.—The miners at the Weinman & Vogel mines, at Wilkinsburg, Pa., who struck several days ago for an advance of a half cent per bushel in the price of mining, will return to work to-morrow, the operators having granted the increase.

BATTLE IN THE STREET

Between New York Police and Street Railroad Strikers.

NEW YORK, March 4.—The strike on the Dry Dock Road continues. The reserve police of all precincts below Fourteenth street was detailed at the Grand street stables this morning. This afternoon an attempt was made to start a car on the Cross street line, under the protection of 1,200 police. At 2:50 a car started from the stables and proceeded under an escort of fifty policemen to the starters' stand at East street. There the line of march was formed. First came six platoons of police, then followed the car, inclosed in a hollow square of police numbering 100. The rear was closed by six more platoons of police. The force started amid the hooting, yelling and shouts of derision from the mob. No obstacle was met until the car reached Cannon street. There was a horse-car lying on its side. It was lifted from the track by the policemen who formed the advance guard of the column. Thereafter progress was slow. At Madison street the first stone was thrown and struck the side of the car, in which were some minor officials of the company and a sergeant of police. All the way to the Bowery the track was obstructed with the wrecks of street-cars and trucks, but the advance guard cleared them away. At Henry street another stone went crashing through the car window. At East Broadway a large stone was placed beside the track unnoticed, and the car was thrown off. This mishap was greeted with a tempest of yells from the thousands lining the streets. Oaths, hisses, calls, screams and wild cheering made the street a perfect pandemonium of sound. The car was lifted back on the track and proceeded. At Ludlow street another window was smashed and rotten eggs were thrown. At Allan street a blockade was met. Cars of the Second avenue and other lines were placed in all positions across the track. Stones again flew and another car-window was broken. The obstructions were removed, and again the car moved slowly on. At Eldridge street more blockades were found, and the crowd attacked the police and a general fight took place, in which clubs were used with a will and the rioters were driven into the side streets. Grand street merchants, alarmed, took in their stock, closed their doors and put up their iron shutters. At the Grand street station of the Third Avenue Elevated road was an immense barricade of cars, wagons and trucks. For blocks in every direction could be seen long lines of cars and trucks in inextricable confusion. All travel was suspended. It was 2:45 p. m. before the track was cleared of the many cars which had been placed crossways of the street. From Mulberry street to Center the rioting began again. A stone thrown against a car struck Sergeant McEver. The police lost all patience and charged the mob furiously. They clubbed right and left and succeeded in driving the rioters down the side streets. From there to Broadway the battle was waged with undiminished fury, many were clubbed and a number of police struck with stones. Broadway was reached, after a hard struggle, at 3:05 p. m. Here fully 50,000 people were gathered as spectators. The hissing, hooting and yelling was continuous, and stones continued to drop among the escort. At Wooster street a pile of bricks fell as the car was passing and stopped it. This removed, another barricade was met and removed amid the howls of the workmen. As the car went towards North river the factories on either side poured out their thousands of employes, who met the police with execrations and reproaches. At West street was the last barricade of coal wagons, beer wagons and logs. At Desbrosses street a load of coal was dumped on the track. When the end of the route was reached the men were allowed to rest ten minutes after their terrible march. They then returned over the same route to the stables. Very few obstacles were offered to their progress. During the trip both ways the cars were obliged frequently to change from one track to the other. The strikers yelled and hooted, but did not obstruct the way to any extent until the Bowery was reached. There was another barricade, but it was soon removed and then the way was clear to the stables, which were reached at 4:30 p. m. The strikers and the police left before 5 o'clock. A number of the strikers and police were injured in the engagement.

STORY OF A CLOCK.

The Fortunate Discovery of an Instrument Bequeathing a Vast Estate.

POINT PLEASANT, W. VA., March 4.—David Baylor, a prominent citizen of Augusta County, Virginia, died a few days ago. The discovery of the will made by him was under peculiar circumstances. Mrs. Cook was reared by him, and he promised to give her an old-fashioned clock of his. He also said he would do something for her two sons before his death. No will could be found, and at a sale of his property Mrs. Cook bought for $50 the old hall clock which had been promised her. In attempting to fix a loose screw she discovered an envelope sealed with wax and marked "David Baylor's will." When this paper was opened it proved to be his will, in his own handwriting, by which he had devised all his property, both real and personal, to Mrs. Cook and her two sons, share and share alike, except $8,000 to the Union Theological Seminary, a Presbyterian school near Farmville, Va. His estate is appraised at $200,000.

A PLUCKY LITTLE MAIDEN.

The Daughter of a Sick Sheriff Takes a Convict to Prison.

DETROIT, March 4.—Hattie McKny, the seventeen-year-old daughter of Sheriff McKny, of Tuscola County, was at the Michigan Central Depot yesterday on her way to Jackson prison, having in her custody Samuel Woodman, who was sent from Tuscola County for one year for assaulting his wife with a carving knife. Hattie is a sprightly little maiden, and when asked if she was not afraid to bring such a strong and desperate man to prison, replied: "Oh, indeed no; I don't handcuff him, but I have a revolver in my pocket, and I keep him in sight all the time. If he was to start to get away from me I would call for assistance, and some of the men on the train would help me. My father is sick or he would have brought the prisoner himself."

Rope-Walker Takes a Tumble.

HAGERSTOWN, IND., March 4.—Yesterday evening a travelling performer upon the rope and trapeze named Frank Burnet, of Winchester, O., was giving an exhibition here, the rope broke, and he was thrown to the ground. The heavy iron balance pole fell on him, breaking his leg in two places and badly crushing him.

Orphans' Schools to be Investigated.

HARRISBURG, PA., March 4.—Governor Pattison and Attorney General Cassidy, accompanied by a stenographer, will to-day begin an investigation of the charges made against the management of Soldiers' Orphans' Schools by the Philadelphia Record. All the schools will be visited and witnesses examined.

Archbishop Corrigan.

NEW YORK, March 4.—Archbishop Corrigan was invested with the sacred pallium in this city to-day. The ceremony was conducted by Archbishop Gibbons, Cardinal-elect; Archbishops Williams, of Boston; Ryan, of Philadelphia, and Elder, of Cincinnati. Archbishop Ryan's sermon was a masterpiece of eloquence.

National Live Stock Highway.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Senator Coke to-day, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the bill setting apart for ten years a tract of the public land in Colorado, two miles wide, as a national live stock highway.

The Dalton Habeas Corpus Case.

COLUMBUS, O., March 4.—The Supreme Court had an early session this morning and affirmed Judge Wylie's decision in the Dan Dalton habeas corpus case. Every Judge concurred, and the House Committee on Privileges and Elections are now more than ever anxious to fetch Dalton and return to the bar.

A Salesman Found Dead in Bed.

ST. LOUIS, MO., March 4.—John Pearson, a salesman, traveling for a number of New York firms, was found dead in bed this morning at the Lindell Hotel. A small bottle, partly filled with morphine pills, was found in his room, but it is generally believed that his death resulted from natural causes.

GAS EXPLOSION

At the Uniondale Coal Mine, Near Connellsville, Pa.,

By Which at Least Six Lives Were Suddenly Taken, and Sets on Fire the Mine in Which Were Twenty-three Men.

CONNELLSVILLE, PA., March 8.—Shortly afternoon to-day a series of explosions took place in the Uniondale mine at Dunbar, four miles from here, by which two men were killed and twelve others received injuries which will prove fatal in at least four cases. There were twenty-three men in the pit. The first explosion occurred about 12:30 this afternoon. It was a terrific shock and was followed by two others in quick succession a few minutes later. The first explosion caused the death of the two men and injured three. The rest ran toward the mouth of the pit, but before they reached it the other explosions occurred. The lights were blown out, the dust blinded the men and the passage-ways were blocked up and all escape cut off. The pit was on fire and a horrible death awaited the imprisoned miners. Nine of them, who had been working in another entry, managed to make their way out before the mouth of the pit was choked up. The force of the shock can be imagined, as it caused the men in Morrell, Calvin and Wheeler, the adjoining mines, to drop their tools and rush panic-stricken to the top. The ground rolled and quaked so that many fell down, and three or four in the Morrell mine were violently thrown against the walls and seriously injured. Everybody rushed toward the Uniondale mine. In a few moments an opening was made, and several rushed forward to enter the mine, but were repelled by a volume of flame. It took several minutes for the smoke and fire to clear away. The cries of pain and the moans of the injured were pitiable. They were lying in every direction, burned under masses of debris. Several of them were horribly burned. Their suffering were terrible. Twelve of them were found in a dying condition, two others were dead, mangled almost into an unrecognizable mess. The killed are: John Williams, trackman, aged forty-five years, wife and four children; Joseph Miner, aged fifty years, wife and nine children. Injured: Jacob Cope, aged fifteen years, burned internally and externally, can not live; Cal Martin, nineteen years, burned about the head and internally; can not live; Wm. Starling, colored, burned and internally injured, will probably die; Smally Martin, leg broken; Wm. Shaw, aged seventy years, dangerously burned; Isaac Frey, Peter Blunt, Hiram Higbe, Wm. Ross, Thomas Owen, Pitt Ross, Mal Hannan and Peter Kear. James M. Reid, one of the owners of the mine, attributes the explosion to fire-damp, which came from the Morrell mine belonging to the Cambria Iron Company.

HUNTING IN A CAVE.

Kansas Sportsmen Have a Huge Picnic With a Pack of Prairie Wolves.

LAWRENCE, KAN., March 8.—A day or two since a farmer living in the southern part of this county came into the city with the report that he had discovered a cave on his farm that was inhabited by prairie wolves, and from what he could find out they amounted to about 300. He had killed a few, but they would not come out, and he was afraid to enter the cave. Preparations were at once made to raid the den. A large party arrived at the place yesterday morning, and turning the dogs loose, one or two of them rushed into the cave, and were at once torn to pieces. A force of men then commenced operations, and in a short time had a hole into the cave back of the wolves. Two men entered and all the dogs that could be found, and then advanced on the rear of the mass of animals, who had by this time assembled in the front part of the cave. The dogs became frightened and beat a retreat, and the men, after firing a few shots, also got out. After an all-day skirmish, the hunters decided to make a dash and drive out their prey and kill as many as possible. All drew back out of sight from the front, and two men again entered in the rear. This time they succeeded in causing a stampede, and in a short time the cave was empty. The shooters did some good work, and by the time they were through about 100 wolves strewed the ground. The others escaped, and the party returned minus four dogs, but covered with glory. A grand hunt is proposed. It is supposed that the animals wintered in the cave.

THE KENTUCKY SITUATION.

Two Weeks Given the Legislature in Which to Remove the Convicts.

LOUISVILLE, March 8.—Four out of five companies of soldiers who are at the Greenwood mines in Pulaski County, Ky., to protect State property and the convicts against the threatened onslaught of the free miners, left for home to-day. The Lexington company and the Gatling gun still remain, but it is thought they will be ordered home in a few days. The free miners have promised not to molest the convicts, stating that they will give the Legislature that time to pass laws removing the convicts from the mines. The free miners are orderly, but determined, as the question is one of bread to them.

STARTING THE SPRING DRIVE.

Three Hundred Thousand Head of Texas Cattle Ready for the Trail.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., March 8.—Reports from the stock growing sections of Texas show great activity in the cattle industry. Preparations for the spring drive are complete and several herds will be started up the trail within the next ten days. Careful estimates show that the drive for 1886 will reach 300,000 head, and may, with fair prices and increasing demand, exceed that number. Prices for stock cattle vary, northwestern cattle yearlings being quoted at $12 per head and "twos" at $14, while in southwestern Texas yearlings sell at $7, and "twos" at $10 per head.

Death of Mrs. Horatio Seymour.

UTICA, N. Y., March 8.—Mary Bleeker, relict of Ex-Governor Horatio Seymour, died at the residence of Mrs. Roscoe Conkling at 8:30 to-day. The late governor removed Mrs. Seymour from his country home to Mrs. Conkling's on account of her illness, and while attending her was attacked with his fatal illness.

A New Political Party.

DECATUR, ILL., March 8.—At a meeting of the Knights of Labor here to-day, a new National political party was formed, to be known as the United Labor Party of America.

—Experienced lumbermen have always held that timber cut in the spring was not durable for building purposes. Recent scientific investigations sustain this belief. It is shown that the richer the wood is in phosphoric acid and potassium the more likely it is to rot and mold; wood cut in the spring contains eight times as much of the former and five times as much of the latter as when cut in the winter.—Montreal Witness.

—A clairvoyant of Butte, M. T., has brought a fifteen thousand dollar suit against the city because she twisted her ankle in a hole in the sidewalk. The authorities reply that if she is a professional seer, she ought to have seen the hole, but that she will never see the fifteen thousand dollars.

—A Pennsylvania woman deserted her husband and then brought suit against him for failure to support her. And yet women think they are abridged in their rights.—Philadelphia Press.

—Numbers of people speak of the popular and expressive word "crank" as a slang expression. But it is a legitimate term found in the dictionary, with its definition.—Chicago Times.

ABUSING SOLDIERS' ORPHANS.

Shocking State of Affairs at the Mt. Joy (Pa.) Orphans' School.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—Special dispatches from Harrisburg, Pa., give a painful account of the shocking abuses found by the Governor of the State at the Mt. Joy Soldiers' Orphan School. The story of the boys is a sad one. At the investigation a sickly-looking boy named Smith testified that he had not been supplied with clean stockings for two months, and when, at the request of the Governor, he took off his shoes, his stockings were found to be mere rags. The Governor ordered new stockings to be brought for the boys, and they put them on. It was also discovered that the little blue cotton shirts the orphans wore were used for weeks before washing, and they not only wore them in day-time, but also slept in them at night. Manager Kreider, who has had charge of the school for a short time, when asked to give some idea of the cost of running the institution, produced bills which showed the average cost of board per day for each scholar to be 13 1-5 cents. The investigators were accompanied to-day by two members of Post 58, G. A. R., of Harrisburg. The Governor and party to-day visited the bath room. In the little room, ten feet square, they found sixteen boys huddled together, and the miniature bath-tub was packed with boys like sardines. As the little fellows clambered out of the bath-tub they either had to dry themselves on wet towels or huddle shivering around the hot boiler until they were dried. Among the number were boys with scrofulous diseases, and all wiped on the same towels. The members of the Grand Army from this city secured the socks taken from the boy Smith, and brought them here. Smith's father was formerly Commander of the Grand Army Post in this city. Manager Kreider was asked about the boys' religious instructions. He said they got some, but he did not know about the girls, who were cared for by the matrons. Thomas Barry, a little Harrisburg boy, was wearing a shirt he put on December 23, and had worn it day and night ever since. His coat and vest he got from home, because the school gave him none. At one time during the examination Attorney General Cassidy was so overcome that tears filled his eyes. The investigation will be continued Monday.

MORMON WOMEN.

The Female Portion of the Saints Uphold the Doctrine.

SALT LAKE, UTAH, March 7.—A large meeting of Mormon women was held in the theater yesterday till a late hour. Many speeches were made and a protest adopted. The speech to uphold the right of women to go into polygamy said that thousands of women in the east, now in prostitution, would be glad to be made wives such as the speakers were. It was maintained that the Government here had no right to say women shall not marry. It might as well take the opposite course, and compel virgins from cloisters to marry. Such social preferences should be respected. The Government had no right to interfere. The protest declared that womanhood had been outraged in the Utah courts in questions about expected maternity, fathers of children, etc. Suffrage was declared to be a vested right in women here not to be attacked. An emphatic denial was made that they voted otherwise than according to their free will. "Noble women" who had refused to answer questions propounded by the courts were eulogized, and the action of Judge Zane and U. S. Attorney Dickson in requiring testimony from a legal wife against her husband in unlawful cohabitation cases, was condemned. The wives and mothers of the United States were called upon to come to the assistance of the women of Utah in their resistance to interference with their rights. A committee was appointed to memorialize the President on the subject.

The Millers.

PORTLAND, OREGON, March 7.—Mrs. Miller, mother of Joaquin Miller, who two years ago married a boy 20 years old and was deserted by him, obtained a divorce at the last term of court. On Friday she married again at Eugene, Lane County, the groom being a young man named Kline.

NEW YORK, March 6.—Arthur L. Mackayo was to-day granted a divorce from Maud Miller-Mackaye-McCormick, the daughter of the poet Joaquin Miller. The case will be recalled as of interest recently in Chicago and this city.

Government Tea Farm in a Bad Plight.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—Commissioner Colman, of the Department of Agriculture, has quite an unfavorable report upon the Government tea farm at Summerville, South Carolina. Vardell, the superintendent, writes him that the severe winter and protracted cold weather have stripped the tea plants of their foliage. He says that he thinks some varieties are dead to the root. The Commissioner is of the opinion that the experimental tea farm had better be abandoned.

A Minister Found Dead.

PITTSBURGH, PA., March 6.—Rev. J. R. W. Sloane, D. D., professor of theology of the Reformed Theological Seminary, Allegheny City, and well known throughout the country, was found dead in bed this morning. Dr. Sloane was formerly president of Geneva College, at Northwood, O., and for twelve years officiated as pastor of the Twenty-third Street (New York) Reformed Presbyterian Church. Death is supposed to have resulted from heart disease.

Convict Miners.

LOUISVILLE, KY., March 7.—Several hundred citizens of Pulaski County, Ky., gathered at the Greenwood coal mines and informed the superintendent of the convicts employed there that he would be allowed two hours to take the convicts and property away as they intended to burn all the buildings in the camp. After a parley they consented to allow him two days for consideration. Governor Knott has ordered several companies of militia to the scene of the trouble.

Travelers Attacked by Indians.

TOMBSTONE, ARIZ., March 7.—News is received here to-night that a band of thirty Apaches attacked a party of travelers fifteen miles southwest of Nocosari, Sonora, Mexico, killing one Mexican named Zess. The Indians, who it is believed belong to Geronimo's band, then proceeded to William Brown's mine, where McKerton was killed last September, and killed Brown and his companion, James Moser. The band then started south and camped one mile south of San Pedro, where they stole eighty horses belonging to settlers, and went in the direction of the Sierra Madre Mountains.

Knights of the Switch Arrested.

WABASH, IND., March 7.—Eight men of the number who attacked the house of Reuben Swonk, at North Manchester, dragged him out and whipped him nearly to death, on Thursday night, were arrested to-day by Sheriff Walter, and all gave bond for their appearance in the Circuit Court. About fifteen more arrests will be made.

A Severe Earthquake in Italy.

ROME, March 7.—An earthquake has occurred at the city of Cosenza, in Southern Italy. The shock was so severe that a number of houses were thrown down. One person was killed and several were injured.

Terrible Accident to Three Men.

WHEELING, W. VA., March 7.—Charley Bolton, aged seventeen, was instantly killed; Clem Bolton, his father, had his skull broken, and may die, and Thomas Shary, a neighbor, had one arm and two ribs broken by the fall of a tree the men were felling in Barbour County yesterday.

Mistook His Daughter for a Burglar.

PHILADELPHIA, March 6.—Charles C. Marple, a florist living in Gloucester, N. J., shot his daughter yesterday morning, mistaking her for a burglar. The wound is very serious. Miss Mary Marple, the victim, is a pretty and intelligent girl, twenty years of age.

XLIXTH CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, March 2.—SENATE.—A number of petitions were presented, including one from the employes in the Government workshops, praying for compensation for extra time over eight hours. Mr. Edmunds reported adversely the bill providing for the gathering of marriage and divorce statistics. The House bill to increase the pensions of soldiers' widows was reported with an amendment to increase the pensions of minor children to four dollars per month. The Educational bill was taken up, and Mr. Call made a speech against the Allison amendment. He was followed by Mr. Saulsbury, Mr. Berry, Mr. Riddleberger and Mr. Blair. The amendment was favored by Messrs. Edmunds, Ingalls and Logan.

HOUSE.—The Committee on Invalid Pensions reported the bill extending until January 1, 1888, the time for filing application for arrears. The consular and diplomatic appropriation bill was reported. A reply of the Secretary of the Treasury to the Bland resolution calling for information in regard to the circulation of standard dollars, was referred to the Committee on Coinage. The pension appropriation bill was taken up. Messrs. Townsend and Cannon spoke. Mr. Wilson, of West Virginia, replied to the recent speech of Mr. Henderson, of Iowa. He was followed by Mr. Butterworth.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—SENATE.—The Chair laid before that body the President's message on the treatment of Chinese, with other messages relating to the Indians. A resolution was agreed to calling for a detailed statement of payments into the sinking funds since 1877. A report by each Senator, to be made on Monday next, of the name of his private secretary, was called for by a resolution, which the Senate adopted. The educational bill was discussed by Messrs. Harrison, Edmunds, Hoar, Logan and Plumb. An amendment offered by Senator Dolph was rejected. At 4:50 p. m. the Senate went into executive session, and at 5:50 p. m. adjourned, having confirmed Collector Hedden at New York and several postmasters.

HOUSE.—The President's message on the Chinese trouble was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The Committee on Agriculture reported a bill to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with colleges established in the several States. The Pension Bureau investigation resolution was reported and placed on the House calendar. Consideration was resumed of the bill authorizing the appointment of a commission to carry on tests of iron and steel, but the morning hour expired before action was taken. Debate on the pension appropriation bill was then continued. Butterworth, (O.), Norwood, (Ga.), Breckinridge, (Ky.) and Brown, (Ind.), spoke, and at 4:55 p. m. the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—SENATE.—Executive communications were received and referred. A bill was passed to accept the Grant mementoes from Mrs. Grant and W. H. Vanderbilt. The Fitz John Porter bill was reported. Mr. Riddleberger explained his remarks of yesterday in regard to private secretaries. Mr. Logan gave notice he would call up the bill to increase the efficiency of the army. The educational bill was taken up. Speeches were made by Harrison, Blair, Gibson, Logan. An amendment by Logan appropriating two million dollars to build school houses in sparsely settled localities was adopted. At 4:10 p. m. the Senate adjourned to give Senators an opportunity to attend Mrs. Hawley's funeral.

HOUSE—Executive communications recommending appropriations were referred. Mr. Crisp, of Georgia, made a minority report against the Eads ship railway bill. A bill to promote agriculture was reported. After speeches by Grosvenor, Rogers, Reagan, Cabell, Springer, Ryan, Burrows, Henderson, Warner, Hammond, Goff and Anderson, the pension appropriation bill was passed, Bennett, of North Carolina, casting the only vote in the negative. The House adjourned at 7:15 p. m.

WASHINGTON, March 5.—SENATE.—A number of petitions were presented and referred. A resolution was agreed to calling upon the Secretary of the Navy for certain information in regard to the Dolphin and other cruisers. The educational bill was taken up and amended in several particulars. Messrs. Edmunds, Plumb, Blair, Call, Hoar, Teller and Chase took part in the discussion and the bill was finally passed by a vote of 36 to 11. The bill, as it passed the Senate, provides that for eight years after its passage there shall be annually appropriated from the Treasury the following sums in aid of common school education in the States and Territories and District of Columbia and Alaska: The first year $7,000,000, the second year $10,000,000, the third year $15,000,000, the fourth year $13,000,000, the fifth year $11,000,000, the sixth year $9,000,000, the seventh year $7,000,000 and the eighth year $5,000,000, making $77,000,000.

HOUSE.—The Urgency Deficiency bill, which appropriates $634,452, was taken up after a call for reports of a private character. After considerable debate the bill was passed by a vote of 227 to 20. The private calendar was then reached, and two small bills passed. At 4:30 a recess was taken until 7:30 p. m. At the night session fifty pension bills were passed, and the House adjourned at 9:10 p. m.

WASHINGTON, March 6.—SENATE—Not in session.

HOUSE.—The proceedings of the House were without interest, being for general debate only.

WASHINGTON, March 8.—SENATE.—The names of Senators' private secretaries were given in a letter from the Secretary of the Senate. Petitions were presented from the Knights of Labor favoring internal improvements. Mr. Vance offered a resolution for the report of the bill repealing the civil service law. An inquiry was directed into the condition of the record of the war, and the expenditure necessary to place them in proper condition. Mr. Bowen addressed the Senate by unanimous consent, on the subject of his bill to provide a new basis for the circulation of National banks. At 3:20 p. m. Mr. Bowen concluded, and upon the announcement of the death of Senator Miller, of California, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—Thos. R. Rudd, member elect in place of the late Joseph Rankin, of the Fifth Wisconsin District, was sworn in. Mr. Blanchard, of Louisiana, denied that he had anything to do with the withdrawal of Major Merrill's nomination for promotion in the army. Under the call of States a large number of bills were introduced. The inter-State commerce bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce. A bill was passed increasing the limit of cost to $500,000 on the public building at Rochester, N. Y. Resolutions of respect to the memory of Senator Miller, of California, were offered, and at 4:05 p. m. the House adjourned.

Proceedings of the Legislature.

FRANKFORT, March 1.—SENATE.—Bills passed: Incorporating the Ohio Valley Telephone Company. Giving sheriffs and ex-sheriffs two years further time to collect uncollected taxes and fee bills. Fixing the boundary line between Hart and Larue Counties. To permit Garrard County to issue bonds for certain purposes. To provide for funding of the debt of Harrison County. For the government of mass-meetings and political conventions in Kenton County. Authorizing city of Bowling Green to erect and maintain a system of electric lights. Amending charter of city of Louisville relating to privileges of policemen—preventing them from discussing the merits of candidates for office.

HOUSE.—Bills passed: To provide for holding two additional terms of the Christian Circuit Court. To provide for registration of voters in the city of Lexington. To amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the pay of Commonwealth witnesses in felony cases and regulating the manner of claiming attendance." To incorporate the Trotters' and Breeders' Association of Mason County. Senate bill incorporating the People's Bank of Fulton. Senate Bill to incorporate Frankfort Water Company. For the benefit of Stony Point and Seamansville Turnpike road in Bourbon County. To incorporate the Lexington Industrial School. To prohibit the sale of spirituous, vinous and malt liquors in the county of Larue.

FRANKFORT, March 2.—SENATE.—Bills passed: Incorporating the Hartford Railroad Company; House bill giving the sheriff of Letcher County until the first Monday in May to execute his official bond; House bill amending an act to establish the county of Knott; House bill amending an act apportioning the State into congressional districts, by putting Knott County into the Tenth District, for the benefit of Common School District No. 37, in Boyd County; to regulate continuances in criminal and penal cases. Senator Alford, of Lexington, asked leave to introduce a bill to provide for the removal of the State Capital from Frankfort.

HOUSE.—The bill incorporating the Economic Heating Company, of Louisville, giving it the exclusive right to sell and vend natural gas for ten years in the city of Louisville was reported. The company wanted thirty years but the committee reported in favor of only ten. The Hewitt revenue bill was then reported by the committee and an attempt was made to postpone its consideration till next week, but enough dilatory motions were made to prevent a vote until the hour of adjournment arrived. It comes up to-morrow as unfinished business.

FRANKFORT, March 3.—SENATE.—Bills passed: Incorporating the Illinois and Paducah Bridge Company; to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Larue County; prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within one mile of Park, in Barren County.

HOUSE.—Bills introduced: Amending section 16, article 1, of chapter 61 of general statutes, so that jailers may be compensated for the fuel necessary for prison purposes; giving the County and Circuit Court Clerks the further time of two years to collect their fee bills; to require railroad companies to have and keep recorded in each county the name of its chief officer or agent in that county, upon which summons may be served.

FRANKFORT, March 4.—SENATE.—Mr. Gilbert called up a joint resolution from the Committee on Banks and Insurance, calling for information from the Governor as to whether they make monthly reports, as required by law. It was adopted. The Senate then took up and passed the bill giving ten years further time to sheriffs, ex-sheriffs and constables to collect taxes and fee bills. The report of the State Geologist was presented and referred to the Committee on Public Expenditures. Mr. Feland offered a joint resolution looking to a final adjournment on April 1. Mr. Bryse's resolution to suspend the rules and take up the resolution was defeated, and it consequently lies over one day. The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE.—Representatives Thomas and Jackson had a few words this morning over a remark made in a speech by Mr. Thomas. Things looked warlike for some time, but white winged peace finally spread her wings over the threatened battlefield, and all was serene. Mr. Owens introduced his first bill this session, entitled: An act regulating the exemption of personal property from execution, attachment, distress, for rent and fee bills in this Commonwealth. The remainder of the session was devoted to local bills.

FRANKFORT, March 5.—SENATE—Bills passed: Authorizing the Boyle County Court to levy an ad valorem tax to pay ordinary expenses; to authorize the trustees of the city of Stanford to issue bonds to pay off outstanding indebtedness, and buy street lamps; the resolution to remove the capital was made special order for next Friday. It was favorably reported by the Committee on Appropriations; the Senate did nothing of any importance, and adjourned at half-past 1 o'clock.

HOUSE.—Mr. Bobbitt offered the following resolution: "Whereas, It appears from reliable information which struck this House like a cold wave from the frozen zone of poverty that the bottom of the State Treasury has been reached, and that our poor old pauper mother can not pay her day laborers, and, whereas, she protected us in our infancy; therefore, be it resolved, that we will not desert her in distress, but will continue to serve without compensation, and will remain in session until the autumnal insects shall plaintively predict our approaching fall." The first bill in the order of the day was an act to prohibit the sale of liquor in Carter County, which called forth a torrent of oratory. Finally Mr. Mulligan got the floor, and called attention to the outrageous provisions of the bill. He said it allowed a hotel-keeper to be convicted and fined without ever being arrested or summoned. "If we pass this bill it will be the apex in the monument of our absurdities. It will be a solemn acknowledgment that we are incapable of taking care of ourselves, much less making laws for others. After half an hour spent in filibustering, the bill was passed and the House adjourned.

REFUSES TO COMPLY.

The President's Reply to the Senate's Demands

For Papers Relating to Suspensions From Office.

WASHINGTON, March 1.—The President sent a special message to the Senate to-day in regard to its demands for papers, in which he takes the ground that papers relating to suspensions from office are not official papers, and consequently he does not feel justified in sending copies of them to the Senate. The following is the message:

To the Senate of the United States—Ever since the beginning of the present session of the Senate the different heads of departments attached to the Executive branch of the Government have been plied with various requests and demands from committees of the Senate, from members of such committees, and at last from the Senate itself, requiring the transmission of reasons for the suspension of certain officials during the recess of that body, or for the papers touching the conduct of such officials, or for all papers and documents relating to such suspensions, or for all documents and papers filed in such departments in relation to the management and conduct of the offices held by such suspended officials. The different terms from time to time adopted in making these requests and demands, the order in which they succeeded each other, and the fact that when made by the Senate the resolution for that purpose was passed in executive session, have led to a presumption, the correctness of which, I suppose will be candidly admitted, that from first to last the information thus sought and the papers thus demanded were for use by the Senate and its committees in considering the propriety of the suspensions referred to.

Though these suspensions are my executive acts, based upon considerations addressed to me alone, and for which I am wholly responsible, I have had no invitation from the Senate to state the position which I have felt constrained to assume in relation to the same or to interpret for myself my acts or motives in the premises.

In this condition of affairs I have foreborne addressing the Senate upon the subject lest I might be accused of thrusting myself unbidden upon the attention of that body.

But the report of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, lately presented and published, which censures the Attorney-General of the United States for his refusal to transmit certain papers relating to a suspension from office, and which also, if I correctly interpret it, evinces a misapprehension of the position of the Executive upon the question of such suspensions, will, I hope, justify this communication.

[The President refers to the resolution of the Senate calling for the Dustin papers and the reply of the Attorney-General thereto, and says:]

Upon this resolution and the answer thereto the issue is thus stated by the Committee on the Judiciary at the outset of the report: "The important question, then, is whether it is within the constitutional competence of either House of Congress to have access to the official papers and documents in the various public offices of the United States created by laws enacted by themselves."

I do not suppose that "the public offices of the United States" are regulated or controlled in their relations to either House of Congress by the fact that they were "created by laws enacted by themselves." It must be that these instrumentalities were created for the benefit of the people and to answer the general purposes of Government under the constitution and the laws, and that they are unincumbered by any lien in favor of either branch of Congress growing out of their construction, and unembarrassed by any obligation to the Senate as to the pride of their creation. The complaint of the committee that access to official papers in the public offices is denied the Senate is met by the statement that at no time has it been the disposition or the intention of the President or any department of the Executive branch of the Government to withhold from the Senate official documents or papers filed in any of the public offices. While it is by no means conceded that the Senate has the right in any case to review the act of the Executive in removing or suspending a public officer upon official documents, or otherwise, it is considered that documents and papers of that nature should, because they are official, be freely transmitted to the Senate upon its demand, trusting the use of the same for proper and legitimate purposes to the good faith of that body. And, though no such paper or document has been specifically demanded in any of the numerous requests and demands made upon the departments, yet as often as they were found in the public offices they have been furnished in answer to such applications.

The letter of the Attorney-General in response to the resolution of the Senate in the particular case mentioned in the committee's report was written at my suggestion and by my direction. There had been no official paper or documents filed in his department relating to the case within the period specified in the resolution. The latter was intended, by its description of the papers and documents remaining in the custody of the department, to convey the idea that they were not official; and it was assumed that the resolution called for information, paper and documents of the same character, as were required by the requests and demands which preceded it. Every thing that had been written or done on behalf of the Senate from the beginning pointed to all letters and papers of a private and unofficial nature as the objects of search, if they were to be found in the departments, and provided they had been presented to the Executive with a view to their consideration upon the question of suspension from office.

Against the transmission of such papers and documents I have interposed my advice and direction. This has not been done, as is suggested in the committee's report, upon the assumption on my part that the Attorney General, or any other head of a department, is the servant of the President, and is to give or withhold copies of documents in his office according to the will of the Executive and not otherwise, but because I regard the papers and documents withheld and addressed to me or intended for my use and action purely unofficial and private, not infrequently confidential, and having reference to the performance of a duty exclusively mine. I consider them in no proper sense as upon the files of the department, but as deposited there for my convenience, remaining still completely under my control. I suppose if I desired to take them into my custody I might do so with entire propriety, and if I saw fit to destroy them no one could complain. The papers and documents that are now the objects of the Senate's quest consist of letters and representations addressed to the Executive or intended for his inspection; they are voluntarily written and presented by private citizens, who are not in the least instigated thereto by any official invitation, or at all subject to official control. While some of them are entitled to Executive consideration, many of them are so irrelevant, or in the light of other facts so worthless, that they have not been given the least weight in determining the question to which they are supposed to relate.

Are all these, simply because they are preserved, to be considered official documents and subject to the inspection of the Senate? If not, who is to determine which belong to this class? Are the motives and purposes of the Senate, as they are day by day developed, such as would be satisfied with my selection? Am I to submit to theirs at the risk of being charged with making a suspension from office upon evidence which was not even considered?

Are these papers to be regarded official because they have not only been presented but preserved in the public offices? Their nature and character remain the same, whether they are kept in the Executive Mansion or deposited in the departments. There is no mysterious power or transmutation in departmental custody, nor is there magic in the undefined and sacred solemnity of department files. If the presence of these papers in the public offices is a stumbling block in the way of the performance of Senatorial duty it can be easily removed.

The papers and documents which have been described derive no official character from any constitutional, statutory or other requirements making them necessary to the performance of the official duty of the Executive.

It will not be denied, I suppose, that the President may suspend a public officer in the entire absence of any papers or documents to aid his official judgment and discrimination. And I am quite prepared to avow that the cases are not few in which suspensions from office have depended more upon moral representations made to me by citizens of known good repute and by members of the House of Representatives and Senators of the United States than upon any letters and documents presented for my examination. I have not felt justified in suspecting the veracity, integrity and patriotism of Senators, or ignoring their representations, because they were not in party affiliation with the majority of their associates, and I recall a few suspensions which bear the approval of individual members identified politically with the majority in the Senate.

While, therefore, I am constrained to deny the rights of the Senate to papers and documents described, so far as the right to the same is based upon the claim that they are in any view of the subject official, I am also led unequivocally to dispute the right of the Senate, by the aid of any documents whatever, or in any way save through the judicial progress of trial or impeachment, to review or reverse the act of the Executive in the suspension during the recess of the Senate of Federal officials. I believe the power to remove or suspend such officials is vested in the President alone by the Constitution, which, in express terms provides that "the executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America," and that "he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed."

The Senate belongs to the legislative branch of the Government. When the Constitution by express provision, superadded to its legislative duties the right to advise and consent to appointments to office and to sit as a court of impeachment, it conferred upon that body all the control and regulation of executive action supposed to be necessary for the safety of the people, and this express and special grant of such extraordinary powers, not in any way related to or growing out of general Senatorial duty, and in itself a departure from the general plan of our Government, should be held under a familiar maxim of construction to exclude every other right of interference with Executive functions.

In the first Congress which assembled after the adoption of the Constitution, comprising many who aided in its preparation, a legislative construction was given to that instrument in which the independence of the Executive in the matter of removals from office was fully sustained. I think it will be found in the subsequent discussions of this question there was generally, if not at all times, a proposition pending to in some way curtail this power of the President by legislation, which furnishes evidence that to limit such power it was supposed to be necessary to supplement the Constitution by such legislation.

The first enactment of this description was passed under a stress of partisanship and political bitterness which culminated in the President's impeachment. This law provided that the federal officers to which it applied could only be suspended during the recess of the Senate, when shown by evidence satisfactory to the President to be guilty of misconduct in office, or crime, or when incapable or disqualified to perform their duties, and that within twenty days of the next meeting of the Senate it should be the duty of the President "to report to the Senate such suspension, with the evidence and reason for his action in the case." This statute, passed in 1867, when Congress was overwhelmingly and bitterly opposed politically to the President, may be regarded as an indication that even then it was thought necessary by a Congress determined upon the subjugation of the Executive to legislative will to furnish itself a law for that purpose instead of attempting to reach the object intended by an invocation of any pretended constitutional right.

The law which thus found its way to our statute book was plain in its terms, and its intent needed no avowal. If valid and now in operation, it would justify the present Senate and command the obedience of the Executive to its demands. It may, however, be remarked in passing, that under this law, the President has the privilege of presenting to the body which assumed to review his executive acts his reasons there or, instead of being excluded from explanation or judged by papers found in the department.

Two years after the law of 1867 was passed, and within less than five weeks after the inauguration of a President in political accord with both branches of Congress, the sections of the act regulating suspensions from office during the recess of the Senate were entirely repealed, and in their place were substituted provisions which, instead of limiting the causes of suspension to misconduct, crime, disability or disqualification, expressly permitted such suspension by the President "in his discretion," and completely abandoned the requirement obliging him to report to the Senate "the evidence and reasons" for his actions.

With these modifications, and with all branches of the Government in political harmony, and in the absence of partisan incentive to captious obstruction, the law as it was left by the amendment of 1869 was much less destructive of executive discretion. And yet the great general and patriotic citizen who, on the 4th day of March, 1869, assumed the duties of Chief Executive, and for whose freer administration of his high office the most hateful restraints of the law of 1867 were, on the 5th day of April, 1869, removed, mindful of his obligation to defend and protect every prerogative of his great trust, and apprehensive of the injury threatened the public service in the continued operation of these statutes, even in their modified form, in his first message to Congress advised their repeal, and set forth their unconstitutional character and hurtful tendency. I am unable to state whether or not this recommendation for a repeal of these laws has since been repeated. If it has not, the reason can probably be found in the experience which demonstrated the fact that the necessities of the political situation but rarely developed their vicious character.

And so it happens that after an existence of nearly twenty years of almost innocuous desuetude, these laws are brought forth, apparently the repealed as well as the unrepealed, and put in the way of an Executive who is willing, if permitted, to attempt an improvement in the methods of administration. The constitutionality of these laws is by no means admitted. But why should the provisions of the repealed law, which required specific cause for suspension and a report to the Senate of "evidence and reasons," be now, in effect, applied to the present Executive instead of the law, afterward passed and unrepealed, which distinctly permits suspensions by the President "in his discretion," and carefully omits the requirement that "evidence and reasons for his action in the case" shall be reported to the Senate?

The requests and demands which by the score have for nearly three months been presented to the different departments of the Government, whatever may be their form, have but one complexion. They assume the right of the Senate to sit in judgment upon the exercise of my exclusive discretion and Executive function, for which I am solely responsible to the people from whom I have so lately received the sacred trust of office. My oath to support and defend the Constitution, my duty to the people who have chosen me to execute the powers of their great office and not to relinquish them, and my duty to the Chief Magistracy which I must preserve unimpaired to all its dignity and vigor, compel me to refuse to comply with these demands.

To the end that the service may be improved the Senate is invited to the fullest scrutiny of the persons submitted to them for public office, in recognition of the constitutional power of that body to advise and consent to their appointment. I will continue, as I have thus far done, to furnish, at the request of the confirming body, all the information I possess touching the fitness of the nominees placed before them for their action, both when they are proposed to fill vacancies and take the place of suspended officers. Upon a refusal to confirm I shall not assume the right to ask the reasons for the action of the Senate, nor question its determination. I can not think that anything more is required to secure worthy incumbents in public office than a careful and independent discharge of our respective duties within their well defined limits. Though the propriety of suspensions might be better assured if the action of the President was subject to review by the Senate, yet if the Constitution and the laws have placed this responsibility upon the Executive branch of the Government it should not be divided nor the discretion which it involved relinquished.

It has been claimed that the present Executive, having pledged himself not to remove officials except for cause, the fact of their suspension implies such misconduct on the part of a suspended official as it injures his character and reputation, and therefore the Senate should review the case for his vindication.

I have said that certain officials should not, in my opinion, be removed during the continuance of the term for which they were appointed solely for the purpose of putting in their place those in political affiliation with the appointing power; and the declaration was immediately followed by a description of official partisanship which ought not to entitle those in whom it was exhibited to consideration. It is not apparent how an adherence to the course thus announced carries with it the consequences described. If in any degree the suggestion is worthy of consideration, it is to be hoped that there may be a defense against an unjust suspension in the justice of the Executive.

Every pledge which I have made by which I have placed a limitation upon my exercise of Executive power has been faithfully redeemed. Of course the pretense is not put forth that no mistakes have been committed; but not a suspension has been made except it appeared to my satisfaction that the public welfare would be improved thereby. Many applications for suspension have been denied and the adherence to the rule laid down to govern my actions as to such suspensions have caused much irritation and impatience on the part of those who have insisted upon more changes in the offices. The pledges I have made were made to the people and to them I am responsible for the manner in which they have been redeemed. I am not responsible to the Senate, and I am unwilling to submit my actions and official conduct to them for judgment. There are no grounds for an allegation that the fear of being found false to my professions influences me in declining to submit to the demands of the Senate. I have not constantly refused to suspend officials, and thus incurred the displeasure of political friends and willfully broken faith with the people for the sake of being false to them.

Neither the discontent of party friends nor the allurements constantly offered of confirmations of appointees, conditioned upon the avowal that suspensions have been made on party grounds alone, nor the threat proposed in the resolutions now before the Senate, that no confirmations will be made unless the demands of that body be complied with, are sufficient to discourage or deter me from following in the way which I am convinced leads to better government for the people.

Hon. Superintendent and Boone Co., Teachers' Association:

As I was deprived of the pleasure of meeting with you at your last two meetings and discharging the duties your request made obligatory upon me, I hope you may not consider it inapropos for me to adopt the present method of discharging, at least, in part those obligations. By reference to the programme for your meeting at Union, you will ascertain that the subject, "School houses in Kentucky compared with those of other States," was assigned me. If I had had any option in the matter, that subject would not have been assigned me, for, to deal impartially with it, will redound in placing the educational facilities of Kentucky in somewhat an unenviable position, as compared with our adjacent States, and it is unpleasant, very unpleasant with me to say any thing derogatory of home or of home surroundings; therefore I will be as concise as duty will allow.

Kentucky was admitted into the Union, as a State, in 1792, and in '84 she had 5,182 public school-houses, the valuation of which, together with their furniture, was $2,285 104, making the average valuation of each house and furniture, $369,90. And the average monthly salary of her male teachers was $21 75.

Ohio was admitted in the Union, February, 1801. In 1884 she had 12,264 public school-houses, which together with their sites and furniture, was worth $23.610,838 making an average value of $1,925 21. And she paid her male teachers an average monthly salary of $37.

Illinois was admitted in December 1818. In '84 she had 11,914 public school-houses, which with their sites and furniture, was valued at $17,995-000, making an average value of $1,-510 40. And paid her male teachers an average salary of $44 17 per month.

Missouri was admitted in 1821, in 1884 she had 8,537 public school-houses which, with their sites and furniture, were valued at $9,871,647 making an average valuation of $1,-157 50. And paid her male teachers an average salary of $44 per month.

I deem it unnecessary to make any further comparisons and will leave these facts for you to consider. Allow me to say that, notwithstanding these facts, I hope and reasonably hope, that the time is not very remote when we will more than ever feel proud of the title Kentucky School Teacher, and when we will be amply rewarded for the voluminous and grave duties that are required of us.

I cannot even meditate about the educational facilities of Kentucky without the greatest solicitude. The seeming indifference of parents as to the building, constructing and furnishing school-houses, so as to best secure the comfort and the development of the mental and physical powers of their children, is inexplicable; when, upon the other hand, they do not hesitate at the most lavish expenditures to adorn their form and features. Can it be, that, they consider the adornment of their form and features of more value, than the health and proper development of their mental, moral and physical powers? If there is one thing more marvelous to me than another, amid the many mysteries that surround the presence and potency of wrong in this world, it is the enthusiasm with which it is promulgated; it has the most fiery apostles, the most diligent missionaries and the most subtle advocates; it creates and circulates literature that blurs the commonsense and consciences of millions; it takes captive our greatest words and prostitutes them to false meanings. Liberty, right and duty have all served as banner cries for the most vile and base persons; they are to day serving as banner cries to many who seek to injure, if not destroy, Common Schools in Kentucky.

Nice school-houses, properly furnished, lighted and ventilated will accomplish much more than secure the comfort and protect the health of the pupils; they will aid in causeing them to appreciate the surroundings, in cultivating in their youthful minds a sensibility for the beautiful, and to perceive that those and all other beauties are scattered along their pathway through life by Divine Wisdom, as links of beauty and persuasive orators, to bind their hearts to nature and elevate their souls to God. The best education is that which gives the broadest reach to the mental vision and arouses most perfectly the activities of the mental and moral will and links them most closely to the spiritual nature from which they emanated. The work of every School Teacher is moral and intellectual, or it is a fraud upon society. It is the teacher's prerogative to inspire his pupils with lofty motives, to teach them obedience, to recognize authority, and how to obtain moral, mental and physical development.

I cannot get my consent to dismiss the subject without expressing an opinion, warranted by facts, that, marked progress has been made in Kentucky, in educational matters: but important however, as good school houses are, we cannot reasonably hope for very great or rapid improvement until our present school law is properly amended, until school trustees are made the lawful agents of their constituents: and they employ teachers soly upon business principles and no longer allow themselves to sacrifice qualifications and other considerations to cheapness, kinship and church relations.

Never before, in the history of our country, was such deep and general interest felt in the cause of free schools; I hope such interest will increase from year to year, and make itself felt in new laws and regulations, that the popular demand for general education will continue to grow and that the waves of agitation will refuse to be quieted until the consummation of a grand and efficient school system shall honor the name of Kentukky throughout the civilized world. Respectfully,

Wm. E. Clutterbuck.

Florence, Ky.

The following dispatch from Lexington, Ky., to the Cincinnati Enquirer is causing a good deal of comment among the people at Frankfort just now: "Senator Alford, from Fayette county, has introduced in the Legislature a bill to remove the seat of Government to Lexington. There is a quiet scheme on foot to bring the Capital here, backed by a majority of the Legislature. Lexington and Fayette county will donate $250,000 to secure it. The State Treasury is empty, and the State has borrowed all she can up to the constitutional limit, Well-informed legislators say a bid of that amount from Lexington will get the capital. Lexington and Fayette county have property worth $12,000,000, and can afford to make the bid, and they will do it. Lexington is the railroad center of the State, and easily accessible from all points.

As soon as the House was called to order last Friday, Mr. Bobbit offered the following:

Whereas, It appears from reliable information, which struck this House like a cold wave from the frozen zone of poverty, that the bottom of the State treasury has been reached, and that our poor old pauper mother can not pay her day laborers; and whereas, she protected us in our infancy: therefore, be it

Resolved, That we will not desert her in distress, but will continue to serve without compensation, and will remain in session until the autumnal insects shall plaintively predict our approaching fall.

The resolution was declared out of order by the Speaker.

The sale of Pierre Lorillard's race horses at his farm in New Jersey on the 27th ult., was the largest ever held in this country. Twenty-seven head brought $140,000, an average of $5,500 per head. The highest price was $29,000, brought by Dew Drop, a three-year-old filly by Falsetto, dam Explosion. She was bought by the Dwyer Bros., whose purchases amounted to $70,000 which they paid for five horses.

The Glasgow Times says that a Bourbon county dog, assisted by his colored owner, has caught since last fall twenty-five coons—'possums and polecats not counted. Among his trophies is the skin of an albino raccoon which he caught in the Sulphur Spring woods some weeks ago; the fur of this animal is very fine, and as white as cotton, except the stripes of the tail, which show a faint tinge of brown.

The collections from internal revenue during the first seven months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, amount to $65,878,117, which is $1,535,157 more than the collections during the corresponding period last year. There was an increase of $134,579 on spirits, an increase of $974,406 on tobacco, and an increase $496,941 on fermented liquors.

The President has appointed J. C. Mathews, a colored gentleman, of New York, to be Recorder of Deeds. This is the office which was held by Fred Douglas. There were quite a number of white applicants for this position, who have done yeoman service for the Democracy.

We are satisfied that among the many foolish acts of the present legislature the most foolish was the repeal of the Geological Survey law.—Owenton Democrat.

A representative requires all the panoply necessary to the grandeur of his station and the importance of his constituency. He considers a pass incense under the noses of the great people, without reference to his comfort or saving.—Paducah News.

If economy be the plea for this action, abolishing the Geological Survey, the Kentucky legislature should have voted a reduction of its salary one-half. One thing is certain, the Geological Survey has cost less and been more benefit than a dozen Kentucky State Senates.—Hazel Green Herald.

The State of Kentucky seems in a very bad way. The pleuro-pneumonia steal was vetoed by the Governor in the interest of the people, and in his veto message showed clearly its unconstitutionality. Notwithstanding this the Senate passed the bill over the Governor's veto. What do they care for consitution? What do they care for the rights of the people?—Paducah Standard.

THE
COMBINATION FENCE

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six foot at Burlington.

Joe Acra moved last week to Henry Clore's farm on Middle Creek.

Mr. Allen Conner, of Florence, has been quite sick for several days.

Prof. Whitehead commenced school in the Morgan Academy, Monday.

The roads were in good condition for moving last week—little rough.

Mrs. Benj. Sandford has a loom up and is now prepared to weave carpets.

J. M. Conner expects to have a good saddle stallion at this place this season.

Attorney Dorsey and Mrs. Rinehart, of Cincinnati, were in Burlington Sunday.

John I. Bruce has been confined to his house with sickness for several days.

Sam Jones says if the people would quit lying the lawyers would starve to death.

The little boy, the big boy and the grown men, may be daily seen playing marbles.

Jo C. Revill now occupies the property he purchased of Mr. Winston in Burlington.

There will be preaching at the Universalist church, Sunday morning at the usual hour.

Mr. A. G. Winston and family moved last week into their elegant residence near Hebron.

Mrs. Julia Elstun, of near Union, was the guest of her sisters at this place, last Thursday and Friday.

The first of this month only shows what delightful weather March can provide when so disposed.

A very large portion of last year's crop of tobacco raised in the lower end of th s county remains unsold.

Johnny Palmer is quite lame, the result of an injury received by a horseshoe nail being driven into the cap of his knee.

Mason Minor and wife, of Lawrenceburg, Indiana, were visiting relatives in this neighborhood the latter part of last week.

Georgie Terrill, son of Simeon Terrill, of Big Bone, is boarding at Dr. Grant's, and attending school at Mrs Saxton's.

To keep abreast with their work many of those who will cultivate tobacco this year were busy preparing and burning plant beds last week.

WANTED—1,000 men with 40 cents each to buy a pound of Liggett & Myer's, best Star Tobacco, at B. F. ZIMMERS, Constance, Boone County, Ky.

We understand that C. K. Gibson, of Michigan, has been employed to preach for the Universalist church, at this place, and will move his family to our town.

County Clerk has issued since the first of the year fifteen marriage license. Which will be the means of starting thirty persons down the road of double happiness.

We understand that Mark Collins has opened a restaurant in Covington, and would be glad to see the people of Boone county when in that place. We wish you success Mark.

Mr. Frank Sayer, of Florence, made us a very pleasant call last Saturday, and while here added another name to our subscription list. Frank has got to be quite a stenographer.

Rev. Fullilove, occupied the pulpit in the Baptist church at this place, Sunday morning and evening. The third Saturday in next month is the day set for ordaining the deacons of the church.

In the list of claims of sheep killed by dogs, F. M. Howlett's name appeared in the list for $30, when it should have been M. E. Hance. We put it according to copy, and the mistake was made in copying the list.

Remember that Geo. Huschart & Co. of Lawrenceburg, Indiana, can always give satisfaction both as to price and style of work, so when you want to buy a tombstone or a monument go to their yard or call on John Beall, of Hebron, Ky., their agent.

The largest crowd that was ever at a public sale attended John W. Gaines, sale last Thursday. Mr. Gaines prepared dinner for the crowd, and everybody had plenty to eat, and there was enough left to feed a great many more. Things sold brought very good prices.

The Harrodsburg Democrat says: The family of W. Crigler, from Carlisle, arrived Wednesday, and have moved into the house recently purchased of Mr. A. G. Vivion. Crigler's new store is the place you are looking for." Mr. C. was formerly a citizen of Florence, this county.

Before the Legislature adjourns we are going to try and have a "cat bill" passed, prohibiting cats from running at large. We honestly believe every cat in town was at our house night before last, and we are the loser of a good nights rest thereby. We hope the next meeting of the convention will be held in another end of town.

Last Thursday morning about 10 o'clock, the public school building at Lawrenceburg, Ind., containing 1,100 pupils, mostly small children, caught fire and damaged the building to the extent of $3,000. Fortunately no lives were lost, but great excitement prevailed, and parents became almost wild, and rushed frantically to the burning building. The board of trustees met as soon as the fire had been suppressed and made arrangements to continue the school. The property was fully covered by insurance.

Last Thursday evening between the hours 3 and 4 o'clock the residence of Mrs. Cloud, widow of Wm Cloud, near Hebron, was the scene of a double wedding, at which time her daughter, Miss Mary B. was united in marriage to Mr. Ab H Quick. Also at the same time the groom's sister, Miss Bertha Quick, was married to Mr. Jas. A. Barlow, of the Gunpowder neighborhood. The ceremony was performed by Elder E. Stephens in the presence of a few friends and relatives. The contracting parties have the best wishes of the RECORDER in their new undertaking.

About 20 men and boys and as many tin pans, horns and other noisy instruments, assembled at the residence of Owen Aylor, near Limaburg, last Friday night and charivaried Ab Quick and Jim Barlow and their brides. After letting the boys have as much fun on the outside as they wanted, and making themselves hoarse, Ab went to the door, invited the crowd in the house, passed around the cigars, which he had secured for the occasion, and invited them to be seated, after which banjo solos and comic songs were produced by Profs. Kupp and Mundo, and the boys after congratulating the happy couples, left for their homes, well pleased with the evening's fun. Ab knows how to entertain a crowd of that kind, as he had been the captain of the same company in just such battles.

The Fair Grounds will be the scene of many lively trotting matinees during the coming season, and already half of the box stalls have been engaged by trainers who handle long strings of fast horses. Sam Cooper of Cleves, will occupy ten stalls, and among the flyers he brings will be several of national reputation. William O'Brien, of Covington, has made arrangements for a number of runners that have wintered at Latonia. Walker & Burge have four trotters that can make 2:40 appear slow. Norris and Grant, the most liberal patrons of the turf in Boone county, will occupy a number of stalls, according to their usual custom; and Charley Cole will make his best efforts in sustaining Dearborn county's reputation. It is evident that the interest that is being manifested among our local horse men is greater than ever before, and the result will be a booming big Fair next fall. Lawrenceburg never takes a back seat when it comes to holding a successful Fair.—Register.

Corn Show.

To the Farmers of Kentucky:

With the view of directing the attention of the farmers of Kentucky where to obtain Seed Corn of the best varieties grown in the State, the Annual Corn Show will be held at this office on the 24th day of March, 1886.

The following premiums will be awarded: First and second premiums at $15, and $10 each for the following varieties, viz: White Corn; Yellow Corn; Bread Corn; Pied or Mixed Corn. A premium of $15 for the best sample of Hominy and Cattle Corn, each. Each sample must be sent in a separate package, marked with the name of the exhibitor and the name of the variety, and the package may be sent by freight at the charge of this office. Each sample must contain not less than 30 ears. The weather has been so extremely cold that it is questionable how far the corn germs have been affected by it. Too much caution therefore cannot be exercised in the selection of seed corn. It is my purpose to purchase about 75 bushels of the premium corn for distribution through the members of the Legislature in the various counties.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

MCVILLE.

Pleasant Valley school closed on the 15th ult., with the usual interest manifested by the education—loving patrons, who spread a tempting and bountiful dinner for all who were present, for which we can only express our warmest gratitude. As it afforded not only temperal feast, but one of gladness and social feeling. And such a feast is a joy forever!

The following is a part of the report which may be of interest to the school patrons: Number enrolled, 37; highest number in attendance, 35, lowest number in attendance, 18; general average 29; per cent of attendance, 74, number absent on account of neglect of parents 19.

I am well pleased with the above reports, with the exception of the last item. Now dear friends, there is no subject relating to the welfare of our social condition for which we should show a greater solicitude than popular education. If 37 per cent of your children of school age grow up in illiteracy, it is sufficient to cause for free education to fall far short of its purpose. Besides being a public duty as a citizen of the State, and a member of your own community, it is a most binding obligation, which every parent owes to his child. In these days, of advantages, those who do not educate must serve.

"The education of everyone is essential to the well being of all, and the resources of all should provide instruction for each and every one." I appeal to your manhood to arouse to duty. Ask your trustees to levy a tax, support them in the act, lengthen your schools and educate your children.

But, Dear little ones:—I cannot close without thanking you for the many pretty little letters received from our post office, (the desk drawer,) I did not, on account of sickness, get to read them until I had been at home several days. And how much pleasure I had that stormy afternoon, sitting by a bright, blazing, wood fire, taking up scrap after scrap of various advertising-paper, goods wrappers, fly leaves, &c., on one side of which were written the dearest little letters that ever a teacher did receive.

BELLEVUE.

Last Sunday night about 12 o'clock Mr. Jonas Clore was stricken with paralysis in the right side. He has been under the medical treatment of Drs. Riley and Furnish. He seems to retain consciousness, but can only, at intervals communicate his wishes to those around him. This morning, Monday, he seems to be some better.

Last Saturday morning Aunt Betsy Garnett was stricken with paralysis, since which she has not been able to communicate with those about her. From her extreme age, 91 years, the end seems to be near with her.

Col. J. R. Akin is removing one of the old land marks of this part of the county, in cutting away the large maple grove near the mouth of Willoughby creek. It has long been noted for the buzzard roost there.

It is now near the middle of the month and we have not heard the croak of a frog, which is the sure harbinger of spring. At present indications are not favorable for an early spring.

Tom Clore and Bill Moody spent a good part of last week in the barbershop shampooing each other, using their new method, which we are not at liberty to give to the public.

The fine spring-like weather last week induced some of our planters to venture out to the woods, where they burned and sowed a few plant beds.

Stock of all kinds in this vicinity have passed through the severe changes of the winter in good condition.

Morgan Rice, of Bullittsburg, was visiting his Bros. Scott and D. G. Rice last week.

Last week Joseph Sachel and family, of Waterloo, moved to Owen county.

Miss Etta Moody is teaching the spring term of school at Willoughby.

The County Assessor is visiting a number of our citizens this week.

Quite a number of tenants have changed places here this spring.

John E. Walton, of Florence, spent last Saturday with friends here.

The spelling school has been changed from Monday to Friday nights.

HEBRON.

Mr. Editor we desire to give the readers of your paper some little idea of what a live place Hebron is. There is more business, first-class business, to the square foot than any place in the county, or any other county. We have three blacksmiths and one striker; 3 wood workers that will put up anything from a toothpick to the finest and best sleigh or carriage, and at prices that are always astonishing; a tailor who makes the merchant tailors of Cincinnati ashame of their prices and work; a shoemaker that will defy the world to produce better work for the same money; three carpenters that have a reputation over the entire county, besides a good portion of Hamilton county Ohio; two stores that sell everything that is wanted by man or woman to satisfy the inner man or adorn the person, and at prices that persons who try the city come back disatistied, they are so obliging that anything they may not have they will get it for you cheaper than you can get it; a first-class drug store with two of the most accommodating clerks you will find any where; an undertaker that always has what you want, at prices that not only brings the trade of Boone and Kenton counties, but a share of the trade in Hamilton county, Ohio, having had three orders from Cincinnati within the last seven months, and each one says they come because they do better than in the city; a saw and grist mill that always satisfies its patrons; a soldier whosoever tries, comes back again; besides we have 4 timber buyers, 6 hay haulers that buy at top prices; two school teachers that teach the scholars and please the patrons, (something rare), 1 mail carrier, 2 rock breakers, 2 hucksters, but no gentlemen of leisure, no dudes and no paupers.

A spelling school is under headway in the Hebron Hall and is largely attended.

A literary society was organized at the Constance school house the other night.

James M. Utz has declined to run for constable in the Taylorport district.

GAINESVILLE.

The election is all the rage here. We had a candidate to spend the day with us Friday. He was very agreeable and received many assurances of a warm support here. We want a voting place established at this place next primary election, comprising this school district. Such an arrangement would be a great convenience, besides it would secure a fuller expression from the people about here.

Thos. S. Whitaker has a valuable horse with lock jaw, resulting from a severe case of "quitto." He will doubtless die, as he is unable to take any kind of nourishment.

The turnpike road company are making a much needed improvement here, for the safety of the traveling public by building a substantial fence on each side of the fill.

Thomas Hyne, one of the literary luminaries, of Ashbys Fork, is shortly expected to occupy the late residence of I. J. Daughters.

Mrs. Emma Beall, of Hebron, and Miss Emma Moreland, of Limaburg, were visiting Mrs. Mannin, Sunday.

Mrs. Dr. Longfield, of Missouri, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Jas. T. Gaines near here.

E. M. Gaines has moved from Chas. Gaines' to his home near Bullittsburg church.

Mrs. Manning our estimable gatekeeper is still quite ill.

VERONA.

The school taught by Miss Poland at the Oak Ridge school-house near this place is well attended, the seats are filled, and there are several more to go. We think she expects an assistant in a few weeks. We hear she had an applicant to teach music, but could not accept on account of having no room.

Died at her home near this place, February 27th, Mrs. Sarah Myers, she was buried in the Bethel cemetery—funeral by Rev. L. Johnson. She leaves a husband who has been helpless for several years, to mourn her loss.

Candidates, bad roads and turnpikes are the subjects being discussed at present. Mr. Simeon Craven said that he had not realized that he was three times seven, until he met the candidates.

John Horton and family will move next week to his farm lately purchased near Williamstown. Jas. Cummins and wife of Georgetown, will occupy the house made vacant by Mr. Jones.

Considering the roads there was quite a crowd out to hear the temperance lecture, delivered by Bro. Cochren at this place Sunday, Feb'y. 28th.

Most of the farmers of this vicinity have sold and delivered their tobacco. We understand that E. E. Fry still holds his crop at 10 cents.

Ed Farrel has returned from a visit to relatives at East Baltimore, O.

Dr. Jones is very busy.

GUNPOWDER.

Farmers in this community are losing a great many of their old sheep, they take sick and die inside of twenty-four hours. If some good sheep raiser would come and tell us what to do for them, we would be very thankful.

Henry Tanner gave his sister, Miss Fannie, a birthday party on 4th inst., and an enjoyable time was had by all who attended.

Farmers are having very good luck with their lambs. Hold on to your lambs, you will get $4 25 for them.

Some of the young folks enjoyed a pleasant evening at Miss Emma Beemons last Wednesday.

Boys, hunt up your shotguns, tin pans and sheep bells and be ready for Jim Barlow when he comes home.

Nice weather last week for the farmers to do their spring work.

Mrs. Barnet Rouse has been on the sick list for sometime.

No plowing has been done in this neighborhood yet.

Mrs. Sarah Rouse is on the sick list.

UNION.

Miss Nannie Bristow has returned from a three week's visit to Covington, and will begin a private school next Monday, and solicits the support of her old patrons and the patronage of all who have children to be educated.

Some time has elapsed since any gossip from this place has appeared in your columns, and the public must be satisfied, so "once more unto the breach."

W. M Rachal and H. G. Blanton spent part of last week in visiting friends in Cincinnati and Covington.

Wm. Wilkie, Esq., has moved to Dr. Blanton's residence, having rented his own house to N. H. Patterson.

S. W. Tolin was in town last Saturday looking after his political interests.

Miss Maggie Schmitt, of Covington, is the guest of friends here.

Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Tilley's friends at this place were sorry to hear of the death of their only child Tom, aged about 15 years. He first had measles which was followed by pneumonia. Tom was a very sprightly boy.

I wish to notify the people of Boone and Kenton counties that I have bought the right to use the Wescott & Gurley Fence, and that the trouble between the Wescott & Gurley fence and the Lenox fence, has been satisfactorily settled.

I. O. BRISTOW.

Robt. Craig, of East Bend, stayed in Burlington Monday night enroute to the city with two splendid norman horses which he intended to sell.

HADN'T ANYTHING.

A Traveler Whose Poverty Could Not Be Equaled.

An awkward, ill-favored boy, while on an Arkansaw railway train, approached a man and said;

"Mister, won't you please help me along?"

"You are going along fast enough. If you are in a hurry why don't you get out and walk."

"I mean, won't you give me fifty cents."

"What for?"

"I have fits and——"

"Great Cæsar, do they have to pay a fellow to have fits in this country? Up where I came from people don't have to pay for fits."

"I am not able to work——"

"Well, don't do it. I don't care if you never work any. I am not so very fond of work myself."

"All i want is money enough to pay my fare to Jenkinville."

"What do you want to go there for?"

"My brother lives there."

"Well, what have you got against him?"

"I want to live with him. Won't you please give me money enough to——"

"Have fits, you say?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, you are better off than I am. I haven't even got fits. I haven't anything. Go on off some where and amuse yourself.—Arkansaw Traveler.

A Cruel Thing to Do.

A physician, writing in the Medical Review about cases of cancer, says: "I can not bear to say cancer to these patients. If they are told that they have a cancer they go down hill rapidly. Some years ago I was asked to see a case in this city. The doctor said to me: 'This is a sensible Christian lady, and I think if you find a cancer it would be best to tell her so.' I found a cancer and told her so. She took the announcement very calmly at the time. A short time afterward I saw the physician and asked him about this lady. He said: 'She is dead. She had been going around the house, but after she knew that she had a cancer she never got out of bed and went down hill rapidly.' It is a cruel thing to do, so never do it if you can avoid it."

MY LITTLE LAD AND I.

I take a little hand in mine,
And walk the village street,
With chirp and chatter as we go,
In mingled converse sweet,
And pleasant salutations
From every one we meet:
Dear little lad and I.

I take the little hand in mine,
To climb a neighboring hill,
To pluck wild flowers, or to trace
A laughing mountain rill,
By which, when weary or athirst,
We pause to drink our fill,
Dear little lad and I.

I take two little hands in mine,
My boy upon my knee;
I listen to a pleasant voice,
Made rich with notes of glee;
I feel a breath against my cheek,
A breath of life to me,
Dear little lad and I.

I take those little hands in mine;
I hear a prattler's tongue
Repeating childish thoughts and songs,
So sweetly said and sung:
In harmony with spirit harps,
For Heavenly music strung;
Dear little lad and I.

With those two little hands in mine,
I think of other days;
One generation full of years
Between our parting ways,
And yet our souls clasp hands across
The chasm, in close embrace;
Dear little lad and I.

Those little hands so very fair,
God keep them ever white;
Those little feet, unfettered yet,
May they e'er walk aright;
That little life, so precious now,
May it be ever bright.
Dear little lad, pray I!

A GRAND DEFENSE.

Wives, Heroines and Widows in a Day.

It was a June day in Arizona. At Roberts' Ranch on the Gila, there was a feeling of perfect peace and security as the sun climbed high into the heavens. Roberts was planting in a field half a mile from the stout log cabin, while his wife was busy with household cares. There were horses and cattle in an inclosure a quarter of a mile from the house, and a pony, which was permitted to ramble at will, cropped the grass around the cabin.

Such was the situation when the wife heard two or three rifle shots and the war whoops of Indians. She sprang to the door to see that her husband was making for the house at his best speed, while three Indians followed him up and fired as they ran. Geronimo's Apache devils had broken loose and taken the war path. The ranchman's wife understood at a glance what was occurring. Her heart gave one great throb, a terrible weakness overcame her for an instant, and then she seized the Winchester rifle from its hooks, grabbed the long-barreled "Navy" from its holster, and ran with all speed to meet her husband. He fell before they met, shot in the back; his left arm had been previously broken by a bullet.

"Mollie the red devils are loose," he said as she came up and kneeled beside him.

"If there are only three we can beat them off," she replied as she made ready to open fire.

The Indians had halted within rifle-shot to counsel. Her first shot bored one of them through and through, and the other two retreated to broken ground half a mile away.

"I'll carry you to the house and then watch for them," she said, as they disappeared. Blood was pouring from his wounds and oozing from his mouth, and it was plain that he had been mortally hit.

"It's no use," he groaned. "I've got to die right here. In half an hour there'll be fifty of 'em and they are sure to capture you."

"I'll stay with you."

"Not another moment! Run to the house, get all the cartridges, and then mount the pony and then ride to Gilpin's. The upper trail's clear."

"Oh, George, I can't leave you."

The revolver was under his hand. His fingers clinched over the butt, and he whispered: "Mollie, kiss me."

She bent over him with a sob in her throat, and his hand worked the revolver around until the muzzle touched his side. There was a smothered report, and she sprang up to see his limbs stiffen in death. She did not scream out—she did not totter and faint. She imprinted a kiss on the dead face, and as she rose up her teeth were set hard and her eyes had the glare of a wounded wolf's. She ran to the house, taking rifle and revolver with her, and in five minutes was galloping towards McGilpin's, having neither saddle nor bridle, and holding fast to weapons and cartridges. As she left the ranch bullets whistled about her head, and shouts of vengeance came to her ears.

It was just such a June day at McGilpin's, five miles above. The sun beat down with a warmth which called the crickets from their nests in the grass, and kept the wild bees humming their satisfaction. The ranchman was fashioning a new helve for his axe in the shade, and his wife had the noon-day meal ready for the table. Suddenly the old man looked up, and next instant he was on his feet and shading his eyes with his hand.

"Jehosaphat! Quick mother—fasten the back door, down with the windows, and pull the shutters to. Roberts' wife is coming up the trail with a dozen Injuns after her."

He seized his Winchester and ran down the trail to cover the approach of the woman. Her pony seemed to understand that it was life or death, and was straining every nerve. The Indians had not followed her from the ranch, but had come in on her from the Santa Cruz river trail, and had kept her under fire for the last two miles. As soon as the ranchman appeared the Indians, eleven in number, drew rein.

"Whar's George?" asked McGilpin, as the pony halted beside him.

"Dead!"

"And the bucks are in war paint. Go inside, woman. It's no time for grief!"

Owing to the river on one side and the wire fence on the other, the Indians could not scatter at once. They must approach the ranch under the ranchman's fire, if at all. He waited for them, but they hesitated and held a consultation. During this respite the women made the house secure, filled a barrel with water and turned a number of horses loose and forced them to cross the river. While they were accomplishing these objects a part of the Indians were cutting the fences, and the rest were in consultation. The ranchman stood like a rock, his eyes noting the slightest movement, his breath coming faster, and a feeling in his heart that this was his last day on earth. A pillar of black smoke told him that Robert's ranch was being destroyed to the west, and another to the east betrayed the fate of another neighbor.

When the Indians had cut the fences to give them fair approach to the house, a warrior started up the trail with a white handkerchief in his hand as a flag of truce. Approaching within revolver shot he halted and called out:

"Indians no hurt; Indians want dinner!"

The quick eye of the ranchman detected two dismounted redskins dodging from cover to cover to gain the rear of the house. The idea was to parley until they were in position.

"Indians go 'way after dinner—no hurt anybody—no take hosses!" shouted the flag-bearer.

With a movement so quick that the other had no time to prepare for it, the ranchman brought his rifle to an aim. There was a loud report, and the buck fell from his horse. As he tumbled from his saddle the pony made a jump or two, but there was another report, and the beast rolled over. Next instant there was a shot from the cabin, and one of the pair of skulkers uttered his death yell. When the smoke rose the ranchman was no longer to be seen. He had retreated to the house. Filled with chagrin and a desire for vengeance, the Indians now dismounted and crept nearer, and in a few minutes the cabin was being assailed from every point of the compass.

Within there were two pale-faced women and a grim, determined man. The structure was roughly built of planks and logs, undivided by partitions. There were only four windows, and these were protected by stout shutters, which were pierced with loopholes. The weapons were two Winchesters and two revolvers. The ranchman's first move after getting inside was to divide his force so as to cover the windows. He then pulled out the chinking at the corners of the cabin to make other loopholes, and each one of the trio took a post of observation and defense. Scarcely a word had been exchanged since the arrival of Mrs. Roberts. Each one reasoned out for himself or herself: "A gang of Apaches have broken loose from their reservation and are on the warpath. They will burn and slay until a force can be raised to overpower them. It may be a week before that force is in the field. Surrender means to be burned at the stake. A desperate resistance may drive them off."

There was Roberts, the husband of a year, lying dead and scalped, and horribly mutilated on his freshly planted field. His stock had been shot down or driven off, and the red flames had licked up his cabin, but there were no tears in the blue eyes of the wife as she peered from one of the loopholes. Tears would have dimmed her vision, and watchful eyes were needed there.

For an hour or more the Indians maintained an unceasing fire, but without inflicting the least damage. They were then joined by a party of seven, coming from the east, and it soon became evident that some decisive step was to be taken.

"I know what they will do," said the ranchman, as the reports of rifles died away. "They will divide into three or four parties and assail the house from as many sides. If they can't batter the doors down they will try to set the house on fire. Each of you take a revolver and I will use the rifles. Be cool—we can drive them back."

The three had been waiting at their stations ten minutes when the rush was made. The sixteen Indians divided into bands of four, and one in every band carried a lighted torch. The ranchman broke one band by killing the buck with the torch and wounding one of the others. From the loopholes the women wounded two more, but presently the two doors were vigorously attacked, while the torchmen ran from point to point with their blazing brands. In bodies of four or five the redskins threw themselves against the doors, but it was a vain effort. Each had two bars across the inside. The attack did not last three minutes. As the Indians retreated the ranchman flung open a door and rushed out and seized the only torch which threatened damage, and he was under cover again before a shot was fired at him. In that attack the Apaches lost two killed and three badly wounded.

After a rest of half an hour a number of redskins crept near and began to fire blazing arrows at the roof. A few struck, but no damage resulted. Then the rifle firing recommenced; and it was while peering through a loophole that McGilpin received a ball in the eye and fell back dead before he reached the floor. A woman's shriek—a woman's wail—that was all. For ten seconds the widows were women again. Then came a shout which warned them that they must be heroines while a red devil lingered. There was a second rush at the house. The revolvers cracked as before—the whole house shook as the doors received shock after shock. Yells, whoops and screams, and report of firearms loaded the air for three minutes, and then deep silence fell upon the ranch. The Apaches had been repulsed again. Each woman sprang the empty cartridges from her revolver and replaced them, and continued her watch. By and by they looked out, to see the band at full gallop two or three miles away.

Geronimo was there in person. His bucks were the red devils of the West. Two women had beaten them off. Five of his men had been killed and five others so badly wounded that they were forced to return to the reservation and lie hidden, while be continued the raid, which was brought to a close only a few days ago.

At sundown an officer and escort with despatches drew rein at the ranch. There was no one to answer the hail. The men dismounted and looked in. In the center of the room lay the ranchman, cold in death. Beside him—each with her face hidden in her hands, each rocking her body to and fro—were two widows, poor, weak women, through whose powder-stained fingers the tears found their way. Wives at morn—heroines at noon—widows at sunset.—N. Y. Sun.

A HARD SCHOOL.

Bob Burdette Discourses Upon Patience and Strength.

My dear boy, if a man can only cultivate patience and strength it seems to me he will be a good neighbor, a pleasant man to do business with, a safe man to trust, and the kind of a man the world loves, even though he lack wisdom, and hath no genius, and can't tell a good story or sing a note. How much does the fretful, restless, hurrying old world owe to the patient man who finds his strength "in quietness and confidence," who can be patient with our faults, our fancies, our wickedness; who can be quiet when the softest word would have a sting; who can wait for storms to blow over and for wrongs to right themselves; who can patiently and silently endure a slight until he has forgotten it, and who can even be patient with himself. That's the fellow, my boy, who tries hy patience and strength more than any man else with whom I have to deal. I could get along with the rest of the world well enough if he were only out of it. I can meet all my other cares and enemies bravely and cheerfully enough. But when myself comes to me with his heart-aches and blunders and stumblings, with his own follies and troubles and sins, somehow he takes all the tuck out of me. My strength is weakness and my patience is folly, when I come to deal with him. He tires me. He is such a fool. He makes the same stupid blunders in the same stupid way so many times. Sometimes, when I think I must put up with him and his ways all my life I want to give up. And then the next time he comes to me with his cares and the same old troubles he seems so helpless and penitent that I feel sorry for him, and try to be patient with him, and promise to help him all I can, once more. Ah, my dear boy, as you grow older, that is the fellow who will try you and torment you, and draw on your sympathy, and tax your patience and strength. Be patient with him, poor old fellow, because I think he does love you, and yet as a rule you are harder on him than any one else.—Brooklyn Eagle.

A REFORM YEAR.

A General Review of the Trials and Triumphs of the Democracy.

The end of the first year of President Cleveland's term of office is near at hand. It has been a busy year and one fraught with great consequences. The manifold difficulties in the way of the first Democratic Administration upon a return of the party to political power after a lapse of a quarter of a century can scarcely be appreciated by the country. It only comprehends results. Mr. Cleveland himself was a year ago an unknown quantity. The country knew what Governor Cleveland was; of what President Cleveland would be it knew nothing. That it believed in him and trusted him was evidenced by his election and installation as President. At the very threshold he was confronted by two facts: that a large proportion of the Democratic party, composed of ante-bellum material, expected him to resume administrative power where Buchanan left off; that a larger proportion, composed of the new Democracy, expected him to establish his Administration on the basis of reform. The first-named element contained the old line politicians, the second a new generation of voters. Long accustomed to feats of political legerdemain and inured to falsehood, the politicians met the new Administration with the assumption that ante-election promises were void and that now that professions of reform had served their turn they would be cast aside as useless. * * *

Having vainly striven against fate and Grover Cleveland, the corrupt elements of the country hastened to make their peace with the new regime. Jay Gould, the worst of the lot, was the first to congratulate the new President. Before the ink of the operator who announced the recount in New York was dry Jay Gould, controlling the majority of the newspapers of New York, the Western Union and the Associated Press gave in his allegiance to the new Government. Those combinations that could not see their way sat down and waited. They were led by their corrupt and venal press to expect an early disruption of the Democratic party under President Cleveland. They saw his difficulties at once and waited an opportunity to take advantage of the first split. Their hired organs fostered the spirit of bitterness between the two factions; encouraged dissensions, because in the weakness of the Administration or its total failure their interests might survive unscathed. Their common energies were devoted to an effort to force the President from his reform platform into the gutter of his predecessors. It was to this end the discontent was magnified and urged on to open rebellion. When it became apparent that the attempt to create a diversion must fail, the disappointment of the jobbers was intense. As day by day the President grew stronger with his party as well as with the country, and the success of the reform Government was inevitable, the horde of rascals became alarmed and desperate. The Administration had begun to reach out for them. The Interior Department had begun to press the Pacific railroads for their dues; the Post-Office Department had refused to divide four hundred thousand dollars as a subsidy to steamship lines for carrying the mails; the Navy Department had destroyed the jobber Roach at a single blow and, finally, the Department of Justice stepped in and ordered the telephone monopoly into court. At each successive step of an honest Administration the jobbers howled with rage. They have now joined forces in their hostility to the Administration and the war has at last openly begun.

The Land Office thieves are against the reform Administration.

The Mormon gang of polygamists are against the reform Administration and are willing to move heaven and earth for its overthrow.

The lottery swindlers are against the reform Administration because it is preparing to move immediately upon their works.

Finally, name any wicked and corrupt combination, a corporation for an illegal purpose, a set of jobbers of whatever character, the aiders and abettors of the same, or those who sympathize with them, and you will find them opposing the reform Administration of President Cleveland.

It will not do to treat lightly the combined influence of all these interests. For it is now evident that they have in a certain sense pooled their issues against honest government. They represent millions, ten of millions and hundreds of millions of dollars of capital, real and watered stock. They are in possession of franchises which are principalities in resources and which extend their corporate influences to the remotest corners of the country wherever a wire is stretched or a rail laid. They own newspapers and control, to a great extent, the metropolitan press. Their salaried agents swarm about Washington and occupy seats in both houses of Congress. If the combination of jobbers embraced no political interests they would be powerless to produce results. Their hue and cry would fall upon the public ear like the sighing of mighty pines of the forest, weird and unearthly, but harmless.

But these rings of monopoly and subsidy and contract and polygamy and jobbery of every kind have apparently effected a combination with the political elements of hostility to President Cleveland. During the past few weeks the lieutenants and captains and commanders of the Blaine wing of the Republican party have been in close consultation in Washington. They have come in pairs, singly and in detachments, to avoid the appearance of collusion. Their presence, however, has not escaped the lynx-eyed correspondents, who have promptly announced that the Blaine boom for the next Presidential nomination has been placed upon its feet. Coincidental with their presence here the corruptionists renewed their attack upon the Administration all along the line. Every Blaine organ of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, St. Louis and other cities joined in the concert. This junction of jobbers was easy and natural. It was complete. Every correspondent in Washington known to be friendly to the Blaine interest began at once to nag the Administration, telegraph reports of dissensions in the Cabinet, of resignations of Cabinet officers and distort the relations between the President and his party. The alleged Democratic journals who opposed Cleveland's nomination, opposed his election and oppose his Administration joined in the tidal wave of defamation and lying and are now working in harmony with the "jobbers' brigade" in their community of interest with Mr. James G. Blaine. The junction is a reunion of original and cognate forces.

This brief review of the first year of honest government will sufficiently illustrate the successful Administration of President Cleveland. It will also serve to show the varied, formidable and corrupt character of the combination against him. Public criticism of his Administration must be taken, as appears by this summary, with the following allowances:

First—It may be paid for in a party organ at a dollar to five dollars a line.

Second—It may be inspired by legitimate political hostility.

Third—It may be the malice of disappointed office-seekers.

Fourth—It may be from an owner of telephone stock.

Fifth—It may be the opinion of an operator in or holder of Pacific railroad securities.

Sixth—It may be the defense of an individual or corporations out of pocket from the failure of the steamship subsidy.

Seventh—It may be one way of an enterprising Presidential candidate in reaching out for a renomination.

Eighth—It may have its origin in a Mormon apostle.

Ninth—It may come from the Roach lobby.

Tenth and last—It is pretty likely to come from sources which have cause to deplore honest government.—Philadelphia Times.

THE PRESIDENT'S STAND.

He Will Hand Down His Office to His Successor Untrammeled—He Will Not Be Driven by the Senate.

It is evident from the report and resolutions laid before the Senate by Mr. Edmunds that the Republican majority is determined on a factious opposition to the Administration. It is equally plain that no public interest is to be served by this opposition, for the President has more than intimated that he is perfectly willing that the Senate shall have any papers relating to removals which it asks as a matter of courtesy but not of right. He maintains that as President certain executive prerogatives are intrusted to him which he must protect and hand down unimpaired to his successor. They are a public trust and must be upheld. The constitution provides that the Senate must be consulted in the making of certain appointments, but it is silent as to any advisory or restrictive relation of the Senate toward suspensions or removals from office. This leaves the President free to make suspensions and removals, and it can readily be understood how any limit or restraint on the power of removal would render the Executive weak, indecisive and ineffective.

But the chief purpose of the majority in the Senate is to convict the President of bad faith in failing to redeem his Civil-Service reform pledges. Not that the Republican Senators are so deeply enamored of this reform for its own sake, but they hope to use it to the discredit of the President. Fortunately for Mr. Cleveland they are barking up the wrong tree. In his letter to George William Curtis, president of the Civil-Service Reform League, he made no pledge not to make any removals for political reasons. On the contrary, he expressly indicated that he would remove a certain class of office-holders, whom he designated as "offensive partisans."

In spite of the most persistent pressure from a party very hungry and very thirsty, Mr. Cleveland has stood by his ante-election principles with remarkable steadfastness. At his inauguration he found the offices almost wholly in the possession of Republicans. As the first year of his Administration draws near its close two-thirds of these are still in office, and where Democrats have taken the places of the remainder a very small percentage indeed are the successors of suspended Republicans. Moreover, in these cases it is believed that the President is entirely willing that the public shall know the causes which in his opinion justified their suspension on the ground of "offensive partisanship." This, however, is not what the Republican Senators want or they would "request," not "demand," the papers relating to suspended officials. They are only intent on forcing the President to appear as refusing to give information to the legislative branch of the Government, when in fact he is anxious to give it if only asked for it in a manner consistent with the full preservation of his prerogatives. The President is understood to be in full accord with the theory that every paper relating to the appointment, conduct or removal of Federal officials shall be accessible, not only to Congress but to the whole world.

How entirely factious is the aim of the Edmunds resolutions is proved by that relating to removals of discharged soldiers and sailors. This is craftily worded to convey the impression that such soldiers and sailors have been removed, and without cause. It does not make the charge boldly, but by way of innuendo. It presents nothing that can be denied because it fires in the air. It formulates nothing but a general oratorical statement of a recognized principle. It hints at a great wrong, but stops short of averment. It is unworthy of the signature of Senator Edmunds, or of any other Senator who has signed it, except Mr. Ingalls, who has always been one of the kind of men "willing to wound and yet afraid to strike"—one who loves to send arrows flying in the dark.—Chicago News.

FIGHT AGAINST EDMUNDS.

The Blaine Republicans Organizing to Prevent His Return to the Senate.

The State election in Vermont will occur on the 7th of next September. The Legislature then chosen will meet a month later, and will elect a United States Senator to fill the seat now occupied by Hon. George F. Edmunds whose term expires in March, 1887. If Mr. Edmunds goes out of the Senate then, he probably goes out of public life. No Republican statesman that we can think of—not even Hon. Ira Davenport—is less likely to receive the next Republican nomination for President.

Mr. Edmunds has a strong fancy for public life. The fact that he is now ably endeavoring to figure as chieftain of the thick and thin Republicans of the Senate, when it is only two years this month since he was coyly smiling encouragement in response to the ardent approaches of the Mugwumps, is perhaps explained by the present situation in his own State of Vermont.

According to the disinterested testimony of Hon Hiram Atkins, Mr. Edmunds has a hard fight in prospect for this spring and summer:

> "I do not think that Senator Edmunds will get one vote in four of the Republicans in our Legislature. I have come to this conclusion within a week from reports which have reached me from all over the State from Republican sources. The Blaine Republicans in Vermont are organizing against his re-election. The fight will be Edmunds and anti-Edmunds, and it will be savage. I do not say that Governor Smith will be the candidate against him. All the latter's friends say that he is not a candidate. But it is determined to make the fight against Edmunds. Some of the leading Republicans in the State have declared against him. Franklin, Windham and Caledonia Counties are the only ones in which he is sure of a majority. Some of the counties will hardly return an Edmunds man to the Legislature. The Democrats will vote for their own candidate, but in towns where they are in a hopeless minority the Democrats will take sides where the contest is between an Edmunds and an anti-Edmunds candidate for the Legislature."

This report of the state of politics in Vermont comes from a close observer and a Democratic leader who has only an indirect interest in the war of retaliation that the friends of Blaine are waging against Senator Edmunds.

Many of the Vermont Republicans look upon Mr. Edmunds as almost another Dr. Burchard. The resentment of the friends of Blaine now has an opportunity to measure its strength. The result of the campaign to prevent the re-election of Senator Edmunds will be the first accurate indication of the present vitality of the Blaine cause.

It is only a little more than two years before the next Republican convention will meet; and Mr. Blaine, having finished the second volume of his great historical work, is now once more a man of leisure.—N. Y. Sun.

HYDROPHOBIA.

Interesting Facts Concerning the Victims of the Malady at Paris.

There were according to Dr. Dujardin-Beaumetz, 19 deaths from hydrophobia in Paris last year—a number higher than in previous years; and yet the number of stray dogs destroyed was also higher, viz., 5,060. Of these 19 persons, 15 were males and 4 females. The youngest was a little girl 5 1-2 years; the oldest, a man of 63. The time of incubation varied from 19 months (in the case of a young man of 26) to 29 days (a child of 11). In only one case was the time of the bite unknown. Excluding that and the exceptional case of 19 months, an average of about 2 months is arrived at for the time of incubation. As to duration of the disease, the extreme limits were 1 day and 8 days, average 3 1-2 days. In no case were the lower limbs bitten. In 12 cases out of 18, the upper members were bitten, especially the hand (9 times out of 12), the wrist twice; in 6 other cases it was the face (5 times) and the skull (once) that were attacked. Lastly, in 17 cases of the 18, the bite was that of a dog; in the remaining case, it was a cat. It will be noted that the statistics relate only to deaths from hydrophobia.—N. Y. Post.

—The immense quantity of peanuts grown in Africa, South America and in our own Southern States afford not only a pleasant article of food but a very large source of oil production. The seed contains from forty-five to fifty per cent. of nearly colorless, bland, fixed oil, not unlike olive oil, and used for similar purposes; it is a non-drying oil, which changes but little by exposure to the air, and remains fluid even at several degrees colder than thirty-two degrees, Fah. March April May

Are the months in which to purify your blood, and for this purpose there is no medicine equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. It purifies, vitalizes and enriches the blood, removing all trace of scrofula or other disease. It creates an appetite and imparts new strength and vigor to the whole body. It is the ideal spring medicine. Try it this season.

"I take Hood's Sarsaparilla for a spring medicine, and I find it just the thing. It tones up my system and makes me feel like a different man. My wife takes it for dyspepsia, and she derives great benefit from it. She says it is the best medicine she ever took." Frank C. Turner, Hook & Ladder No. 1, Friend Street, Boston Mass.

"When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was dizzy in the morning, had a headache, and no appetite; but now I can hardly get enough cooked to eat." Emma Shepard, 1 Coral Street, Worcester, Mass.

"I have used Hood's Sarsaparilla in my family and consider it a splendid blood purifier." J. P. Wildsmith, North 7th Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Another Life Saved.

About two years ago, a prominent citizen of Chicago was told by his physicians that he must die. They said his system was so debilitated that there was nothing left to build on. He made up his mind to try a "new departure." He got some of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" and took it according to directions. He began to improve at once. He kept up the treatment for some months, and is to-day a well man. He says the "Discovery" saved his life.

Relieved at Last!
"We know a gentleman in this county who, six months ago, was almost a hopeless cripple from an attack of rheumatism. He could scarcely hobble across the room, used crutches, and said himself that he had little if any hope of ever recovering. We saw him in our town last week, walking about as lively as any other man, and in the finest health and spirits. Upon our inquiry as to what had worked such a wonderful change in his condition, he replied that S. S. S. had cured him. After using a dozen and a half bottles, he has been transformed from a miserable cripple to a happy, healthy man. He is none other than Mr. E. B. Lambert."—Sylvania Telephone.

LIVER, BLOOD AND LUNG DISEASES.

LIVER DISEASE. G. W. Lotz, Trudhomme, La., writes: "For four years I suffered from liver complaint and attacks of bilious fever; loss of appetite, nausea, constipation, sometimes diarrhea, pain in the back of the head, right side and under the shoulder-blades, fullness after eating, general debility, restless nights, tongue coated, etc. After taking four bottles of 'Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pellets,' I find I am as well as I ever was."

A BAD CASE. Samantha Gaines, Lockport, N. Y., writes: "For six or eight years previous to 1880, I had been troubled with a severe pain in the small of my back, also across my shoulder-blades, with considerable bloating of the stomach from wind; was so nervous at times I could hardly sleep; also troubled with dizziness and hard breathing spells. I was induced by my step-daughter, Mrs. Warner, of Olean, N. Y., to try the 'Golden Medical Discovery.' The effects were marvelous. After taking three bottles I was entirely cured."

GENERAL DEBILITY. S. L. Fisher, Sidney Plains, N. Y., writes: "Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y. Dear Sir—My wife suffered for several years from general debility. She had become a confirmed invalid. The physicians who attended her failed to help her, and it seemed as if she must die. On reading one of your Memorandum Books, it occurred to me that your 'Golden Medical Discovery' might help her. I procured a bottle, and, after its use, a change for the better was noticeable, and after using five bottles, she was a well woman. I have recommended it to several, and in every case, it has produced good results. I can never feel too grateful to you for the saving of my wife's life."

GIVEN UP TO DIE. Liver Disease.—Merrit Street, Esq., Druggist, of Bluff Springs, Ala., writes: "Miss Eliza Glenn, of this place, had been sick for more than a year with a severe affection of the liver, but when she was at the lowest, she bought three bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery' from me, and, although before using the medicine she was given up to die by all the attending physicians, her father assures me that she has now fully recovered."

MALARIAL FEVER. Mrs. Caroline Simmonds, Medina, N. Y., writes: "I have been troubled with symptoms of malaria, with fever, for three years, but after using three bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pleasant Purgative Pellets,' I am happy to say that I am entirely cured, and to-day I am perfectly well and able to do my own work."

DYSPEPSIA CURED. Dyspepsia.—Lucy A. Wood, Taylor's Store, Va., writes: "After many years of great suffering from the evils of dyspepsia, I was induced to try your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and I cannot express the gratitude I feel for the great good it has done me. I do not suffer any pain from eating, and I enjoy life as well as anybody can wish."

DIARRHEA AND COUGH. Mrs. Curtis Bogue, West Enosburg, Vt., writes: "Two bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery' cured my cough and chronic diarrhea. It has worked like a charm in my case. It is truly wonderful. I walked over a mile last week to recommend your medicines."

"THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse the blood, which is the fountain of health, by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength, and soundness of constitution will be established.

Golden Medical Discovery cures all humors, from the common pimple, blotch, or eruption, to the worst Scrofula, or blood-poison. Especially has it proven its efficacy in curing Salt-rheum or Tetter, Fever-sores, Hip-joint Disease, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Enlarged Glands, and Eating Ulcers.

ABSCESS OF LIVER. Isaac Gibson, Kenwood, Pa., writes: "My wife is getting well fast. When she began to use your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' our best doctors in Indiana County said she would die. They said your medicine would do her no good; that she had an ulcer on her liver as large as half a loaf of bread. Well, sir, to our surprise, when she began using your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' she commenced spitting up phlegm for some two weeks, and then commenced spitting up corruption and blood (it looked like what comes out of a blood boil) for some ten days. She now has been well for weeks."

Boils and Carbuncles.—J. Adams, Esq., Toledo, Ohio, writes: "I have used nine bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and the result is I am to-day free from boils and carbuncles for the first time in many years."

Constipation and Ulcers.—Mrs. A. D. Johnson, Georgetown, Ky., writes: "The 'Golden Medical Discovery' relieved me at once. I had a very bad sore on the back of my left hand for five months, and it cured that, as well as constipation and indigestion, from which I was suffering very much."

SCROFULOUS SORES. Mrs. A. L. Cory, Hadley, Crawford Co., Kansas, writes: "My son, aged fifteen years, was taken down last January with swellings on his right shoulder, left hip and knee. He lay helpless for five months, when great abscesses formed, four of which continued to discharge at the time he commenced using your 'Golden Medical Discovery' under your advice. Now, after having used four bottles of the 'Discovery,' he is almost well and walks three-fourths of a mile to school every day. A scrofulous sore on his arm, which ran constantly for two years, has healed completely under the influence of the remedy named."

"Fever-Sores."—Mrs. A. H. Crawford, Linn Grove, Buena Vista Co., Iowa, writes: "I am the person who wrote to you two years ago for advice respecting fever-sores on my leg. I took six bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and was cured."

Scrofulous Tumor and Sore Eyes.—Mrs. S. E. Graydon, of Greenwood, S. C., writes: "My daughter has been entirely cured of scrofulous sore eyes and a large tumor on her neck, by the use of your 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I have great faith in all your medicines."

CONSUMPTION, WEAK LUNGS, SPITTING OF BLOOD.

Golden Medical Discovery cures Consumption (which is Scrofula of the Lungs), by its wonderful blood-purifying, invigorating and nutritive properties. For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Severe Coughs, Asthma, and kindred affections, it is a sovereign remedy. While it promptly cures the severest Coughs it strengthens the system and purifies the blood.

The nutritive properties of cod-liver oil are trifling when compared with those possessed by Golden Medical Discovery. It rapidly builds up the system, and increases the flesh and weight of those reduced below the usual standard of health by "wasting diseases."

LUNG DISEASE. A Wonderful Cure.—Daniel Fletcher, Esq., Gloucester, Mass., writes: "Nearly five years ago, I was taken sick with a disease regarding which the three physicians who attended me were unable to agree. One of the foremost physicians in Boston called it a tumor of the stomach, and treated me for that, nearly killing me with physic; another, a homœopathic physician, thought I had consumption. When taken sick, I weighed 157 pounds. I suffered from a heavy cough, night-sweats, kidney troubles, etc., and was reduced so rapidly that my physicians gave me up. They were unable to help me in the least. At that time I weighed but ninety pounds, and had not been able to lie down, but had to sit up in order to breathe. I had been confined to my room for six months, expecting to die. I was so bad at times that I could not allow any one to come into my room, as I could not talk; nor was I able to walk. I picked up one of your memorandum books on the floor of the hotel where I was boarding, and after reading it I began taking your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and the first bottle brought me around so that I could walk around the room all day. I soon began to build up, and gained so rapidly that it astonished me. I have taken no other medicine since then, and have used perhaps twenty bottles in all of this medicine. I stopped taking it in August, one year ago. I feel that it has saved my life. I now weigh about 160 pounds, and I think, and my friends with me, that this medicine saved my life. It certainly is worth its weight in gold, and I consider it a wonderful remedy from its effect in curing all my ailments."

SAVED HIS LIFE.

REDUCED TO A SKELETON. Consumption Cured.—W. J. Hartley, Vera Cruz, Ala., writes: "I met with an old friend of mine not long since, and he told me of the very low state of health he had been in and he applied to our best doctor, but gradually grew worse under his treatment; was reduced to a skeleton, had a fearful cough and was thought to have consumption. While in this low state he made a visit to see his relations, and while in a distant town, he purchased a bottle of medicine called, 'Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery,' and took it, and by the time it was used he was as well as he ever had been. When I saw him, he looked to be in the bloom of health. His statement caused a great deal of inquiry, as he is a man of high standing."

BLEEDING FROM LUNGS. Joseph F. McFarland, Athens, La., writes: "My wife had frequent bleeding from the lungs before she commenced using your 'Golden Medical Discovery.' She has not had any since its use. For some six months she has been feeling so well that she has discontinued it."

Consumption Cured.—J. Anthony Swink, Dongola, Ills., writes: "For five years I suffered very much from a terrible cough and debility. More than a year since I commenced to take your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and it has completely cured me. I thank you for the splendid health I have since enjoyed."

Golden Medical Discovery is Sold by Druggists. Price $1.00 per Bottle, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME XI. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, MARCH 17, 1886. NUMBER 19.

LABOR'S WAR.

Number and Extent of Strikes Throughout the Country.

Fifty-one Thousand in 1886 Vs. Eighteen Thousand in 1884.

NEW YORK, March 12.—One year and a quarter ago Bradstreets published the result of an investigation into the decreased number of hands employed in prominent lines of industry, and among other exhibits was one that there were in the United States 17,550 employes on a strike, a large total as compared with any preceding date, excepting during the railroad strike of 1877. Of the total given 7,100 were coal miners, 5,000 of these being in the Hocking Valley alone; there were 2,250 Massachusetts and Rhode Island cotton-weavers, 1,200 Connecticut hatters, 5,000 Philadelphia shoemakers (locked out), and 2,000 Philadelphia carpet-weavers. At the present time the increasing number and the magnitude of strikes is due in a large part to efforts to put wages up to former levels and to secure recognition from employers for employes' organizations which seek to reduce hours of labor, enforce exclusive employment of Union men, advance the rate of wages and prevent the employment of convict labor in competition with free labor. It is found that on Thursday, March 11, the date of Bradstreet's inquiry, there were on strike at prominent industrial centers east of the Rocky Mountains no less than 51,000 employes, as compared with 18,000 in December, 1884. Classifying the strikes, it is found that the total of bituminous coal miners is 21,480, against 7,100 one year and a quarter ago; of textile workers is 10,380, against 4,250, and of boot and shoe employes 4,075, against 5,000 in December, 1884. While the great nail strike west of the Alleghenies has not ended, and does not promise a success for the strikers, the number resisting the mill owners is about 4,000. At the latter date the strikes were in almost all cases against a reduction of wages, or its equivalent; at this time they to a very large extent are for higher wages.

A NEW INVENTION.

Company Organized in New York to Operate the Telegraph Printing Machine.

NEW YORK, March 12.—Abner McKinley, of Canton, brother of Representative McKinley, is here, having been elected Secretary of the National Printing Telegraph Company, recently incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, with a capital stock of one million dollars. The company has purchased the patents on an invention by Samuel V. Essick, of Alliance, of an instrument which will transmit printed messages in page form. They propose to form sub-companies at various centers in which they will hold stock and to whom they will sell instruments, the sub-companies to form and manage exchanges. The new instrument somewhat resembles a type-writer, and can be worked by unskilled operators. Mr. Essick claims that it can be worked with almost the same electrical resistance as can the ordinary telegraph instrument. Ex-Judge Rooney, of this city, is President of the company; Lewis J. Morrison, Vice-President, and Mark W. Samuel, Treasurer and Manager. Negotiations are in progress with parties in Pittsburgh, Hartford and Toledo to supply them with instruments.

SERIOUS AFFAIR IN OREGON.

A Chinese Laundry Blown Up and a Colonel of Militia Knock Down and Shot.

PORTLAND, OREGON, March 12.—Early this morning an attempt was made to blow up the Chinese wash-house at the corner of Third and F streets with giant powder cartridges. The perpetrators evidently knew little of the use of dynamite, as they placed it on the front porch, which was demolished, but the main part of the house was uninjured. About midnight Colonel J. K. Phillips, Commander First Regiment State Militia, was assaulted near his residence in East Portland by two men, knocked down and robbed. As he lay on the ground he was shot, the bullet passing through his lung; probably fatal. Colonel Phillips has been outspoken of late on the outrages against Chinese, and the leaders of the mob have threatened his life.

New York Scenes Duplicated.

TORONTO, ONT., March 12.—This morning an attempt was made by the street car company to run a car. An immense crowd gathered about the stables and obstructed its passage. Coal carts, express wagons, etc., were turned upon the track, completely blocking the car. The police were powerless. The crowd made a rush at the car, broke all the windows, and knocked down both horses and driver. A call for more police was made, and a strong force of both mounted and foot officers arrived soon after. The mob was beaten back and several arrests were made. About two o'clock this afternoon a second car started with better success, the police using their clubs effectively. One man had his head split open. At 3:10 p. m. there were several cars running with three policemen on each. The strikers claim the mob was composed of loafers and roughs, and that the strikers had no hand in the affair.

Ignominious Deaths.

JACKSONVILLE, ORE., March 12.—Louis O'Neil was hanged this afternoon for the murder of Lewis McDaniel in this city, November 14, 1884.

NEW ORLEANS, March 12.—P. H. Ford and John Murphy were hanged to-day in the parish prison for the murder on December 1, 1884, of Captain A. H. Murphy. The two men were hanged while completely insensible and apparently dying from poison self-administered the night before to escape, by suicide, the disgrace of the gallows.

Proposed Fusion of Grangers and Knights.

LANSING, MICH., March 12.—In the State assembly of Knights of Labor yesterday a resolution was adopted for the appointment of a committee to confer with the grangers. It is thought this will result in the practical fusion of the two, the farmers accepting the platform of the Knights of Labor.

Will Boycott Employers of Chinese.

SACRAMENTO, CAL., March 12.—The boycott clause in the platform presented to the anti-Chinese convention amid tremendous cheering, was adopted. Ex-Senator Sargent, who had strongly opposed the clause, immediately informed the chairman of his withdrawal from the convention.

A Highly Important Invention.

PITTSBURGH, March 12.—A patent for the safe distribution of natural gas throughout the various mains has just been granted. It covers the process of mixing air with gas in such proportions that while the danger of explosion is taken away all the heating qualities still remain, the heat units being consumed in perfect combustion

Business Failures.

NEW YORK, March 12.—The business failures during the last seven days number for the United States 214 and for Canada 25, a total of 239, against 246 last week and 248 the week previous. Failures are on the decline in every section of the country, especially in the Eastern and Middle States.

General Crook and Geronimo.

EL PASO, TEXAS, March 12.—Reliable reports received here from Southern Arizona deny the statements widely published and telegraphed North to the effect that General Crook and Geronimo had a pow wow near the Mexican line. There is every reason for believing Crook has not met Geronimo, as the local papers from that part of Arizona state very positively that Crook and Geronimo have not come together.

Fire Marshal Killed.

NEW YORK, March 12.—Battalion Chief Francis Mahedy, who was killed to-day by the collision of his wagon with an engine while on his way to a fire, was forty-seven years old, and had been a member of the fire department for twenty-seven years.

WAR'S ALARMS.

Lively Night for the Militia at Greenwood Mines.

GREENWOOD, KY., March 14.—Last night, at 12 o'clock, a rumble and roar, and then a loud explosion and violent concussion, shook the earth around and about the tents of the watchful soldiers. The drum beat to arms, and as soon as possible the company were in line and on the alert. Every eye was turned toward the spot from which the deafening sound came. A brilliant blaze lighted up the hill behind the tents. No word was spoken save the whispered commands of Captain Veach, to be on the lookout and fire low. After standing at the barricade for a few minutes no further demonstrations were made, and the company again returned to the camp. This morning after breakfast a squad of men were detailed to search the surrounding hills and find the cause of the explosion. On the top of the second hill, in the rear of the camp, they found a quart bottle filled with giant or blasting powder, primed and fused with a miner's fuse. On the ground near was found another fuse, which exploded a similar bottle, and pieces of glass were found scattered over a space of twenty or more feet. Captain Veach has the bomb now in his possession, and it will now remain with the company as a trophy. The purpose of the attack on McKeever is now thought to be plain. It was the purpose of those who attacked him to stun and then throw these bombs into the stockade, and thus do all the damage necessary for the convicts to escape, and at the same time destroy the building.

A NEW TELEPHONE

That Transmits Speech from New York to Washington.

WASHINGTON, March 14.—A very successful experimental test of a new telephone, the invention of G. C. Turnbull, of Baltimore, was made here to-day over a wire extending from Washington to New York, a distance of 240 miles. Conversation was carried on throughout the day without difficulty, and with results showing that the human voice could be transmitted over this long distance louder and more distinctly than it ordinarily is over the short city circuits of other telephones. Mr. Turnbull claims for his invention, which was only patented last month, an improved method of making the carbon contact in the telephone transmitter, as well as an improvement in the apparatus for collecting the sound waves at the receiving end of the line.

DOWN AT SEA.

Steamship Oregon Struck by a Schooner, Sinking in Eight Hours After the Collision.

NEW YORK, March 14.—The Cunard steamship Oregon, nearing New York, was run into by a schooner, this morning, and her side crushed. She sank eight hours afterwards. Her passengers and crew, numbering 846 people, were safely landed. The passengers lost their baggage and only a portion of the mail was rescued. The Oregon was the finest vessel ever put afloat in the history of the world, and the fastest. She is the third Cunarder lost, but the company still holds its noble record of never losing a passenger, and that of never losing a mail-bag is only now broken.

Conscience Money.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 13.—Last December Postmaster-General Vilas received a letter postmarked Cheyenne City, Neb., and signed "From a Christian," in which the writer confessed that in 1864, while in the post-office at Peru, Neb., "the devil tempted" him to steal a letter containing $40. He also confessed that he had about the same year abstracted $100 from a letter sent by a soldier in Nebraska to his wife. He inclosed $145 by way of reparation for the crime. Since the receipt of the letter the postal authorities have succeeded in finding Enoch Riggles, of Plum Hollow, Iowa, the rightful owner of the $40, stolen more than twenty years ago, and the money has been sent to him. The authorities have as yet found no clew to the soldier whose $100 was stolen.

Edison Beaten in His Latest Patent.

WASHINGTON, March 13.—The Post says Mr. Thomas A. Edison has filed an application for a patent for his invention of telegraphing from a moving train. Last October Lucius J. Phelps, of New York, obtained quietly from the Patent office, and without any newspaper notoriety, a patent for telegraphing from a train by induction. His method is not quite the same as Mr. Edison's, for the latter telegraphs from the roof of the car to wires upon a pole, while Mr. Phelps proposes to lay a wire along the track between two rails, and telegraph from the bottom of the car. The principle, however, is the same, and is broadly covered by Mr. Phelps.

Burned to a Crisp.

HIGHLAND, ILL., March 14.—Yesterday morning about eight o'clock Albert T. Miller's little boy met with an accident which proved fatal this afternoon at four. The parents had left the little fellow in bed, and in some way, while they were in another apartment, the boy got hold of some matches which were lying on the wash-stand near the bed. The matches became ignited and the bed caught fire. When the distracted parents discovered what had occurred the little boy's limbs were burned to a crisp. The upper part of his body was also very badly burned.

Heavy Train Robbery.

CHICAGO, March 14.—Masked robbers on a Rock Island and Pacific west-bound express, while the train was between Joliet and Morris, Ill., secured admission to the express car, where, after a frightful struggle with the messenger, the latter was overpowered and murdered, and the car robbed of about $25,000. This work is supposed to have been done by some convicts lately released from the Joliet penitentiary, who boarded the train at that point.

A Sad Occurrence.

ST. PAUL, MINN., March 14.—Mrs. Nellie Hickox, of Niles, Mich., came here two days ago in search of her husband, who had deserted her. Yesterday she saw him on the street and beckoned to him. He started to run from her, and she dropped dead. She was married to Hickox one year ago, and was worth $10,000. He gambled it all away, and then deserted her. The woman was highly connected.

No Model of the Bell Telephone.

WASHINGTON, March 14.—No model of the original telephone patented by Prof. Bell can be found in the Patent Office.

Saloon Robbed and Burned.

WHEELING, W. VA., March 14.—An incendiary fire in Henry Blumenberg's saloon and residence, to-night, caused damage to the extent of $3,000. Insurance in German Fire and Marine and Ætna Fire and Marine, all of Wheeling. Some costly oil paintings were destroyed. The place has been fired five times, and has been robbed regularly for a year. Valuable goods were stolen to-night before the fire.

Fatally Poisoned With Red Ink.

DETROIT, MICH., March 14.—Myron Nowland, a school boy, of New Boston, Mich., was fatally poisoned by red ink, with which he had made some letters on his hand.

England to Evacuate Egypt.

CAIRO, March 14.—Lord Roseberry, the British Foreign Secretary, has instructed Sir Henry Wolff, the British Commissioner in Egypt, to arrange for the reduction of the army of occupation by six regiments and the withdrawal of the British troops from Assouan and the Egyptian troops from Wady Halfa.

Soldiers' Bounty Decision.

WASHINGTON, March 14.—Second Comptroller Maynard has decided that volunteer soldiers who enlisted for three years prior to July 22, 1861, under the President's proclamation of May 30, 1861, and were mustered in before August 6, 1861, are entitled to the full bounty of $100.

DISASTROUS EXPLOSION.

The Toledo (O.) Linseed Oil Mills Destroyed.

Naphtha, Used in a Patent Extracting Process, Believed to Have Caused the Disaster—Loss, $140,000.

TOLEDO, O., March 15.—The mills of the Toledo Linseed Oil Company, which burned last night, were among the largest in the country. The origin of the fire is unknown, the theory of spontaneous combustion and that of incendiarism both having supporters. The building where the fire started was devoted to a new patented process for extracting the oil from the crushed seed by percolation, naphtha being the agent employed to effect this. There were over one hundred barrels of this dangerous fluid in the building, stored in iron tanks, which exploded almost simultaneously. The shock was like an earthquake. The fire department had not yet reached the scene, and but few spectators, or the loss of life would have been terrible. Frank Longmore and William Kirkman, two Lake Shore railway employes, were standing across the street from the building, and the broad sheet of flame was driven across, enveloping them, scorching off their hair and eyebrows, and burning their hands and faces till the skin hung in shreds. Their injuries, while serious, are not fatal. The night watchman of the Dayton and Michigan roundhouse was in the cab of a locomotive blowing an alarm on the whistle, and was blown out of the cab by the concussion, but received only a few bruises. Stark, the telephone boy, had his face badly cut by window glass, but is not seriously injured. Numerous minor casualities from the explosion are reported. The inflammable nature of the buildings, filled with linseed oil and flax seed, and the woodwork, saturated with oil, prevented any portion of the works being saved. The company's office was also burned. The Dayton and Michigan roadmaster's office, bunk-rooms and blacksmith shop, and several smaller auxiliary structures were all burned. Three or four cottages near by were badly scorched, as well as partly wrecked by the explosion, while the window glass in all structures within several squares suffered more or less. There were three large buildings and several smaller ones. All were destroyed totally except the boiler-house. The old process mill was valued at $60,000, its machinery at $25,000. The new process mill and machinery cost $40,000. These figures include stock of oil and seed on hand in each. The Yaryan Manufacturing Company, which owns the patent on the new process, loses $8,000 worth of machinery. The total loss on the linseed oil works, including the Yaryan Company's loss, is $130,000. Loss of others, including railroads, $10,000. The insurance on the new process mill is put at $30,000, of which the New York Mutual holds $10,000. The other buildings and machinery were insured for $50,600 in twenty-seven companies, none having over $5,000. The company will rebuild at once and continue the business.

PROBABLY A CLEW.

Cross-Examination in the Express Robbery and Murder Case Followed by a Strange Disappearance and the Absence of the Notes of the Examination.

CHICAGO, March 15.—A very important fact in connection with the investigation of the express robbery on the Rock Island and Pacific road was made public this morning. It seems that at a conference of the express and railway officials and the detectives yesterday, the baggageman, Watts, was placed under a rigid cross-examination. Mr. Wygant's secretary took full notes and went from the hotel where the conference was being held to the office to write out his notes. He did not arrive there, and after some hours search was instituted, no trace of the missing young man could be found. It is understood that under the severe cross-examination of the detectives, Watts made some valuable statements, but just what he has admitted can not be ascertained. News has reached Chicago that two men, suspected of being two of the principals in the robbery and murder, are under arrest near Joliet, Ill. The report is that on Saturday afternoon three men went to a farm-house a few miles from Joliet, and asked to obtain work. The farmer engaged the men, but thinking their actions and appearance suspicious, kept a close watch on them, and sent word to the authorities. One of the men got wind of the farmer's suspicions, and disappeared, but the other two are now under arrest. The youthful McDonald turned up to-night, in a demented condition, at a coal office in a distant part of the city. He could give no coherent account of himself, and his notes of the baggageman's statement are not to be found. There is no clew to the matter of their disappearance, or as to the cause of the stenographer's sudden distraction.

Two Fatal Explosions.

CLARION, PA., March 15.—Shortly before noon the boiler used at Hick's coal shaft on the Pittsburgh and Western railroad exploded. William Banes, engineer, and Joseph Elzener, flat trimmer, were buried in the debris. Elzener died in a short time. Banes was terribly scalded, and his skull fractured. He can not recover. At Limetown, Pa., the boiler of the pumping boat at the Hilldale Coal Works exploded this morning, fatally scalding William Farre, the engineer. The boat was badly damaged.

Earthquake Shocks.

MADRID, March 15.—The City of Granada, Capital of the Provinces of the same name, was shaken yesterday by an earthquake. The shock was of seven second's duration. The people were terrified and fled in all directions. No lives were lost.

BERLIN, March 15.—A violent shock of earthquake disturbed Weisbaden, the celebrated German watering place, at midnight last night.

The Switchmen Next.

ST. LOUIS, March 15.—A circular emanating from the East St. Louis Assembly, Knights of Labor, was served this afternoon upon the representatives of all roads centering in East St. Louis, demanding an increase of wages for switchmen, and stating that if the demand is not complied with by Thursday the men will be ordered out.

Democratic Nominations in Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE, March 15.—The Democratic State Convention to-day nominated the following gentlemen: For Governor, Amasa Sprague; for Lieutenant-Governor, Thomas P. Robinson; for Secretary of State, Franklin P. Owen; for Attorney-General, Edwin Metcalf; for State Treasurer, John J. Parry.

—He was a little unused to the language of religious circles, but he had taken a fancy to the minister of the church whose services he had lately begun to attend, and had invited him and his young wife to tea. As they passed into the tea room and surrounded the festive board, he remembered to have heard that some sort of service was often performed at such a time, but was a little uncertain by what name it was usually called; yet, plunging boldly in, he emerged with: "Mr. Parson, will you pronounce the benediction?"—N. Y. Independent.

—A loving New England couple dyed for one another a few days ago. The man was frosted with the snows of seventy years, while she who was to be his blushing bride had the raven locks of forty. He dyed his hair black, thinking to please her, and she, ignorant of his noble sacrifice, bleached her hair white to please him. There was a strange far-offurss when they next met.—Boston Transcript.

—Mrs Grundy, of the New York Mail, says it is not considered at all objectionable now to buy one's way into society.

THE MIKADO IN PRISON.

Prisoners in the Michigan Penitentiary Enjoy a Rich Operatic Treat.

JACKSON, MICH., March 11.—The chapel of the Michigan State prison was transformed into a theater this afternoon. Five hundred convicts marched into the seats. Warden F. H. Hatch said: "Manager Geo. O. Starr, whose company is here, invites you to see the 'Mikado.' It is proper to go to opera in carriages. Knowing you would not like the expense, Mr. Starr brought his company here, scenery, costumes, etc. It is against rules, but on this occasion you can talk and applaud. This is a temperance town, therefore you will be saved the trouble of going out to see a man." Signor Carlo Tarriani, the director, took his position, the curtain rose, and the "Mikado" was given with a vim. The cast was: Ko-ko, Frank Deslion; Mikado, Charles Osborne; Nanki Poo, Eugene Harvey; Pooh Bah, J. McSweeney; Pish Tush, Will Nichols; Yum Yum, May Duryea; Pitti Sing, May Douglass; Peep Boo, Madame Zazel; Katisha, Grace Atherton. When Frank Deslion appeared, singing, "Taken from a County Jail," a look of surprise was followed by applause. As Gilbert's satire upon justice developed, the convicts grasped each point, applauding vigorously. A programme was furnished all. Starr's Opera Company are the first known to give an entire opera complete in scenic effects inside a prison wall. This innovation upon prison discipline, while upheld by advocates of reform management, will create opposition for those in charge. One convict, when asked if he enjoyed the performance, replied: "I more than enjoyed it, for it's the first sunshine of the kind I have seen in seventeen years."

CATTLE LAND SYNDICATE.

Eight Hundred Thousand Acres of the Texas Capitol Lands Already Inclosed.

AUSTIN, TEX., March 11.—Colonel Abner Taylor, of the Chicago syndicate and Capitol contractor, who is here, has made some interesting statements concerning the Capitol lands in the Pan Handle of Texas. He says that the syndicate now has enclosed with wire fence 800,000 acres of these lands all lying north of the Canadian river, and during the coming year will inclose the entire 3,000,000 acres given for the erection of the State Capitol. The syndicate now has upon its inclosed lands 20,000 head of cattle, and during the coming year will increase the number largely. They are spending $40,000 per month improving lands and are having flowing wells six miles apart placed upon what is known as the dry lands.

OIL EXCITEMENT.

A Gusher Struck in Washington County, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, March 11.—Intelligence from Washington County, Pa., to-night indicates that the Pew & Emerson well, struck to-day, is a gusher and good for one thousand to fifteen hundred barrels of oil per day. Heretofore the wells in that district have been small. It is stated that the oil strata was found at a depth of fifteen hundred feet. This shows a new oil horizon never before thought of by experts or scientists who explored in that section, and should it prove prolific, as it promises to do, will lessen materially the expense of drilling. There is great excitement throughout Washington County.

Uniformity of Language Necessary.

VIENNA, March 11.—Count Bylandt-Rheydt, Imperial Minister of War, has issued instructions to all the commanders of corps in the Austro-Hungarian army to order the enforcement of the study of German among all the troops. The Count complains that the use of local dialects among the soldiers has greatly increased of late. The Czechs meanwhile are steadfast in adhering to their own language. They demand that the words of command in the Landsturm shall be given to the Czech troops in their own tongue.

The Value of School Drill.

BRADFORD, PA., March 11.—The value of school drill was demonstrated to-day when a fire broke out in a big wooden building used as a public school and crowded on two floors with over three hundred children. The teacher ordered the little ones to form in line for a march and quietly moved the columns through the fatal doors while smoke was pouring from the roof. No sooner were all safely out than the fire burst forth in many places, and in a short time the building was in ruins, involving a loss of $11,000, covered by insurance.

Powder Explosion With Two Fatalies.

PORTLAND, ME., March 11.—The two great powder mills of the Gambo Powder Company, eleven miles from here, blew up this afternoon. There was a large stock of material on hand, and the explosion was terrific. Clarence Clary, of Gorham, was killed, and Henry Hooper was terribly mangled, and can not survive. The loss will be heavy. Two years ago the mills which stood on the same place blew up, killing three men.
